(The Port of Hull, bombed on numerous occasions during the first Great War, apparently was the objective of the Germans in the Humber raids. The city, with a population of about 350,000, is an important fishing centre as well as a port for overseas trade.)

Rome, May 9 (AP).—Roland Ian Campbell, British Minister to Yugoslavia, and the legation and consular staffs with their families, who were detained by the Italians in Albania late in April, arrived here from Durazzo today. They will join earlier arrivals to await arrangements for their repatriation.

PIERRE MENDES-FRANCE ON TRIAL IN FRANCE

Vichy, France, May 9 (AP). — Pierre Mendes-France, third of four French notables with military commissions among those arrested for trying to move the government to North Africa last June, appeared for trial today before a military tribunal at Clermont-Ferrand. He was indicted on charges of desertion in wartime and is liable to the maximum penalty: ten years imprisonment, confiscation of his property and loss of civil rights.

Russia Ceases To Recognize Yugoslavia, Belgium, Norway As Sovereign States

Moscow, May 9 (AP). — Soviet Russia withdrew recognition today from Yugoslavia, Belgium and Norway as sovereign states—an action interpreted in diplomatic quarters as indicating a new understanding with Germany.

(This dispatch was relayed by telephone to Berlin and the connection was broken at the end of the reference to Germany.)

Action Interpreted.

Diplomatic sources believed that Joseph Stalin, who only this week asumed the premiership, was pendsonally settling differences with Germany over Nazi penetration into the Balkans, in order to maintain the Soviet policy of keeping out of the war.

Today's press reflected this trend, prominently displaying reports of an Axis air raid on the Suez Canal and David Lloyd George's abstention from the British House of Commons vote of confidence in the Churchill government.

(Earlier dispatches received today from Moscow said the foreign commissariat had informed Yugoslav Minister Milan Gavrilovic that his powers as envoy had, in the Soviet view, lost their validity, and that the Norwegian legation had been given a similar notification.

Stalin As Premier.

(Joseph Stalin assumed the premiership of Russia Tuesday, displacing Vyacheslav molotov in that post. Molotov now is continuing in the post of foreign commissar and is vice-premier as well.

(Russia declared officially yesterday, in reaction to foreign reports, that she has not and does not intend to concentrate troops on her western frontiers, facing German-dominated territory.)

It was the Yugoslav minister, Milan Gavrilovic, who April 5 signed with Molotov a Russian-Yugoslav treaty of friendship and non-aggression. Yugoslavia was invaded the next day and has been conquered by Germany.

Norway was invaded April 9, 1940, and Belgium a year ago tomorrow.

March Coup d'Etat.

After the coup d'etat in which a pro-axis Yugoslav government was overthrown late in March, the Communist party organ Pravda said the Moscow government had not sent congratulations to Belgrade on the repudiation of the pro-axis regime, but that "a people worthy of their glorious past deserve congratulations and if such congratulations had occurred there would be nothing unusual."

A few days later the Russian-Yugoslav treaty was being hailed in some quarters abroad as "most encouraging news and a fresh sign of Russia's interest in checking German domination in the Balkans."

Anglican Church In Canada Relieves Church in England

Toronto, May 9 (CP)— Canon L. A. Dixon, general secretary of the Missionary Society of the Church of England in Canada, told the Toronto Diocese Annual Synod yesterday that the decision of the Anglican Church in Canada to relieve missionary societies in England of contributing grants to Canadian Missions, was a patriotic gesture.

He said it was "an expression of gratitude and loyalty and a desire of the Church here to help the Church in England."

Rev. Francis Tseng, of the Diocese of Honan, China, said that in spite of many difficulties education in that country is continuing. "Students and teachers are meeting everywhere. Sometimes they have no books. Laboratories are set up in odd rooms and in cellars, but education goes on," he added.

Court Jeweler For Many Years

Seattle, May 9 (AP)—Friends said last night that John Sellar, 76-year old widower who died yesterday, in the Stewart Hotel fire, was for many years the court jeweler in London. They said he served many of the crowned heads of Europe as a jeweler and watchmaker.

MANUFACTURERS MUST REDUCE OUTPUT OF CARS

Order Does Not Apply to Trucks or Commercial Vehicles

QUOTAS SET

Ottawa, May 9—(CP)—Under an order announced today by John H. Berry, Motor Vehicle Controller of the Department of Munitions and Supply, Canadian motor manufacturers must reduce substantially their output of passenger automobiles during the production period from April 1 to Dec. 31, 1941, as compared to their production during the same period in 1940.

The order does not cover trucks or commercial vehicles.

Control of output and the number of automobiles that may be sold during 1941 is based upon the foreign currency requirements of each particular model. While the total foreign currency requirements of each manufacturer will be reduced by 20 per cent, the number of automobiles that may be built in Canada will not necessarily be reduced by a similar amount as the manufacturer may choose to produce "economy" cars which have individually a low foreign currency content.

'Except For Sending Troops, U. S. Already In War', Says Captain Roosevelt

Cairo, May 9 (AP)—Capt. James Roosevelt, here as an observer for the United States Marine Corps, expressed the opinion today that the United States, "except for sending troops, already is in the war."

The President's eldest son made the statement in response to a question whether he thought the United States could best aid Britain by entering the war or staying out of it longer.

CZECH SAYS HE MEANS 'CONVOYED BY DELIVERY'

New York, May 9 (AP)—Emanuel Jan Hajny, a Czecho-Slovak Consul, says he hopes two ambulances purchased by Czechs in the United States will reach Britain "C.O.D." "And I don't mean cash on delivery" he adds, "but convoyed on delivery."

RASHID ALI FLEES IRAQ IN FACE OF PUBLIC WRATH

Report Comes At Same Time As Roosevelt's Son Arrives At Basra

DISPUTE 'DEEP-SEATED'

Cairo, May 9 (AP).—The Royal Air Force announced tonight it had "probably completed the destruction of the Iraq air force" by two bombing attacks yesterday on Kakuba and Shahaban landing fields near Baghdad.

At the same time a general headquarters communique announced remnants of the dissident elements of the Iraq army which a week ago attacked the R.A.F.'s Habbaniyah airdrome, 60 miles west of Baghdad, have withdrawn to Ramadi and Falluja.

Cairo, May 9 —(CP)— Unconfirmed reports published in the Egyptian press said today that Rashid Ali Al Gailani had fled Iraq in the face of popular demonstrations against his coup d'etat Axis-favoring government which now is in the throes of hostilities with British forces sent to guard the Mosul-Haifa oil pipeline.

Reports of Rashid Ali's flight arrived almost at the same time as Capt. James Roosevelt, son of the United States President, who said after an overnight stop at Basra, Persian Gulf Iraq port, that the dispute between Britain and Iraq is "deep-seated and is not likely to be cleaned up within a few days."

The President's son, war observer for the United States Marine Corps added, however, that "the British seem to have the situation well in hand." He did not elaborate his remarks about the trouble being "deep seated."

Captain Roosevelt, who caught his first glimpse of war in the Middle East as shots echoed in the streets of Basra during his stay there, said last night in an interview that German airmen were reported to be flying American-made planes as part of the Iraq air force in the fight against Britain.

Evacuate Children From Humber Area

London, May 9 (CP Cable)—Children were being evacuated from the Humber area today after a second night of massed bombing which caused heavy casualties.

It was also necessary to put into effect a compulsory billeting scheme to deal with the homeless.

Fires and bombs caused extensive property damage. A seaman's hostel was destroyed and poor-houses seriously damaged.

A number of persons were made homeless in a village in Eastern England but casualties were small because the houses were built of stone.

Residential working-class areas were hard hit in the North Midlands.

A low-flying raider dropped bombs which trapped eight persons in debris in South England.

CAPT. BASIL ELECTED

Birmingham, May 9—(CP)—Dr. Alfred Lumsden Smith, who ran for a seat in the House of Commons on a "Bomb Berlin" platform came out a poor second today.

He garnered but 1,696 votes in a by-election while Capt. Basil Peto, Conservative condidate, polled 21,573. Stuard Morris, Independent Pacifist candidate, received 1,552 votes.

The by-election resulted from the death in action of Maj. J. R. H. Cartland, Conservative, who in 1935 polled 24,559 votes to 18,684 for his Labor opponent.

Hundreds Of Tons Bombs Dumped On Bremen and Emden

Bombers Press Home Attack With Decisive Results—11 Planes Lost

400 PLANES USED

London, May 9 (CP)—The largest Royal Air Force bombing armada ever assembled for a single night's raid dumped "tens of thousands" of incendiaries and "hundreds of tons" of high explosives on Hamburg and Bremen in the night, the Air Ministry announced today.

Although the figure on the number of raiding planes was withheld, British sources speculated that the Air Ministry's superlative reference meant that at least 300 to 400 planes were used.

The fiery, blasting assault on the two centres of the enemy's naval construction and maritime industry was but part of the R.A.F.'s general sweep, which included attacks on Berlin and Emden as well as other targets in northwestern Germany, coastal shipping and the U-boat base at St. Nazaire, France. These were called "subsidiary attacks."

(The Germans, acknowledging assault by "strong British forces," said the raiders reached as far as Posen, in German-occupied Poland. The R.A.F. thus completely crossed Germany.)

Reflection of Growing Strength

This assault was taken by observers as a reflection of the growing strength of Britain's air might, augmented by an increased flow of bombing craft from the United States.

THREE CHILDREN BURNED TO DEATH

Port Arthur May 9—(CP)—Ontario Provincial Police here were advised today that three children were burned to death yesterday when flames destroyed their home at Red Lake, northwestern Ontario mining town.

Nazi Night Raiders Found Camouflaged With Black Substance

London, May 9—(CP)—German night raiders shot down recently have been found to be camouflaged with a black substance which obliterated even the familiar swastikas and black crosses, the Evening News reported today.

The newspaper said the substance appeared to be a mixture of soot and oil which from a distance gives the plane a "greyish color that could easily merge into patches of cloud or shadow in the night sky, even in the strongest moonlight."

Italian M-C Company Captured As British Forces Gain Ground

London, May 9 (CP).—British East African forces captured an Italian machine-gun company of a grenadier division and occupied some high ground around Amba Alaji, an informed source reported today.

He estimated that from 30,000 to 33,000 Italians still were resisting in Ethiopia.

Around Tobruk, in North Africa, he continued, activity was confined to air raids, neither side attempting to attack on the ground.

MINISTER SAYS DEVIL TO LOSE

Rev. Dan McIvor Tells House 'God is on Our Side'

Ottawa, May 9 (CP)—Rev. Dan McIvor (Lib. Fort William) told the House of Commons yesterday that when he thinks of the leaders of the British and Canadian people "I know that we are on the right side, that we are bound to win, because the devil is going to lose in this battle."

Mr. McIvor, a United Church minister, said he was often asked: "How do we know that God is on our side?"

He said his reply is: "It is not whether we know that God is on our side but whether we know we are on His side; and we know, by the way we think and act, whether or not we are on His side.

"To me the only thing that is going to count after we win this war will be a life that is surrendered to the Prince of Peace; and when we have that we will have a social order that will have no backfire."

Japan Admits Army Can't Catch The Chinese

Shanghai, May 9 (AP)—Lt.-Col. Junio Akiyama, official spokesman for Japan's military forces in China, asserted today the Japanese army "can't catch the Chinese."

"This continental arena is too large," he said. "It is difficult for us to run around it."

He made his statements in commenting on an editorial in the Japan Times and Advertiser, Tokyo newspaper controlled by the Japanese Foreign Office, which said Japan was unable to conquer China by force and therefore should seek peace.

"If the Chinese ever assume the offensive," Col. Akiyama said, "we are confident we will be able to trap and annihilate them."

PATROL STREETS WITH MOTORCYCLE

As a sequel to the warnings issued by police regarding speeding on city streets, Edward Fraser, Point Anne, was fined $5.00 and costs in Magistrate E J. Butler's city police court today.

"Traffic Officer Doug Ellis began patrolling the city streets with the police department motorcycle this week and all persons apprehended in violation of city traffic bylaws may expect no consideration from the court," warned Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, K.C., today after Chief Kidd had acquainted the court with the fact that motorists had been warned to refrain from speeding and failing to stop at designated stop streets.

The only other cases of public interest saw three local men appear on charges of intoxication and following pleas of guilty, the conventional fine of "ten and costs" was imposed and paid.

Three protocols affixed to the treaty also were signed by representatives of the two former foes, at ceremonies in which French Ambassador Charles Henry, former Minister to Canada, described Foreign Minister Yosuke Matsuoka as a "peace-maker."

One article of the treaty specified that "if any dispute arises in the future concerning this treaty it shall be submitted to Japan's mediation."

MOTOR CYCLIST SEVERELY HURT

Sustains Broken Wrist and Deep Lacerations on Face When Machine Crashes Into Door

While attempting to ride a motorcycle on what citizens today refer to as 'Riverside Drive', along the east banks of the Moira River, 23-year-old William Parm, of Cannifton, sustained a broken wrist and badly lacerated chin, when the motor bike went out of control and crashed into the rear admitting door leading into Loblaw's store. Young Parm was rendered unconscious as the result of the crash and later revived and was afforded medical attention at the surgery of Dr. W. C. Morgan.

The accident occurred during the noon hour period on Wednesday, when Parm attempted to ride a motorcycle owned by Ronald Arnott, Belleville. Parm was making good progress riding the cycle along the alleyway at the rear of the west side Front Street stores, when suddenly he was unable to halt the machine with the result it crashed into the rear of the Loblaw store. The door was shattered and Parm sustained a severe five-inch laceration along his chin as the result of being cut by glass from the door. Parm later assured George Fordyce, manager of the store, he would make restitution insofar as the damaged door was concerned, police were informed. The motorcycle was badly damaged, while Ross Row, Belleville, a pillion rider, escaped without injury.

Rome Communique

Rome, May 9—(AP)—The Italian High Command today claimed torpedo and bomb hits on two British battleships, an aircraft carrier, two cruisers, a destroyer and three merchant ships and destruction of 16 British planes.

The daily war bulletin asserted the fighting started when a British convoy was sighted yesterday in the western Mediterranean and continued into the night with Fascist planes scoring repeated hits with bombs and torpedoes on the British vessels. It did not claim that any of the ships were sunk.

(No British Admiralty communique on this reported brush appeared to be expected immediately. British accounts of Mediterranean naval engagements usually run a day or two behind the Italian communiques. When they are finally issued the Italian victories in most cases turn out to have been defeats.)

Prices Of Imported Wines To Increase

Ottawa, May 9 — (CP) — Sharp increases in tariff rates on imported wines are provided in resolution for amendment of the Customs Tariff Amendment Act entered on the order paper of the Commons today by Finance Minister Ilsley.

Rate of additional customs duties on wines of all kinds, except sparkling wines, containing not more than 40 per cent of proof spirit, is raised to 33½ cents a gallon from 7½ cents. For champagne and all other sparkling wines, the new rate will be $1.25 a gallon compared with 75 cents a gallon previously.

The resolution provides that enactment based on the resolution will be deemed to have come into force on April 30 and to apply to wines imported or taken out of a warehouse for consumption on or after. In his budget address, Mr. Ilsley announced increases in the excise tax on non-sparkling wines from 15 to 40 cents a gallon and on sparkling wines from $1.50 to $2. These excise duties will apply on native wines.

THE BRITISH SPIRIT

Blitzing by the Nazis has improved the morale of the British people rather than impaired it, the Prime Minister of the Commonwealth of Australia stated on his brief visit to Ottawa. In this he paid a tribute to the British when he said, "Nothing has been written about the spirit of the British people that exaggerates it. I do not think anybody can really do justice to it. And while it is true of everybody it is particularly true of the women."

As he says "the British are really a most amazing people." Of course he explained that he was speaking in long terms for it is no fun to go through a blitz. People, he said, are jaded and tired, their nerves knocked about after a blitz, "but come back a week later and you will not see any ill-effects at all, except the result of bombings on the buildings."

It is the spirit that is triumphant over the blitz.

And then "the effective damage to war industry due to the bombing is surprisingly small."

Mr. Menzies has been in the Mediterranean area and visited the Australian troops, has seen the British people under fire and, after visiting Canada, goes to the United States to meet the President.

He, as a representative of one of the British Dominions, has seen the courage of the British people in action.

'NAPOLEON'S EMPIRE FLASHED AWAY'

Hitler's gains are not to be compared with those of Napoleon, Prime Minister Churchill made that clear the other day. He said:

"It must be remembered that Napoleon's armies carried with them fierce, liberating equalitarian winds of the French revolution, whereas Hitler's empire has nothing behind it but racial self-assertion, espionage, pillage, corruption an dthe Prussian boot."

In these brief words the British leader contrasts the conquests of Napoleon and Hitler. Yet even Napoleon's empire fell. In Mr. Churchill's words it "flashed away."

In his description Mr. Churchill refers in concrete language to Napoleon's armies carrying with them "fierce liberating equalitarian winds of the French revolution," a unique image which describes something of the influence of the revoultion which produced the Napoleonic era.

But Hitler's armies are not exalted by any "liberating winds," they carry only chains or in Mr. Churchill's words, "Hitler's empire has nothing behind it but racial self-assertion, espionage, pillage corruption and the Prussian boot."

When Mr. Churchill looked at the fall of the empire of Napoleon, it is no wonder he remarked, "So I derive confidence that the will-power of the British nation, expressing itself through a stern, steadfast, unyielding House of Commons, will once again perform its liberating functions and humbly execute high purposes among men."

As the Prime Minister said at another point in his address, "the German army and people have become and are becoming more universally hated among people of all lands than any enemy or any race of which history bears record." That is a clear enough statement that shows the weakness of the position of Hitler and the Germans from the standpoint of the races subjugated and those that are free.

DESERT WARFARE

Desert warfare is different from other warfare, Prime Minister Churchill pointed out in his speech, giving the House of Commons a cleaer view of what war in the desert means. This type of war can only be conducted by comparatively small numbers of highly equipped troops, he said. "Here the fortunes of war are severe and mere numbers do not count. On the contrary employment of large numbers in the desert may only lead to disaster on a larger scale. That is what happened to the Italians . . . They did not possess command of the sea, they were beaten in the air and no course was open to them but to be pinned against the sea and destroyed."

Mr. Churchill pointed out that since the Italian power has been collapsing in East Africa there has been a steady increase in concentration northwards of British and South African forces."

OURSELVES AND OTHERS...

BY

Meet Billy Frodsham.

Fair-haired, blue-eyed Bill, with just a hint of freckles on a face that glows with the ruddiness of the English schoolboy, sat at his desk yesterday in a class-room in Queen Alexander School, when a newspaperman walked in. Outside his schoolmates were playing softball and other games, but Bill complacently awaited his appointment, immersed in a book called "Honey-Bunch."

"Pretty heavy stuff for a youngster," commented the scribe.

Bill flashed white teeth in a big smile. "Not at all bad, y'know," he said in a soft voice that was well-flavored with the famous Lancashire dialect.

The husky young Britisher came to Canada last year, leaving England on August 7th and arriving here on August 31st. He is at present the guests of relatives, Mr. and Mrs. A. Lacey, of Campbell Street. He has a sister, Kathleen, 18, at present attending Manchester University, and, who Bill says, is exceptionally clever. "She has won all sorts of scholarships and such things, y'know," he smiled. His father lives in St. Helen's, Lancs, where the head of the house is employed in the Pilkington Glass Works. At night he is a fire-spotter and patrols a beat in search of fires.

A typical British boy, Bill is exceedingly fond of sports. He defended England's famous cricket when his guest compared it not at all favorably with Canadian baseball. "I say, the ball is a lot harder than your baseball," was his comment. He likes rugby fooball, or "rugger" as it is commonly known in the Old Country. He played stand-off quarter on the school team in St. Helens.

He keenly anticipates a swim in the waters of a lake, bay or river. He is a keen swimming enthusiast but his natatorial activities in England were confined to the public baths.

What struck Bill most when he viewed Canada for the first time was the great open spaces. He was puzzled at first at the distance between houses in the cities, while the country had him wide-eyed." "In St. Helens," he said, "and in England in general, the houses are much closer together."

Another thing that was out of the ordinary here in Canadian centres was the fact that nearly every home had a private telephone. "Only the shops and public telephone booths in England have them," he said. "One very rarely sees practically every home with a telephone."

Bill commented upon the fact that Canadians are very lax in mentioning the names of ships, sailing dates, troops and what not. "I can't tell you the name of the boat I came over on—but then—everyone here seems to talk about them. Over in England we are not allowed to mention anything much pertaining to the war. The authorities won't permit it. But here everyone talks about it," he smiled.

And the fact that new wartime regulations do not permit of Bill's parents sending him money from England has not daunted the cheery youngster one iota. He does not need actual pocket money so much, but he realizes, as all British children do, that the Empire needs money to win the war. So Bill's spare time is spent in canvassing the neighborhood for old papers and magazines which he sells for cash. And the cash made in these ventures is used for the purchase of Canadian War Savings Stamps. Todate Bill is the proud possessor of ten stamps and expects to have many more in the near future if the supply of old papers is available.

And it wasn't because of Mr. Harold Mott, Bill's present teacher, was hovering in the background that caused Bill to remark that he liked Canadian teachers better than those he came in contact with in England. In fact when asked the question, Bill compromised by saying he liked the Canadians better than the last English teachers. "They just weren't sports," he grinned. "They were too cross with us." And the wise youngster that Bill is, he maintained a smiling silence when asked his opinion of his present teacher.

"Canada is a fine place to live in, but I think I would like to move around a bit," he said. He is going to be an R.A.F. pilot when he grows up.

GRANDPA COUNSEL

Little fellow, growing up; wonder what you'll have to do?
What the years which lie ahead hold in store for boys like you?
This is such a changing world; as you clamber on my knee,
This I wonder many a time: what your task is going to be?

Little Master, half-past two, five and twenty years away
Men will have a place for you. At some post they'll bid you stay,
Wonder what that post will be, when you've raced your boyhood through?
Just what skill you will require for the work you'll have to do?

Little fellow, here and now let your grandpa, oh so fond!
Leave a note for you to read when he's gone to what's beyond.
For whatever lies ahead, which I won't be here to see,
Brave and willing for the task, blithe of heart and cheerful be.

There are things I cannot know, but no matter what may fall,
To your given word be true, you shall triumph over all.
Just be gracious and be kind; unto merit trust your fate,
Then go forward unafraid to whatever tasks await.

Col. Stimson Talks The Truth

New York, May 9 — Secretary Stimson's speech Tuesday night was a simple, straightforward, almost dry statement of the position of the United States in the world today. Its eloquence derived from its contents, not from any excess of rhetoric. It was a statement that is long overdue. And it is quite unanswerable. It leads to an inevitable conclusion—namely, that we must start right now to participate in the Battle of the Atlantic with the intention of winning.

* * *

Now is not too early. It is already late—but not too late. Every day makes it later not earlier.

The manner of that participation is a matter to be determined by the Government, by those whose business it is to determine the disposition of our naval forces, in view of the composition of those forces and of interior knowledge of the whole situation. It is the business of the people and of Congress to recognize the reality of the threat in the Atlantic and to give the Government power to deal with it.

Colonel Stimson devoted the first part of his speech to a lucid account of the step by step developments of the last seven years, beginning with the building up in secret of the immense military machine of Germany; the successive conquests which are now known to all; the creation of a mutual aggression pact among Germany, the Mediterranean power of Italy and the Pacific power of Japan; the abrogation fist of all law, as we understand the term law, inside the aggressor countries, followed by the abrogation of all international law in the interest of total war; the inevitable drawing into the conflict of Europe, Asia and Africa, and the unfolding struggle which will be decisive, for the seaways of the planet.

The struggle involves the United States, which is the greatest oceanic power on the earth. It immediately involves the United States and the Western Hemisphere, when the western outposts in the Atlantic are threatened — namely the British Isles, and the French and Portuguese possessions of Dakar, the Azores and the Cape Verde Islands.

Colonel Stimson said: "They (the Axis powers) now confront the world, including ourselves, with the alternative of abject surrender or uncompromising forceful resistance." And he adds, "I cannot recall that the United States throughout its history—even when it was small and weak—has yielded to such a demand."

* * *

Colonel Stimson rightly admits that "all this might have been prevented in many an unwary sentinel of liberty had not been caught napping at vital moments." This is true. The cost of those naps is prodigious, but it constitutes no reason for taking another one.

Colonel Stimson is, however, convinced that in alliance with the British navy we can render secure all the oceans and thus hold in check the onward rush of the tide of Nazism while our factories build up the defence forces of Britain. He points out that the unrestricted submarine warfare of Germany is not a legal blockade under the rules of marine warfare.

This, of course, is correct. The German Government has the right in international law to stop and search ships carrying contraband. It has no right to sink them without warning. Neither do we in international law have the right to convoy ships. But if we attempt to observe the rules of international law in a world where our enemies denounced them from the beginning, we will be defeated. We will suffer the most abject defeat ever endured by a great nation and suffer it without going to war to defend our rights and our position in the world.

In the world as it is today America cannot act as she pleases. That is the weakness of the arguments of the non-interventionists. They seem to think that what is going on is a race between the Government and the American people. What actually is going on is a race between the Government and the Axis.

If the Axis gets to Dakar, the Azores and the Cape Verde Islands first we, all of us, interventionists and non-interventionists alike, have lost the greatest American naval battle in history. If we let Britain fall, we—interventionists and non-interventionists alike—have lost a world war and can only sit at a peace table as just another defeated nation.

The first great British defeat was at Munich. No blood was spilt but it was a military disaster of the first order.

* * *

Actually and from the beginning of this conflict, there have only been three choices for the United States. They were as follows: 1—Join the forces opposed to the Axis. 2—Join the Axis, and decide with them to get a cut in the division of the other free peoples of the world. 3—Sit and wait, and be completely surrounded by a world-wide, hostile combination.

If we had done the first at the outset, or better still, before the outset, the world would have been spared much agony.

and would mean a revolution in

The second would have meant the United States.

The third would have been and would be blindness and impotence.

If we let Britain down now, the eventual results will be an alliance of all the rest of the world against us, including a Nazi-dominated British Empire.

* * *

The situation is complicated, has been complicated from the beginning, by the fear of political leaders to tell the American people the truth, particularly in the middle of an election campaign. The only promise that any political leader should have made to the American people was to portect the honor, security and power of the United States without war if possible, with war, if necessary.

A TRIBUTE TO MOTHER
by Arthur L. Burke

There is a name we all revere,
And honor as no other,
A name that keeps the sunshine near,
The sacred name of Mother.

From helpless babe, to manhood strong,
Her endless mission filling,
Teaching the right, eschewing wrong,
The plan divine instilling.

Exquisite love, unfailing, true,
No force can break apart,
A love that will a lifetime through
Be cradled in the heart.

A love that will our hopes renew,
That will our lives refine,
A love that holds and leads us to The Architect Divine.

Then let us honor and revere
And cherish as no other,
A name we treasure and hold dear,
The sacred name of Mother.

You'd Be Surprised!

LAFAYETTE'S CITIZENSHIP

It is often erroneously stated that the Congress of the United States granted honorary citizenship to Lafayette and his descendants.

When Count Rene de Chambrun became assistant military attache to the French embassy in Washington last year, the assertion was widely published that he was an honorary American citizen by virtue of his being a direct descendant of Lafayette.

A popular writer recently declared that all male descendants of Lafayette are United States citizens no matter where born.

These statements are not true and are based on a false premise.

Congress never conferred citizenship of any kind on Lafayette.

In 1784 the legislature of Maryland did declare Lafayette and his male heirs forever "natural born citizens of this state."

When the Federal Constitution was adopted in 1789 all citizens of Maryland, including Lafayette and his male descendants, presumably became citizens of the United States.

But on March 26, 1790, an act of Congress was approved which provided:

"The children of citizens of the United States, that may be born beyond sea, or out of the limits of the United States, shall be considered as natural born citizens: provided, That the right of citizenship shall not descend to persons whose fathers have never been resident in the United States."

This latter provision, which is still in force in slightly different language, prevents the perpetuation of a line of foreign-born citizens.

The present law provides specifically that the rights of citizeznship shall not descend to any child born out of the limits and jurisdiction of the United States whose father or mother or both at the time of the birth of such child is a citizen of the United States, unless the citizen father or citizen mother, as the case may be, has resided in the United States previous to the birth of such child.

It is further provided that in cases where one of the parents is an alien, the right of citizenship shall not descend unless the child comes to the United States and resides there for at least five years continuously immediately previous to his or her eighteenth birthday, and unless within six months after the child's twenty-first birthday he or she shall take an oath of allegiance to the United States.

Rocco Pasquale Given 30 Days in Jail

Toronto, May 9 (CP) — Rocco Pasquale, Toronto, was sentenced to 30 days in jail in Women's Police Court following conviction on a charge of assaulting Miss Edith Fontaine yesterday. A similar charge against Murray Zaldman was dismissed.

Miss Fontaine testified she was dragged into a car on Bain Avenue by Pasquale. She was rescued by Jack Crawford, city employee.

Pasquale said he had given her $10 to pay a fine for him and she had spent the money.

DUKE OF WINDSOR GIVES TO FUND

Letter Accompanies Gift With Best Wishes for Success

Montreal, May 9—(CP) — The Duke of Windsor was one of the first contributors to the Welsh War Relief Fund being conducted in Montreal by a group known as the Dragonettes, Miss B. Purnell, an officer of the organization, said Wednesday night.

A letter accompanying the Duke's contribution said:

"The Duke is always proud of his connection with the principality and encloses a small gift with the best wishes for the continued success of your efforts and those who are collaborating with you in Canada on behalf of the Welsh people."

The letter replied to one sent to the Duke, now governor of the Bahamas, by the Dragonettes.

Berlin Communique

Berlin, May 9 (AP)—The German High Command asserted that large bomber formations pounded the "transit ports" of Liverpool and Hull last night destroying shipping facilities and setting huge fires in the harbor areas, and made other attacks on the ports of Hartlepool, Middlesbrough, Bristol and Plymouth.

The German High Command claimed submarines and bombers sank 41,950 tons of shipping in the North Atlantic and near England. A bomber sank a 12000-ton ship in English waters, it was claimed, when a convoy was attacked, and two other ships were damaged. The toll of U-boats in the Atlantic was put at 29,950 tons.

(Confirmation of these claims is not available from British sources. As for ramage at the ports, an official communique said it was "extensive" and that the attacks were on 'a heavy scale.).

PREMIER MENZIES LEAVES OTTAWA

Will Visit Washington to Exchange Views With Key Ministers

Ottawa, May 9 (CP)—Prime Minister Menzies of Australia was to leave Ottawa Thurs. for Washington on another leg of a world-circling tour which already has carried him from his home Dominion to the battlefields of the Middle East and Northern Africa, and on to Britain.

Mr. Menzies will travel by train to Washington, passing through Toronto, but he will make no stopover en route to the United States Capital.

Last night the visiting Prime Minister was entertained at a state dinner given in his honor by the Dominion government, and attended by the Earl of Athlone, Prime Minister Mackenzie King, cabinet ministers and other officials.

That was Mr. Menzies' last appointment in a day which saw him constantly on the go after his morning arrival at Uplands airport from New York.

After a brief inspection of Canadian, Australian and New Zealand airmen-in-training at Uplands, Mr. Menzies was whisked to the city for a press conference in the headquarters of the Australian High Commissioner Sir William Glasgow.

From there he went to a Canadian Club luncheon where, in an address, he said British forces are inferior to the enemy only in mechanized equipment, and winning of the war requires the ending of that inferiority.

Then he went to Parliament Hill and later attended a meeting of the cabinet war committee at which he exchanged views with key Canadian ministers.

Says Much of Future of Democracy Depends On Pupils of Today

Toronto, May 9 (CP)—A. E. McAllister of the London, Ont., Board of Education, told the Associated High School Boards of Ontario convention here last night that "the present battle for freedom is being fought not only on the battlefields of Europe but in the Public and High School Boards of Ontario and Canada."

"There is a perpetual battle between construction and destruction passing through the public and high schools of the country now," he said.

Education will have to lay the foundation stone for reconstruction after the war he said.

BERLIN AUTHORITIES CANVASS HOMES

Berlin, May 9 (AP)—In anticipation of harder times to come, Berlin authorities are making a canvass of all homes in the city to find shelter for people left homeless by bombs.

So far relatively few houses in Berlin have been wrecked by bombs, but the latest raids—with bigger bombs and with incendiaries—have given an indication of what may be expected.

As a means of bringing relief to Berlin's increasing housing shortage, Jewish families were ordered to live in more restricted quarters so that part or all of their apartments might be made available to "aryans."

Survivors Landed At Montevideo

Montevideo Uruguay, May 9 (AP)—A British merchant ship arrived here Wednesday with seven Netherlanders and one British Guianan from the torpedoed former Holland freighter Prins Willem II.

The captain of the merchantman said the survivors were picked up from a lifeboat April 17, four days after the Prins Willem II left London Sound for the River Plate here.

The Prins Willem II is listed in Lloyd's register of shipping as a freighter of 1,304 tons, built in Rotterdam.

Before the war, the vessel frequently visited the United States and last July, after crew difficulty broke out on the Great Lakes and several men declined to sail the vessel for fear of being interned by Canadian officials, 12 crew members were arrested in Montreal and the freighter was taken over by the Canadian authorities.

WOMAN OF 78 SPRY AS A CRICKET

Feels More Like 48

Aches and pains are not inevitable in old age. When they do come, there is always a cause for them. Here is a little lesson on growing old, by a woman of 78:—

"For the last five years I have taken Kruschen Salts and I tell you truthfully I could not live without them. I am 78 years old. I have hardly a pain in my body, and I feel almost as young as I did at 48. I give the credit to Kruschen Salts. No one will believe my age."

—(Mrs.) C. M.

Most people grow old long before their time because they neglect one vital need of health—the need for internal cleanliness. Eventually they start the Kruschen habit. Then, probably for the first time in years, they start getting rid every day of all waste matter from the system. They begin to feel energetic and happy. In a word, they've got that "Kruschen Feeling."

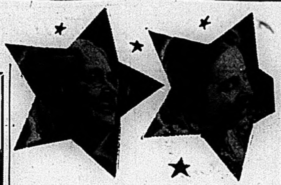
"THE STORE THAT MAKES A HOUSE — A HOME"



A LITTLE PARABLE FOR MOTHERS

By TEMPLE BAILEY,

The Young Mother set her foot on the path of life.

"Is the way long?" she asked.

And her Guide said: "Yes. And the way is hard. And you will be old before you reach the end of it. But the end will be better than the beginning."

But the young Mother was happy, and she would not believe that anything could be better than these years. So she played with her children and gathered flowers for them along the way, and bathed with them in the clear streams; and the sun shone on them and life was good, and the young Mother cried, "Nothing will ever be lovelier than this."

Then night came, and storm, and the path was dark, and the children shook with fear and cold, and the Mother drew them close and covered them with her mantle, and the children said, "Oh, Mother, we are not afraid, for you are near, and no harm can come," and the Mother said, "This is better than the brightness of day for I have taught my children courage."

And the morning came, and there was a hill ahead, and the children climbed and grew weary, and the Mother was weary, but at all times she said to the children, "A little patience, and we are there." So the children climbed, and when they reached the top, they said, "We would not have done it without you, Mother." And the Mother, when she lay down that night, looked up at the stars, and said: "This is a better day than the last, for my children have learned fortitude in the face of hardness. Yesterday I gave them courage. Today I have given them strength."

And the next day came strange clouds which darkened the earth—clouds of war and hate and evil, and the children groped and stumbled, and the Mother said: "Look up. Lift your eyes to the Light." And the children looked and saw above the clouds an Everlasting Glory, and it guided them and brought them beyond the darkness. And that night the Mother said, "This is the best day of all, for I have shown my children God."

And the days went on, and the weeks and the months and the years, and the Mother grew old, and she was little and bent. But her children were tall and strong, and walked with courage. And when the way was hard, they helped their Mother; and when the way was rough, they lifted her, for she was as light as a feather; and at last they came to a hill, and beyond the hill they could see a shining road and golden gates flung wide.

And the Mother said: "I have reached the end of my journey. And now I know that the end is better than the beginning, for my children can walk alone, and their children after them."

And the children said, "You will always walk with us, Mother, even when you have gone through the gates."

And they stood and watched her as she went on alone, and the gates closed after her, and they said: "We can not see her, but she is with us still. A Mother like ours is more than a memory. She is a Living Presence."

Weddings

DEAN—PAULEY

Rawdon (Special)—A very pretty wedding ceremony was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Pauley, Wellman's, on Wednesday, May 7th, at two o'clock when their youngest daughter, Gladys Inez, was united in marriage to Mr. Harris Smith Dean, son of Mr. Adam Dean and the late Mrs. Dean of Fuller, with Rev. J. E. Beckel, pastor of Rawdon circuit officiating.

The bride looked charming in a gown of dusty rose embroidered sheer with white accessories and wore a halo of orange blossoms which her mother had used at her wedding and she carried a bouquet of Ophelia roses. She entered the living room on the arm of her father, Mr. Lewis Pauley and the ceremony took place beneath an arch of evergreens entwined with pink and white apple blossoms.

The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Hazel Pauley, wearing a frock of Elizabeth blue sheer with white accessories and she carried pink and white carnations.

Mr. George Brough of Fuller assisted the groom. During the signing of the register, Mr. Howard Hutcheon, Burnbrae, cousin of the bride, sang "I Love You Truly."

After the ceremony a buffet dinner was served the guests who numbered twenty-two by the Misses Isobel Cook of Burnbrae and Miss Bernice Dunham of Wellman's. The dining table was centred with a three-tier wedding cake.

The bride travelled in a street-length frock of navy crepe with a navy serge coat and dusty rose accessories and the newlyweds left by motor on a trip to Carleton Place, Ottawa and eastern points. On their return they will reside at Fuller.

Among the guests present were: Mr. Adam Dean, Miss Hilda Dean, Mrs. Gordon Vandewater, Fuller; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Hutcheon, Burnbrae; Mr. and Mrs. John Farrell, Moira; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Thrasher, and Mrs. Paul Sharp, Wellman's.

THERE'S A LONG LIFE for the light flannel suit since it may be worn under a fur coat in winter, and then right through spring into summer. Canadian Club's Contribution To Canteen Fund Acknowledged Acknowledgment of the contribution of fifty dollars from the Belleville branch of the Women's Canadian Club for the mobile canteen has been received from the honorary secretary of the National Association, Ottawa. The letter thanking the club for its very generous donation explained that the fund would be kept open until all contributions had been received and then forwarded to London, England, where the idea of purchasing such canteens originated with the Women's Canadian Club.

ST. ANDREW'S W. M. S.

The regular monthly meeting of the W.M.S. of St. Andrew's Church was held on Wednesday afternoon May 7th. Opened with a hymn, Mrs. Mantle at the piano. Prayer by the president, Mrs. J. Farley. After opening, the meeting was in charge of Mrs. Diamond's group. A most touching solo, "Flee As a Bird" was rendered by Mrs. Harry Brown.

An address by Mrs. Lehman, home on furlough from Nigeria, was greatly enjoyed by the members.

Mrs. Lehman had with her a goodly number of exhibits of articles in daily use in Nigeria and gave a description of these and of the habits and customs of the natives of that country of which she is a missionary. A hearty vote of appreciation was extended Mrs. Lehman, who closed the meeting with prayer.

Parishioners Of Synod Of Ontario Called On To Make Sacrifices

Clergy, laymen and women of every parish were called upon Wednesday afternoon to make every sacrifice to raise the full amount of the apportionment pledged by the executive committee of the Diocese of Ontario. The plea was made by the Very Rev. Dean. W. W. Craig during the closing session of the synod in St. George's Hall, Kingston.

Later by a standing vote, members of the synod gave assurance to Right Rev. Bishop John Lyons they were prepared to raise as much money in 1942 as they have pledged for this year.

"Thank you," Bishop Lyons told the synod, "that relieves me."

"That," declared Canon Leonard A. Dixon, general secretary of the M.S.C.C., "is the attitude of the church all over Canada. We shall not go back."

"In the memory of other great undertakings which the church in this diocese has successfully embarked upon, we have no doubt but that our people will once again rise to the occasion and accomplish our task with complete success," said Dean Craig. His remarks were contained in the report of the Committee on Mission Givings and Management of stipends.

The full amount referred to by Dean Craig is $6,111.11, and includes all that will be officially asked for from the diocese for the current year to meet the needs of the M.S.C.C., the G.B.R.E., and the Council for Social Service of the Anglican Church in Canada.

Outlook This Year

"The difference in our outlook this year is not so much in the amounts asked for, as in the all-important change of attitude which we have explicitly pledged ourselves to accept in relation to these amounts," said Dean Craig.

"If we have ever tended to regard them as a visionary, impracticable standard, far beyond our reach or of any expectation that we should attain to," he continued, "the standard now set before us we deliberately recognize as representing something we can do, and we pledge ourselves here and now to do it."

In his report, Dean Craig told of the annual meetings of the missionary societies being held in Stratford in September of last year. It was there that courteous and restrained communication from the Church in England disclosed the unparalleled difficulties it was laboring under as the result of war conditions, and suggested that the church in Canada might take over part of the financial responsibility for the work in this country.

This year the Canadian church takes upon itself the task of raising $60,000, of which the Diocese of Ontario's share is more than $6,000.

During the year, reported Dean Craig, the following 23 parishes paid their missionary apportionment in full: Sharbot Lake, Pittsburg, North Frontenac, St. Paul's and St. George's, Kingston; Augusta, Edwardsburg, Prescott, Coe Hill, Maynooth, Trenton, Trinity, St. Peter's and St. Paul's, Brockville, Gananoque, Westport, Adolphustown, Napanee, North Addington, Ameliasburg, Picton, Herchimer Avenue and Shannonville.

St. Paul's, Brockville, contributed $62 more than the amount apportioned to it, said Dean Craig. He added that the parishes of Loughboro, Parham, Marmora; Bath, Tyendinaga and Wellington fell far below the amounts assigned to them.

The total amount received from the diocese on apportionment was $18,989.80 as compared with $17,816.98 received last year. The overdraft on the Mission and Beneficiary Givings account, amounting to $516.81, was wiped out. The apportionment to M.S.C.C. for the year was $9,106 and of this amount $3,500 was contributed.

"In 1938 we contributed $2,600 and in 1939 $3,000, so that we can show a steady increase which should encourage us in the new task which confronts us in 1941," declared Dean Craig.

DR. DAFOE'S COLUMN on the Quintuplets and the Care of Your Children

Basis of Good Discipline Among Children Is Told

I have found that the most important thing in discipline is its explanation to a child. There isn't any use punishing a small boy or girl if he or she don't understand what the punishment means. If a child gets the idea that a penalty is imposed just to hurt him, then the whole motive behind discipline is obscured.

I have often said before that discipline in a home should be an attempt to show a child that a properly run home is purely a democratic unit a co-operative endeavor with each member of the unit having the power to add or detract from the happiness of every other unit.

An eminent child psychiatrist told me that if we can successfully learn to share our experiences, our pleasures and our disappointments with our children, we will be doing far more for them than if we attempt to raise them by a complicated system of rewards and punishments for wrongdoing and I agree.

The ideal parents should keep before them in disciplining children is to be consistent as well as just. Inconsistency in the disciplining of children will do more harm than almost anything else. It is natural that it should, for what you are trying to do in discipline is build up a sense of right and wrong in a child. So, if you as a parent adjudge some act of his as all right one day and then punish him for it the next, he will naturally be confused and resentful.

The best foundations for family life are the affection and devotion, and helpfulness and disciplining a child is merely showing him how he can best fit into this plan. If he is bad, he must be shown how his acts have tended to upset his home. A child will do almost anything to win and keep his family's affection.

We hear a lot today about never whipping a child. I don't think that in itself is so terribly important. There lives not far from me now, a family that I consider unusually happy. There are four children and they are a particularly stirring lot. I know those children have often been spanked and cuffed. Yet those children have an unusual affection for their parents. Somehow or other those parents, even when they were administering a whipping, succeeded in showing the children how much they loved them and how greatly they were concerned over what they had done. With them, a whipping was never a way of getting even with the child, it was a corrective measure.

On the other hand, I have known more than one home where whipping was taboo, and yet the home wasn't very happy, merely because the father and mother left the children cold and resentful with the punishments they did administer.

If parents will develop and encourage a feeling of mutual trust and mutual understanding with their children, the problem of discipline will be easy.

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

She Never Forgets!"

"Remember Mother....She never forgets!" is the slogan chosen for Mother's Day this year.

"Remember" is the perfect inspirational word for the bows of devotion and homage that belong to the observance of Mother's Day.

The second Sunday in May has had a deep and personal significance ever since 1907, when a Philadelphia woman, Miss Anna Jarvis, started the idea of Mother's Day. On the second Sunday in May, 1907, she mourned the first anniversary of her mother's death and prevailed upon a Philadelphia church to hold a special service to "honor beloved mothers everywhere." Next year the idea had spread to other churches.

The governor of Florida was the first govenor to issue a Mother's Day proclamation. In 1914, Congress passed an Act, designating the second Sunday in May as Mother's Day, and requesting the display of the American flag on all government buildings on that day. The resolution urges that "through some distinct act of kindness, visit, letter, gift, or other tribute all may "show remembrance of the mother to whom it is designed to perpetuate all family ties."

During the intervening years, from 1914 to 1941, the observance of Mother's Day has grown to gignatic proportions, as an occasion for family homage to Mother and for gift-giving.

This year a new significance is being given to Mother's Day. The day has been chosen as the perfect occasion to arouse public interest to the "vital impostance of the job that mothers have to do. If mothers themselves can be moved to seek more information on the problems involved in their jobs as mothers, and to use increasingly the health and educational facilities offered in their respective communities, then Mother's Day will be an increasingly important factor in the development of, healthier, happier families throughout the coming years."

As a bow of homage to their own mothers, either living or dead, on this special day, many charitable people are contributing in small or larger amounts, to a fund for "the dissemination of scientific information on the prenatal care for mothers and to aid mothers in the rearing of healthy, happy children."

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Exchange of Greetings

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Over a year ago I became acquainted with a young lady, and at once I knew that I would like to know her better. But I'm too far away, and at the same time too shy, to see her very often. Last Christmas I sent her a card, which she never acknowledged. I thought she'd forgotten me, but on Valentine's Day I received a lovely valentine from her with a verse on it that has me puzzled.

Do you think it would be all right to write her a letter, thanking her for the valentine, and in that way start up a correspondence?

Kenneth.

It would be quite all right to send the young lady a note, telling her that you appreciated the valentine she sent, and that you still remember the pleasant times you had together whenever you saw each other. Perhaps it might be a good idea to send her a box of candy or a bouquet of pretty spring flowers. I'm sure this would start a friendship. Good luck to you.

Husband Never Takes Her Out

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I'm 30 years old and we've been married four years. Our baby boy is two years old. Since the arrival of the baby, my husband and I never go out together, although before that we always went to the same places, and he used to want me to go with him. Is it because he doesn't want to be bothered with the baby, or could he be getting tired of me?

My days are all alike. On the days he isn't working, he goes to visit his friends. I think he ought to take turns and give me a chance to go out, but he doesn't agree.

Right now we're living with another family, who boards us. Do you think if we had an apartment or a small house in the country he'd stay at home more?

Young Wife.

You have by deepest sympathy in your problem, which is very real. It seems to me that almost any man with a sense of fair play would be willing to stay at home and mind the baby occasionally, so that his wife may have a chance to go to a movie or to visit friends. "All work and no play" is as bad for Jill as it is for Jack.

Talk over with him the idea of getting a small apartment where you can be by yourselves. I think the experiment would be worth trying, when it's a case of marriage failing and a little child not having the right sort of home in which to develop. Hasn't he any pride in his little son? Most every normal man has an abiding affection for the child who bears his name.

Perhaps She Thinks He's Too Young

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I met a girl during the last part of the summer of 1940, and knew at once that I was going to like her; she seemed to like me very much. She is 19 and I'm 18. We never went steady but she seldom went out with any other boys.

One day she told me she was going back to her former boy friend which hurt me very much. I don't believe she was telling me the truth because I saw her with an entirely different person.

When she moved away from this neighborhood I tried to make dates with her. She always said she was dated up, but one day I passed her house and saw she was there when she was supposed to be on a date with someone else. She accepted my invitation to go dancing, but still refuses to make dates with me.

Am I foolish for being crazy over her? Do you think I ought to ask her why she lied to me? I do want to keep her friendship.

J. I. M.

The best way to keep people's friendship is not to pin them down as to why they do certain things. Young people often tell fibs, and girls are supposed to excel in this art. It's much better, if you're interested in keeping a friendship, not to demand explanations.

As you're a year younger than the girl, that may explain her actions. Just go along with her, and don't be too insistent on explanations.

The Stars Say

For Saturday, May 10

By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE

PECULIAR and unpredictable events, of a surprising and baffling nature are likely to be paramount on this day, pushing all ordinary and normal affairs into the background. This startling or unique state of affairs may highlight the business of financial situations but it is more likely to manifest in the emotional, creative, artistic or social associations. It is a force arising from profound, subtle or secret sources. Sagacious and cautious handling with finesse rather than panic or fear, may bring constructive rather than calamitous results. Be careful with funds and shun extravagance.

Those whose birthday it is may not be surprised should curious, unique or weird experiences be the rule of the year, rather than the regulation, normal and commonplace. This strange state of affairs may affect the business, professional, artistic and social as well as emotional life. It might manifest as a great inspiration in art, music, or poetry. Romance and intrigue with reactions on the emotional life are probable, and with strange forebodings or intuitions. Safeguard funds and shun extravagance in all directions. Maintain composure in most peculiar situations.

A child born on this day may possess peculiar, unique or strange talents with advanced ideals, high aspirations of a cultural or artistic form, and with a compassionate, mystical or humanitarian temperament.

JACKMAN URGES PRESERVATION OF CAPITALISM

Doubted if Any Other System Could Survive "Shocks" of Past Ten Years

LAPOINTE CRITICAL

By C. R. BLACKBURN
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Ottawa, May 9 (CP)—Preservation of the capitalistic and profit-motive system until something better has been devised to replace it was urged in the House of Commons yesterday by H. R. Jackman (Con. Toronto-Rosedale) in the course of the budget debate which has now gone over to next week.

After Angus MacInnis (C.C.F. Vancouver East) had reiterated his party's demand for immediate steps to provide new measures for social betterment, coupled with nationalization of the financial system, Mr Jackman made a plea on behalf of private enterprise unhampered by excessive state control and taxation

Mr. Jackman said he doubted if any system that has yet been advocated could have survived the "shocks" which have been borne by the capitalistic system in the past 10 years.

He warned that the present course of economic development in Canada was leading to "economic totalitarianism."

Pointed Statement Given

The budget debate yesterday was punctuated by a brief but pointed statement from Justice Minister Lapointe condemning the views on the war expressed Wednesday by Maxime Raymond (Lib. Beauharnois-Laprairie.)

The veteran Quebec Minister said Mr. Raymond did not express the sentiment of Quebec Province, the loyalty of which had been evidenced by the success of that province's war effort. Mr. Raymond's utterances had provided fuel for those "ignorant and mischievous" people who were writing critical articles on Quebec's loyalty, and he wished to repudiate them.

Mr. Lapointe said he agreed with "two matters" Mr. Raymond mentioned. This was generally taken to be a reference to Mr. Raymond's stand against conscription and union government. Mr. Lapointe in the past has put himself on record as opposed to them.

The minister said he would make a broadcast speech to the Quebec people soon.

No Advocate of Neutrality

Later in the sitting Mr. Raymond made a further statement in which he said he had not advocated a policy of neutrality for Canada in his Wednesday address. So far as participation in the war was concerned he had accepted the "unequivocal" endorsation to participation given by the Canadian people in the 1940 general election.

But he declared the people at the same time had declared themselves against conscription and that that decision should be respected.

Two amendments now have been moved to the budget resolution.

The first, moved by Victor Quelch on behalf of the New Democracy Group, expressed regret that the government had not taken control of the issue of credit by the chartered banks and suggested "funds from the Bank of Canada" should be used to finance governmental expenditures over and above the amount that could be raised by "reasonable taxation and sale of interest-free war savings certificates."

Budget Debate Suspended

The second, moved yesterday by Mr. MacInnis, would strike out the Bank of Canada section of the New Democracy amendment and substitute instead a suggestion for "nationalization of the financial system and its use as an effective instrument of public policy."

The budget debate was suspended last night until next week so the House could devote today's sitting to discussion of private bills. A vote on the budget now is not expected until Tuesday at the earliest.

Pointed interchanges between New Democracy members and J. M. Dechene (Lib. Athabaska) featured the afternoon debate.

Mr. Dechene charged Premier Aberhart of Alberta was not pulling his weight in the war and was failing to co-operate with the Dominion administration. New Democracy members frequently interrupted."

E. G. Hansell (N. D. MacLeod) said Mr. Aberhart was as loyal as any man in Canada and that it was untrue the province was not entirely in accord with Canada's war effort and solidly behind it.

Opposed Gasoline Tax

Wider distribution of purchasing power would solve the problem of farm product prices, said Anthony Hlynka (Lib. Vegreville). He opposed the new gasoline tax as applied to farmers.

Dr. M. E. McGarry (Lib. Inverness-Richmond), protesting that his Nova Scotia community had obtained no war industries and in some respects was worse off economically than before the war, said such conditions tended to discourage the people and make them lose enthusiasm for the cause.

Rodney Adamson (Con. York West) injected novel sidelights in the debate when he asked that members of parliament unfit for active service be permitted to go to England for air raids precautions work during the recess, and suggested a new and "airtight" national registration be carried out in conjunction with the census.

His registration suggestion was prompted by his experience of buying a blank registration card "without difficulty" on St. James Street in Montreal. He had made the experiment when he heard it was possible to get blank cards in that city.

Must Pay The Price

Mr. Adamson said it was "almost criminal folly to delude ourselves into thinking that we are going to be able to get through this war without large military forces." He estimated Canada's "minimum" requirements were 300,000 men in the army, navy and air force. Women should be trained for non-combatant services in Canada "and possibly abroad."

Mr. MacInnis said that "the democracies....can still defeat the Nazi hordes if they are willing to pay the price, and the price is more democracy."

"We must extend freedom," he said. "We must make the common, ordinary working man feel that he is an important man in the community and that the country is interested in his welfare.

"To acquire the force and unity of purpose to win this war we shall have to do certain things. We must get clear in our minds that the present struggle is not only a war; it is a world revolution. Hitler never ceases to tell his people that.

Cannot Go Back

"We must realize that we can never go back to things as they were before the war began. We either go forward to a more perfect democracy than we ever have had before, or we go backward to Fascism."

Mr. Jackman in his defence of the capitalistic system said: "Economically we have advanced far along the road to socialism, economic totalitarianism or whatever 'ism' we may finally term our particular form of state control.

"A long war is foreshadowed. If we continue along our present path many of the distinguished and creative factors in our present economic set-up must be submerged and lost.

"If a better system can be devised which will provide a more ample and abundant life for all, then it cannot come too soon.

"But, along with the overwhelming majority of the people of Canada, I want to know what that new system is.

Want to Know Substitute

"I want to know what is to be substituted for a system which, until international and other governmental interferences obtained—by which I do not mean beneficial regulation—served the people so well over centuries and managed to survive notwithstanding the economic monkey wrenches of nationalism, excessive tariff barriers, war debts and gold hoarding.

"I doubt, Mr. Speaker, if any system that we have ever heard of would have survived the shocks which the capitalistic system and the private profit system have survived in the last 10 years."

Mr. Jackman questioned the long range value of too heavily taxing individuals and corporations. He feared there was a likelihood of destroying the capital value of industries and of so crippling the taxpayers financially that they will be unable to buy war loans.

Swashbuckling Dodgers Lead National Loop By Defeating St. Louis Cards In 12 Frames

Have Game and One Half Margin and Are 'Hot' Team Right Now

YANKEES WIN

By JUDSON BAILEY
(Associated Press Sport Writer)

The swashbuckling Brooklyn Dodgers have taken complete command of the National League and right now are hot enough to singe a sheet of asbestos.

They have faced every other club in the circuit at Ebbets Field during their last 15 games and won 13 of them. They captured three out of four from the world champion Cincinnati Reds last week and they swept a two-game series from St. Louis Cardinals.

The climax to this sensational stand against all opposition came yesterday in the shape of a 5-4 12-inning triumph over the Redbirds while a crowd of 32,039 wavered between hysteria and boredom.

They set off a lot of fireworks right at the start as the Dodgers punched out a four-run lead in the first two innings and lost it in the next two. Then Mort Cooper and Kemp Wicker, Brooklyn relief worker, settled down to a dull, airtight pitching struggle for seven innings until, with two out in the 12th, Joe Medwick beat out a single to third baseman Jim Brown and went all the way to second as Brown overthrew first. Then Cookie Lavagetto, who had doubled two runs across in the first, singled Medwick home.

The victory gave Dodgers a game and a half margin in first place.

Leads Cubs to Victory

In the only other game in the senior circuit yesterday Verne Olsen scattered 10 hits and smacked a three-run homer to lead Chicago Cubs to a 5-1 decision over the Phillies.

In the American League New York Yankees took another cut out of Cleveland Indians lead with a 5-4 victory in a slugging session that included 13 hits for New York and 11 for the tribe.

Big Red Ruffing hit a home run, a double and a single to bolster his own pitching and received credit for the victory although fireman Johnny Murphy had to help out with 3 1-3 innings of shutout relief pitching. This left Indians 2 1-2 games out in front of the Yanks.

Washington Senators muzzled Detroit Tigers 7-1 with a 14-hit offensive to back up the six-hit hurling of Steve Sundra. It was the fourth loss for Buck Newsom, who lasted only till the fourth.

Pete Suder hit a home run with two on in the eighth inning to provide Philadelphia Athletics with a 9-6 margin over St. Louis Browns.

Toronto Earl Greys Win Cage Title In N. S.

New Waterford, N.S., May 9—(CP)—The big and hefty ball-tossers who make up Toronto Earl Greys packed up the Canadian Intermediate Crown in their basketball gear and started off for home today after brushing aside New Waterford Strands' bid for the title.

Game, but light, the Maritime champions were no match for the Ontario squad in the two-game series that ended here last night with a 47-33 win for the visitors in the second meeting of their total-point round. With equal ease, Greys had taken the first game 43-27 the previous night, to make up a 90-60 total score.

Leading the Toronto attack were Dave Bouskill with 13 points and towering Junior Fox with 10 while Laddy Micholosky and "Cornie" Leaver were the pick of the losers. They marked up point totals of 11 and 9, respectively.

CANADIANS BRING BASEBALL TO ETON

Western Ontario Regiment Plays Few Innings on Famous Cricket Pitch

Eton, England, May 9—(CP)—The Canadians brought baseball to the playing fields of Eton.

As top-hatted Eton school boys stood around in pop-eyed amazement, soldier-ballplayers from a Western Ontario Infantry Regiment of the 2nd Division playing a rousing few innings, clouting the ball around a famous cricket pitch.

Etonians quickly caught on to idea of the game and after the first innings well-mannered English voices discreetly cried "Well played, Sir," when a Canuck poled a double into left field by the cricket pavilion. But it was nearly drowned out by the rough diamond chatter of the troops.

This was the first time this war Canadian soldiers have been to Eton School, going there to give a Bren gun carrier demonstration to the college's cadets unit and staying to play ball on the historic fields.

During the visit the troops were bivouacked in Windsor great park in the shadow of Windsor Castle.

BROOKLYN—WHERE THE BRONX CHEER REIGNS SUPREME

If you wish to see the fan of fans, go to Brooklyn. Nowhere in the world does there prevail a more sublime faith than that which blooms in the soul of the Brooklyn fan for his beloved Dodgers. Year after year the Dodgers take it on the chin. But the Brooklyn fan shrugs off defeats with "but wait 'til next year." These undershirted Dodgerites were telling the Cincinnati Reds how they felt about invaders of sacred Ebbets Field.

NEWARK BEARS LENGTHEN LEAD IN INT. LEAGUE

Have Record of 15 Wins and Five Defeats Since Start of Season

LEAFS LOSE IN 14TH

(By the Associated Press)

It doesn't seem to make any difference where Newark Bears play—all parks look like home to them.

The rampaging Bruins have been on the road more than a week now and there aren't any signs yet of slackening the fast pace they set during their first home stay at Ruppert stadium.

With a record of 15 victories against five defeats, the Bears are shambling along at the top of the International League standings three full games ahead of their closest competitors.

They racked up their fourth consecutive victory yesterday in convincing style, taking the first of a three-game series 9-3 from Buffalo Bisons.

Hank Borowy took care of the pitching chores for Newark and limited Bisons to six hits in coasting to his fourth triumph. His mates, paced by Ziggy Sears and Frankie Kelleher, knocked the spots off three Bison hurlers, starting with Freddy Hutchinson, the $75,000 wonder boy on option from Detroit Tigers.

Buffalo Now Fourth

The loss dropped Buffalo into fourth place behind Jersey City Giants, who climbed above the .500 mark with a 14-inning, 5-4 conquest of Toronto.

Rochester's champion Red Wings turned back Baltimore Orioles 7-2, thereby taking undisputed possession of sixth place, while Syracuse drubbed Montreal 5-2.

Sid Gordon's second triple of the game in the 14th spelled victory for Jersey City and gave Hal Feldman, who went the distance, his fourth straight triumph. The Leafs nicked him for 14 safeties, one more than the Little Giants collected off three Toronto hurlers.

Rochester snapped a two-game losing streak in beating Baltimore behind the eight-hit twirling of Herschel Lyons.

Tom Sunkel bested young Chet Kehn in a pitching duel to give the Chiefs the opener with Montreal. Kehn lost the game in the first inning when wildness cost him three runs.

CORBYS DEFEAT JUNIORS BY 7-4

Clubs Use All Available Players to Get Much-Needed Practice

Local softball fans got a peak at the relative strength of at least two local softball teams in the Senior City League last night, when the Corby A.C. won an exhibition game from the Juniors by a 7 to 4 score. The management of both clubs injected practically every available effort to try out as much talent as possible.

Coach Harold Bawden, minus the services of Catcher Alf Rowbotham, sent Connie Harris to the Corby's mound, Harris limiting Red Townsend's "kids" to three hits and two runs. The veteran Johnnie "Poker-face" Bawden, then took over and although nicked for five hits, allowed only two runs as he laboured cautiously in his first mound appearance. For the Juniors Mike Powers started and gave over to Adams in the second, after Corbys had scored four. Herrington then relieved Adams in the fourth.

Cole and Ronsky had a brace of hits for Corbys, who scored five runs in the initial two frames and then eased off slightly. Harris and Bawden helped their own cause with a double and triple respectively. Whiting, the junior third sacker, led the hitters of the night with three bingles, the other five junior hits being scattered.

The line-ups:

Juniors—Whiting, 3b; Clare, c.f.; Spencer, c; Guay, s.s.; Peacock, c.; Cook and Yarrow, r.f.; Callaghan, 2b; Reid and Symons, l.f. and Powers, Adams and Herrington, p.

Corbys A.C.—Ronsky, 3b; Chuck Barriage and Lumberg, l.f.; Henn, 2b; Cole, 1b; Cy Barriage, s.s.; Kiser, r.f.; Moon and Murray, c.f.; Bradden c. and Harris and Bawden, p.

BILLY SOOSE FAVORED TO DEFEAT OVERLIN

Middleweight Champion, Ken Overlin, Lost Once to Challenger

15-ROUND BOUT

New York, May 9 (AP)—Ken Overlin, who came off out of the navy to win the middleweight boxing title New York variety, will be a 5-to-9 long shot when he defends his championship in Madison Square Garden tonight against Billy Soose, the stylish boxer from Farrell, Pa.

But no matter how the fight goes, in at least one respect Overlin can't lose. The champion is to get 42 1-2 per cent of the purse, to 12 1-2 for Soose. As this is the Garden's first fight card since the circus took over the arena a month ago, there promises to be a purse from which it will be a pleasure to take 42 1-2 per cent.

Though the betting money so definitely is riding with Soose, who at 23 is eight years younger than the age Overlin admits to, the experts are considerably divided. They know that Soose can punch but they also know that Overlin is a canny craftsman.

They know, too, that nothing has rankled Overlin in a long time as much as the over-the-weight decision he lost to Soose in Scranton, Pa., last summer. The champion claims this was strictly a "home-town" decision.

The fighters are booked to go 15 rounds.

Headed by two bands a mammoth parade will herald softball into the town of Trenton this evening after which the league champion R.C.A.F. team will meet the Continental Can nine in the league opener. Leave it to Prexy Jess Baker, Andy Anderson and their cohorts to lead the way. Incidentally Abber Joyce, who played first base for the Kingston Ponies the only season the Limestone City seniors ever won the O.B.A. title (that was in 1935), is up at the S A.R.D. base of the Trenton Air Base and if the "repair depot" management is looking for some additional batting strength they need go no further than Abber Joyce, who joined the Air Force some months ago. Efforts to organize girls' softball in Trenton took form this week when it was announced that President Jess Baker and the men's league executive would assist the lassies in organizing and the introduction of girls' softball into Mayor Harry Corby's up-and-coming town.

A softball note from the pen of Peterborough Fred Craig throws a little light on the "mushball" picture from the Liftlock City. Fred says: "The Men's Softball League is sure of six clubs and will likely have seven in action this season. At an executive meeting last night entries were received from Quakers who were not supposed to be going to operate this season, and from the Omemee Club. The others in line are Hastings, Westclox, Immaculate Conception and the Military Training Camp team. Motorists were not represented at last night's meeting, but reports have it that they have been signing up a team and their entry will be along before the final meeting when the schedule will be drawn up. It was decided that the first four teams will be eligible for the league playoffs, with the first and fourth and the second and third clubs playing of. It was also decided last night that Hastings' home games will be played in Hastings while Omemee will play their games at the local Bowl. Now will come the scramble for players to be ready for the league opening during the week of May 19.

Do you remember when the National Hockey League took in New York Americans' franchise at the annual meeting at Detroit five years ago today. William B. Dwyer, forced to relinquish control for financial reasons had failed to exercise his option to retain the club April 15. The club has been under the league's jurisdiction since.

According to a press dispatch from Seattle, Wash., the state game and fishery department had quite a time solving a mystery surrounding so many dead fish found in Steel Lake. Actually they were being electrocuted.

After residents notified the department of numerous dead fish along the lakeshore, the department discovered that an electrically operated pump drawing water from the lake to a nearby farmhouse developed a short circuit.

The shock, travelling into the water, via the pipeline, electrocuted all fish within a considerable distance.

While the Corby A.C. squad was playing "Red" Townsend's juniors an exhibition softball game at the Flats last night, upwards to 25 were working out with Ken Soden's Reliance nine at the Collegiate campus. Although they came out on the short end of a 7 to 4 score, the local Juniors gave notice last night they were to be very much reckoned with in the City League this season. For once Skipper Townsend has a surplus of young players all of whom appear to be of the up-and-coming nature, including three pitchers used last night, Powers, Adams and Herrington, while an elongated lad named Cummings has yet to be tried by the Townsend-led squad. Minus the services of catcher Alfie Rowbotham, who Skipper Barriage was counting heavily upon, the Corbys used Harris and Bawden on the mound, the only newcomers being Bradden catching and Lumberg in the field, these two advancing from the junior ranks. To select the standing of the City League this year will take some tall figuring, but as usual we'll stick out our chin prior to the league opening and make the usual prognostications next week.

Lippy Leo Durocher manager of the Brooklyn Dodgers, has been out-talked already once this season — and he admits it. Not by an umpire, either. By the "silent" Texan, Curt Davis.

It happened in the April 20 game with the Giants at the Polo Grounds (attendance 56,314).

The Dodgers were leading 7 to 4, in the last of the seventh. Davis, relieving, had put two men on, and the hitter was Mel Ott.

"I dashed out to the mound, fully intending to yank Curt" say Leo. "I had a pitcher all warmed up. Davis was through.

"But when I got to the mound, Davis says, 'Let me pitch to one more hitter, Leo. I will get Ott out.' I kicked the dirt around a little, and gave in."

Leo laughed. "Before I am back on the bench the score is tied. Then I get up, walk over to the water cooler and before I can wipe my mouth after taking a drink, we are two runs behind. That is what I get for being caught with my mouth shut."

MANUFACTURERS

Under another new order all motor vehicle manufacturers must obtain licences from the controller by May 13.

Both orders deal exclusively with automobiles for public sale, and have no bearing upon production for war needs.

Sales as Great as in 1940

"Retail sales of automobiles in Canada for the first three months of 1941 were as great as in the same period of 1940," Mr. Berry said. "This cannot continue. Canada needs every dollar of foreign currency she can get for the purchase of vital war supplies, and she needs every ounce of productive capacity which her industries possess. We hope to asssit these aims by restricting the production of private automobiles."

The motor vehicle controller said that three automobile manufacturers in Canada, Chrysler Corporation, Ford Motors and General Motors, had been alloted quotas for the period April 1 to Dec. 31, 1941. These quotas are based on production points, which are in turn based on the foreign currency content in cars produced, and the companies are prohibited from exceeding the production points alloted to them.

"To begin with," Mr. Berry said, "the reduction in output of automobiles will mean a 20 per cent saving in foreign exchange. It will also release machine tools and skilled labor for vital war work.

Build Cheaper Models

"Indirectly, the order should induce manufacturers to concentrate upon the production of low cost transportation, rather than upon luxury models. The foreign exchange content in a luxury car might be five times as great as that in a car of the low-priced popular class. In this particular case, the manufacturer will have the choice of building one luxury car or five low-priced cars, and it seems probable that he would conserve his quota of production points by building the cheap models."

Mr. Berry also expressed the belief that manufacturers would cut down on the number of types of cars produced, eliminating many of the "special" and "deluxe" models which would eat up a goodly share of their production points. He intimated, also, that negotiations are under way with a view to standardization of color schemes, upholstery finishes, and other features. Such simplifications would mean lowered production costs and would release for war work machine tools and skilled labor in many lines allied to the automobile industry.

Canadian Navy's Strength In Ships Will Be Doubled

Kitchener, Ont., May 9 (CP) — The Canadian navy's strength in ships will be doubled by next April in comparison to the number now available and 8,000 more men will be added to the navy in that time, Navy Minister Macdonald said in an address at the 55th annual banquet of the Kitchener Board of Trade last night.

"Where our Canadian navy now has 200 ships and a total strength of 18,000 officers and men, we shall have 400 ships and 26,000 men in naval service by next April," he said.

Mr. Macdonald praised the Canadian sailor, saying that there is not a port in the world where either a Canadian sailor or ship cannot be found. He said that Canada's speed in shipbuilding is satisfactory and added that there "never has been any question of a shortage of naval volunteers."

The minister coupled a declaration that this war is one "of machinery and not men" with the assertion that Canada will spend nearly as much in 1942 as was spent by the nation in the entire four years of the first Great War.

Some people, said Mr. Macdonald, have asked why Canada does not turn out more ships and men. The Navy Minister said it takes time to train men, and years to train a man fully for command of one of Canada's larger vessels.

German Airman Parachutes to Ground As Human Torch

Members rushed from the club house and beat out the flames but the airman already was dead.

11 NAZI PLANES

London Had 4-Hour Alarm

Casualties and damage elsewhere, the government declared, were not extensive. A few casualties were reported in London, which was under alarm more than four hours. Intermittent gunfire sounded in the capital area.

The toll of German planes credited to British fighters last night brought to 49 the total downed in the 30 hours ended at dawn. Twenty-four were downed Wednesday night—a record for a single night's operations—and 14 yesterday in daylight.

Patrols of British fighters were waiting to meet the Nazi raiders when they began roaring across the channel shortly after dusk last evening, and the opposing air forces were locked at once in a fierce combat which continued through most of the night.

It was the eighth successive night of stepped-up German raids on Britain. Since May 1 the average length of nightly alerts in a half-dozen principal areas has been about six hours.

Liverpool Not Attacked

Liverpool, bombed heavily for seven nights, apparently escaped unscathed last night.

The Air Ministry News Service said one squadron of British night fighters last night "ran into a wave of enemy bombers coming in from the sea" on the east coast and in 45 minutes "sent six crashing down and damaged others."

A New Zealand pilot who already had received the Distinguished Flying Cross for night fighting shot down two of the six within 10 minutes, it said.

Another pilot chased a Junkers in the moonlight for 30 miles out to sea, firing intermittently. At length the Air Ministry said, "his final burst set it alight and as it went down the clouds glowed red."

Destruction of 11 night bombers, it added, "cost the Luftwaffe at least another 50 airmen."

TO MANUFACTURE

The huge factory will produce the Browning high speed machine guns complete except for the barrels. The barrels will be turned out in other Canadian plants which have the necessary special skills and equipment.

The tenders are being asked by the Department of Munitions and Supply, and as soon as the contracts are let, construction work will proceed forthwith. Actual operation will commence at the earliest possible moment.

H. J. Carmichael, General Manager of the Corporation, is one of the key production men in the Department of Munitions and Supply, so there has been a direct contact between the Department and the company in speeding plans necessary for the plant

Escapees Helped By Sympathizers

London, May 9 (CP).—A pint-size former London mail-carrier, Evelyn Sidney White, 31, was identified today as one of the two sappers of the Royal Engineers who broke out of a German prison camp to make a 1,200-mile escape across Nazi Europe to Greece and freedom.

White is so small he was known in his London suburb as "Whippet".

His companion in the escape was not identified. The two, speaking only English, tramped across Poland, Hungary, Yugoslavia and Greece, apparently helped along an "underground railway by allied sympathizers".

Both men have rejoined their units in Egypt.

RASHID ALI FLEES

London (CP)—An authoritative source said some sniping was going on in Iraq today the eighth of armed conflict between the British and Iraqis there, but that there was no important fighting.

At Habbaniyah airdrome British forces were said to have driven the Iraqis back from Contonments and captured six 3.7-inch howitzers, a type of gun British troops use themselves in mountain artillery. A few armored cars and trucks and some ammunition also were said to have been captured.

This source said a "German-paid clique" in the Iraq army was not gaining much political ground.

In the Basra area the British were reported to be extending their control by occupying banks and telegraph offices.

"There has been some rioting there, but nothing very serious," it was said.

Would Relieve Britain in East

He said he believed the United States could best help Britain now by taking action to relieve her in the Far East and in "taking full responsibility for getting supplies across."

The dispatches telling of the reported flight of Iraq's Premier gave no indication as to where he might have gone. The reports, which followed by only a few hours the British bombing of Baghdad Airport and other points held by the Iraqis, mentioned, however, that Seyyid Taufiq Es Suwaida, Foreign Minister in the Government ousted April 4 by Rashid Ali, had flown to Amman, Transjordan, to meet the regent deposed in the same coup.

The Regent, the Emir Abdul Ilah, announced Sunday that he intended to return to Iraq and called on Iraq troops to go peacefully back to their posts.

(Reports of Rashid Ali's flight were not confirmed in London but authorities indicated a belief that fighting in Iraq would be of brief duration.)

British Continue Pursuit.

Ramadi is about 12 miles north of Habbaniyah. Falluja is some 22 miles to the northeast, across Lake Habbaniyah. Both are communications centres on the Euphrates and the east-west road leading to Baghdad.

The daily war bulletin said British troops, which two days ago captured Habbaniyah plateau with Howitzers flown in by the Royal Air Force, were continuing salvage operations.

Quantities of Iraq war materials of all descriptions were reported being assembled, while Imperial forces continue the pursuit of the Iraq forces toward Ramadi and Falluja.

The Basra area, at the head of the Persian Gulf where British reinforcements have been landed, remained quiet, the British Command announced.

On the North African front the war bulletin said severe sandstorms again had hampered operations at Tobruk, Libyan port.

Eighty miles to the east, on the Egyptian-Libyan border, vigorous patrol activity by Imperial mechanized forces was continuing.

Operations in Ethiopia, the communique said, are "proceeding well."

Changes In Relief Regulations Made

Toronto, May 9—(CP) — Hon. Norman Hipel, Ontario Minister of Labor and Welfare, announced today that following a survey of labor requirements on the farm and in industry changes in regulations affecting fully employable male recipients of relief have been determined upon.

On May 15, those who are 65 years or under, single male fully employable recipients are struck from relief; fully employable male heads of families of two or three, husband and wife or husband and wife and one dependent are also struck off from this date.

On June 1, fully employable male heads of families of four are struck off and June 15, families of more than four with fully employable heads are removed from the rolls.

No estimate was given as to the number affected.

HUNDREDS OF TONS

The Air Ministry News Service gave this account:

"More aircraft of the bomber command than ever before on a single night with incendiaries to be counted in the tens of thousands and high explosives in hundreds of tons carried Hamburg and Bremen with fires and smoke last night.

"Buildings were rent and smashed and Germany's submarine and shipbuilding yards were remorselessly bombarded and left with fires blazing in their midst.

Moon, Weather Favor Attack

"The moon and the weather favored the attack and though it was claimed by the Germans this morning that their defences dispersed the attack, our aircraft were in fact prevented neither by night fighters nor anti-aircraft barrage from streaming over both cities in a constant procession and discharging their whole load on appointed targets.

"Pilots' individual reports speak of 'areas a mass of flames in which it was impossible to distinguish separate fires,' of 'terrific explosions and smoke rising to 10,000 feet' and of 'our most powerful bombs dropped into the heart of the raging fires.'"

This sweep—described as the Royal Air Force's "heaviest yet"—cost 10 planes.

In attacks by daylight yesterday on German shipping off the Norwegian coast one additional plane was lost, but a German escort vessel was reported on fire and sinking by the stern.

"Hamburg and Bremen last night bore the brunt of the heaviest attack yet made by the R.A.F. on Germany" said the Ministry's communique.

"The weather was good and our bombers pressed home their attack with decisive results in spite of strong opposition."

The communique offered no detail on the Berlin raid, but elaborated on the Hamburg-Bremen attack:-

"High explosive bombs caused widespread destruction and many great fires were seen raging in the shipyards and in industrial quarters of both cities."

BRITAIN'S WAR AIMS SET OUT BY VISCOUNT HALIFAX

Thinking Today in Terms of Freedom Rather Than Frontiers

OBJECTIVES LISTED

Chicago, May 9 (AP)— Great Britain can offer no blueprint of the post-war future but it knows the basic principles which must govern a peace settlement, Viscount Halifax asserted last night.

The British Ambassador to the United States set forth Britain's war aims in general terms in an address to the Commercial Club as he began a seven-day tour of the Middle West.

"We are thinking today in terms of freedom rather than frontiers, of the restoration of the worth and welfare of the common man rather than of political agreements," he said. "We are seeking to ensure the freedom of the individual against enslavement."

Lord Halifax asserted that there could be no inconclusive issue from the present struggle, that destruction of the "Nazi system" must precede the establishment of a new world order.

"We know that no peace made with Hitler and his gang would be a real peace, but only an uncertain and precarious armistice while he made new preparations to destroy it," he said.

The Ambassador listed three objectives which the "new world community of nations" must attain to succeed:

"1. A system of security which will ensure international stability.

"2. A system of economic collaboration, in place of economic conflict, between free peoples....

"3. A system of ordered change in the relationship between states which will restore confidence in the integrity of the word of nations."

"If this new world order is to be built, the British Commonwealth

Japanese Agents Not Having Luck In Buying Materials

Washington, May 9 (AP)—Spirited bidding by Japanese agents searching the 20 American republics for strategic raw materials is providing increased competition, it was learned today, for American buyers seeking the same commodities for defence production needs.

In some instances, a survey by interested government agencies revealed, Japan's recently intensified efforts to buy rubber, tungsten, mercury and other vital war supplies have boosted prices as much as 30 to 40 per cent.

Despite the high bids, however, and promises to pay in United States dollars, the latest reports from South and Central America indicate that the campaign, thus far, has been a failure. Except for cotton, the Japanese agents have been able to close deals for only comparatively small amounts of strategic supplies.

Several factors were believed responsible for the sharp increase of Japanese marketing efforts in the past two months. Japan has a mounting shortage of raw materials at home, the war has virtually closed other supply sources, and future access to Latin American materials is surrounded by uncertainties.

Japan's anxiety over reports the Panama Canal might be closed, it was said, might arise from fear that such action would cut Japan off from Latin American sources.

PASSENGERS ON FIRST FLIGHT

Toronto, May 9 (CP).—En route to Washington, Hon. C. D. Howe, Minister of Munitions and Supply, and H. J. Symington, Electric Power Controller for Canada, will be passengers on the inaugural trans-Canada air lines flight to New York City leaving here at 11 a.m., E.D.T., tomorrow.

CITY AND DISTRICT NEWS

LARGE BUILDING MOVED

Residents of South Front Street rubbed their eyes and wondered if they were seeing things on Thursday evening, when in glancing out their windows they were surprised to see a large building being moved south toward the waterfront. The building, formerly used as a garage by the Cities Service Oil Company near the site where their warehouse and storage tanks were burned last summer, was being moved to their new location on South Front Street. The garage was jacked up and placed on skids, later to be towed to the new site where a foundation had been prepared.

This includes the county bridge across the Moira River.

Work on the new suburban area is expected to start in the near future.

PURCHASE AGA COOKER FOR COUNTY HOME

Purchase of a new Aga insulated heat cooker for use in the Hastings County House of Refuge was authorized yesterday at the regular meeting of the House Advisory Committee of the County Council at its regular meeting.

The new cooker or stove was regarded by the committee as being a necessary and much needed item in the kitchen cooking facilities. Decision to purchase was made after members of the committee had inspected the kitchen at a former meeting. Routine business occupied members for the remainder of the session.

FOUR INJURED TRENTON AIRPORT

Four men were injured at the Trenton R.C.A.F. base on Thursday afternoon when the scaffold upon which they were working is said to have collapsed. The men, Arthur Ellis, Trenton and Robert Little, Shannonville, were admitted to the Belleville General Hospital, while P. Blondin and James Baker sustained minor injuries. Ellis is said to have sustained a fractured leg while Little is suffering from an injured back. The other two sustained minor injuries and were treated at the R.C.A.F. medical base on the premises. It is reported the men were working on a scaffold in connection with the erection of a new airdrome. The scaffold is said to have collapsed beneath them, hurling the quartette to the ground.

Emphasis On Safe Delivery Of Aid Britain Advances Belief Showdown On Convoy Question Is Imminent

Washington, May 9 (AP)— Renewed United States cabinet emphasis on the importance of assuring the safe delivery of British aid supplies 'right now' furthered the belief today that a showdown was near on the subject.

Agriculture Secretary Claude Wickard, some sources thought, may have indicated the way the question will be posed, when he said last night that if the United States did not intend to see that Britain "gets our help, let's tell her so."

Picturing British needs as "terribly urgent," Wickard told a farmers conference at Charlotte, N.C., that "it is a cruel and bitter mockery to let the English people believe we are going to make our way measures in mind."

A question indirectly affecting British aid—the requisitioning of foreign ships idle in United States ports—meanwhile had developments on two fronts.

Nazis Object

The German government presented a note to the State Department, objecting to the ship bill now pending in Congress on the ground that it violated both international law and the commercial treaty between the two nations.

A group of Senators, indicating they felt this bill would pass, talked of seeking an amendment to the version approved in the House of Representatives that would prohibit the transfer of seized axis vessels to Britain. Such a ban was voted down in the House.

Plans Not Indicated.

The administration has not indicated its plans for disposition of the ships, if they are taken over, but the belief is that their requisitioning would make more tonnage available to Britain, either by releasing up to the equivalent in United States shipping space, or by direct transfer.

Senator Arthur Vandenberg (Rep. Michigan), an administration critic, said he would support the bill if it barred direct transfers, which he claimed "would be directly provocative of war" and an invitation to "reprisals on American property that might be very provocative."

Wickard's speech last night was the seventh on the "deliver-the-goods" theme to be made by cabinet officers in recent weeks. Wickard himself started the series on April 24, and since then State Secretary Cordell Hull, War Secretary Henry Stimson, Navy Secretary Frank Knox and Commerce Secretary Jesse Jones have spoken, Knox on two occasions.

The Agriculture Department chief made no mention of convoys, but he said that "it is plain that England will survive if American munitions and food do not reach her in ever-increasing quantities.

"I don't believe the people of this country favor half-measures. Let's do whatever is necessary to see that our food and munitions actually get to England—and let's do it right away. The situation is urgent, terribly urgent."

Opinion Divided.

Congressional opinion was split sharply on the urgency of protection, and part of the dispute centred over the significance of maritime commission figures showing the "reported" loss of only eight out of the 205 ships that sailed from American ports during the first three months of the year.

The commission's chairman, Emory S. Land said in a statement that the loss figures, based on unofficial reports, were incomplete and "there is reason to believe that actual losses run substantially greater than reported losses."

The British government also sought to correct the impression that recent sea losses had been small. High quarters in London said that April losses were nearly as high as any previous month, indicating that the total was near the previous 463,000 ton peak of June, 1940.

Senator Claude Pepper (Dem.-Florida), a convoy advocate, said that Land, who testified at a closed session of the Senate Commerce Committee, had estimated British shipping losses at 5,000,000 tons a year, or double the combined annual ship construction of the United States and Great Britain.

CANADIANS ON GUARD FOR EN GLAND

One look at the faces of these Canadians manning an anti-aircraft gun in England is sufficient to tell they mean business. The gun is a Bofors. Canada not only sends the men to England to fire these weapons, but also manufactures the barrels and shells in plants far from the reach of enemy bombers.

Accused's Counsel Waives His Rights

Hamilton, Ont., May 9 (CP)—The right of accused's counsel to insist upon the taking of formal evidence in the preliminary hearing of a charge of false pretenses was waived in court today in the case of Michael Pappakeriazes, 62, of Belleville, and Pappakeriazes was committed for trial by judge and jury without any preliminary evidence having been taken. By agreement with Harvey F. McCulloch, Crown Attorney, formal evidence was accepted without being heard.

The charge against Pappakeriazes alleges that: "Within six months prior to March 3, 1941, Michael Pappakeriazes, alias Pappas, did unlawfully by falsely representing that he had a lot in Port Colborne upon which a theatre was being built, obtain from John Michael the sum of $500, which he received with intent to defraud contrary to the provisions of Section 405 of the Criminal Code."

The first charge preferred against Pappakeriazes by Detective ed Buckett alleged that the sum was $668. The new charge, however, fixes the sum involved at $500.

Laraine Day and Robert Young as a girl accused of murder and the lawyer who defends her in the most thrilling courtroom drama to reach the screen in years. "The Trial of Mary Dugan," now on the Belle Theatre screen. "Ride Kelly, Ride,' is the co-hit.

GENERAL WAVELL HONORED

London, May 9 —(CP)— The commander in chief of the British forces of the Middle East, Gen. Sir Archibald P. Wavell, has been decorated with the Grand Cross of the Order of King George I. by King George II of Greece, the London Gazette announced today.

THE WAR TODAY

By GUY RHOADES

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Armed conflict between British troops and dissident Iraqis allied to the pro-Nazi coup d'etat government of Rashid Ali Al Gailani appeared waning today and British observers believed it would end soon owing to British superiority in arms and Iraq indifferent or opposition to Rashid Ali.

The premier himself was reported today in the Egyptian press to be in flight from Baghdad where popular opposition to his regime was said to have taken a violent turn.

British sources said some opposition had been shown to new landings of British troops at Basra, Iraq Persian Gulf port, and that some riots had occurred and been quelched without serious consequences. There was no immediate indication that Mohammedan feelings elsewhere in the Middle East had been aroused against Britain, despite Axis efforts to inflame them.

Elsewhere the mid-eastern situation appeared quiet. Tobruk, British desert outpost in Italian Libya, still stood despite axis fulminations and boasts that its forces were about to take the fortress.

Since the axis expansion began Ethiopia has been the first conquered country restored to its own people and the restoration of the Little Lion of Judah has been hailed by some as the first sign of a turn in the axis tide.

German plane attacks at the Dover balloon barrage were watched with interest in case they indicated an invasion feeler—an attempt to test the strength of defences against air forces which must cover any seaborne force approaching England—or a "war-of-nerves" stroke designed to give authorities a false notion that an invasion attempt might be imminent.

Extensive Program Of Road Improvement Planned By County

Purchases of material for maintenance and construction of the county roads and bridges system during the coming year featured the regular meeting of the Hastings County Council Roads and Bridges Committee at its regular meeting held in Shire Hall on Thursday.

Bituminous dustlayer, which will be sprayed on the road system in late May and early June was purchased from the British American Oil Company and the Imperial Oil Company. A used truck, which will be utilized for general purpose work on the system was also ordered purchased by the committee. Surface-treating materials purchases were ordered to be laid over until the July meeting of the committee.

Turning to new construction and maintenance, the committee decided to widen and regrade one and one-half miles of the Belleville-Madoc road northward from end of the pavement at Ivanhoe to the Canadian Pacific Railway crossing.

Three Crushers Operating

Work already done this year, it was pointed out by Road Superintendent W. L. Langlois, includes the resurfacing of the Harold-Ivanhoe road. County crushers, three in all, are operating in various parts of the county. One is working in the vicinity of Coe Hill where resurfacing of the Harold-Minto road will soon get under way. Another has completed the resurfacing of the Minto road ten miles south of Madoc.

The third crusher is working at the Glen Ross pit in Sidney Township preparing material for the resurfacing of the Stirling-Campbellford road near Anson.

The county has purchased crushed rock from Thurlow Township for the resurfacing of four miles of the Frankford-Foxboro Road. The remaining five miles of this road will be treated with crushed gravel secured from Sidney township. Three and one-half miles of the Wallbridge road and one mile of Mudcat Lane will also be resurfaced.

The spraying of oil and bituminous material has been awarded to the Lennox Construction Company of Napanee. The committee will hold its annual two-day inspection of the roads system next week.

Twenty Recruits Needed For AA. Battery

The 3-47th Battery, crack field artillery unit of this district the personnel of which is composed of many young men of this city and district, has been transformed from a twenty-five pound-gun unit to an anti-aircraft battery and is now known as the 47th Light Anti-Aircraft Battery, 1st armored division, according to Lieut. H. E. Plummer and Sergeant-Major Cecil Holway, representatives of the unit now in the city.

The unit, now at present in training at Petawawa training centre, is attached to the 1st Armored Division and will go overseas as a unit.

Its ranks depleted from its original strength through sickness and physical imperfections, the battery now needs twenty recruits to bring it up to fighting strength.

This is an opportunity the officers pointed out, for potential anti-aircraftmen to join a battery, that will be highly trained in its particular sphere and which will go overseas as a complete unit.

Joining the battery also affords young men of the city and district the opportunity to join the fighting service and at the same time be in a familiar environment, for, as has been before mentioned a number of Belleville residents are members of the unit.

Potential recruits may secure additional information by telephoning 1093-J or 1,106 where Lieut. Plummer and Sergt. Major Holway will be available. The officers will remain here till Sunday, and hope to take the required twenty recruits with them when they join their unit.

Major J. H. Van Steenburgh, former officer commanding the 34th Field Battery here is in command of the new battery.

Camp Borden 'Bullet' Goes To 12 Pages

Camp Borden, Ont., May 10 (CP). —The Camp Borden "Bullet", a newspaper written for and by men of the Canadian army at the Dominion's largest military camp, "grows up" today with publication of its first 12-page edition.

The only publication of its size or type among the armed forces in Canada, the paper was established last Jan. 3 and since then 19 issues, all of eight pages, have been turned out. Today it takes a major step forward with publication of the bigger issue.

Under the editorship of Pte. Phil Daniels, veteran of the first Great War and a former Toronto newspaperman, the "Bullet" covers the news of the camp and items from outside of interest to the soldiers.

Various units have reporters who send in the news of their section.

Published In Midland.

The "Bullet" is published by a Midland firm and sent the 50 miles to camp by truck. It has a circulation of 7,500 copies weekly and a survey made last week showed well over 1,000 copies are mailed out each week to soldiers' families.

Working with Pte. Daniels as sub editors are Lieut. Ross Hamilton, member of the famous "Dumbells" entertainment group of the first Great War, G. W. Dill, Sgt. K. S. Fenwick, Sgt. R. R. Cockburn, and Representatives of the Y.M.C.A., Canadian Legion, Salvation Army, and Knights of Columbus, Auxiliary Service organizations.

Protective Measures Against Mosquitoes

Those who spend time outdoors, either for recreation or otherwise, are likely to be subjected from time to time to attacks by mosquitoes and blackflies, especially during spring and early summer. Other biting flies such as the stable fly, the hore fly the deer fly, and the tiny midgets known as punkies or "no-see-ums", whose bites are "tiny needle-points of pain" are troublesome pests in certain areas, but are not so widespread, numerous and annoying as mosquitoes and blackflies. Any measures that can be taken to secure protection from these bloodthirsty insects will result in more comfort and efficiency in work and increased enjoyment of outdoor recreation.

A pamphlet on this subject entitled "Methods of protection against biting flies" is available free of charge from the Publicity and Extension Division, Dominion Department of Agriculture, Ottawa. This contains numerous practical suggestions on simple protective measures that may be taken, and gives several formulae of mixtures or fly dopes that are of value in warding off attacks when applied to exposed parts of the skin. Among these are (1), oil of citronella 3 oz., spirits of camphor 1 oz., oil of tar 1 oz., castor oil 4 to 6 oz.; (2) oil of citronella 1 oz., spirits of camphor 1 oz., oil of cedar 1-2 oz., castor oil 2 oz.; (3) oil of lavender 1 oz., oil of citronella 1 oz., castor oil 2 oz.; (4) pyrethrum extract 30 lb. extract) 1 oz., oil of thyme 1-2 oz., castor oil 2-3 oz. The purpose of the castor oil (which may be substituted by olive oil or petrolatum) is to serve as a carrier and to retard the loss of the essential oils. It may be omitted from formulae 2 and 3 if desired. Formula 4 has been found particularly satisfactory and is popular among workers and others in forested areas where biting flies are plentiful. All the oils mentioned can be bought at a nominal price from any drug store.

CRUDE RUBBER, OIL, COPPER TRUMP CARDS

Only Quick and Total Victory Can Save Germany, Says Lord Halifax

END OF DOMINATION

Minneapolis, May 9 (CP)—Oil, copper and crude rubber are the "trump cards in the hands of freedom" and constitute a challenge "to those doubting minds which cannot see certain assurance of the ultimate collapse and defeat of Hitler," Viscount Halifax said today

Only a quick and total victory can save Germany, Lord Halifax, British Ambassador to the United States, told the Minneapolis Rotary Club. The answer to the question, "can Hitler be defeated?" lies partly in the United States in its great mills, shipbuilding plants and factories and "partly in the resolution of the British people."

The address was the second made by the Ambassador on a seven-day tour of the midwestern United States, began yesterday, to determine the sentiment of the people toward Britain and the war. He spoke last night in Chicago saying that Germany's domination of 164,000,000 people "carries within it the seeds of its own destruction."

He continued:

"Today, fortunately, there are signs that the time is approaching when every unit of totalitarian production will be met by two units of free production, and here I mean not only industrial output but raw materials and foodstuffs as well.

Forced to Draw on Reserves

"And the day must soon come when the Nazis will be no longer able to find fresh loot as they have found it in France, Holland, Denmark and other ravaged countries, and will be forced to draw still deeper on their reserves.

"Gradually the deluded people of Germany will discover that the essential reserves of supply for which they have slaved and starved and foregone their liberty are exhausted and that they are left to face the crushing strength of the forces of freedom, armed, fed, supplied and inspired by the limitless resources of America's gigantic wealth and help.

"When the history of that day is written it will be clear that the genius of industrial co-ordination will have played an equal part with the genius of military strategy."

"Oil is the vital source of power for the modern army, and together the United States and the British Commonwealth of Nations dispose of some 70 per cent of the world supply," he said. "Eighty-five per cent of the world's copper is still beyond Hitler's reach and no less than 91 per cent of the crude rubber. These are the trump cards in the hands of freedom."

Vichy Said Agreeable To Passage Of German Troops Through Syria

London, May 9 (CP)—Reuters News Agency quoted the Berlin correspondent of the Swiss Basler Nachrichten today as reporting it was believed that the Vichy Government had agreed to the passage of German troops through French provinces and mandated territories—including Syria.

This, it was reported, was thought to be Germany's price for German concessions concerning the occupation of the French homeland.

Syria, the correspondent was quoted as saying, now seems to be "at Germany's disposal."

The last shipment of "smokes" forwarded to Britain left Canada in March and the Club would like to send a further shipment in the near future. Residents of Trenton who desire to help along in replenishing the boys' depleted supply of Canadian cigarettes are requested to get in touch with the president of the Trenton Good Cheer Club, Mr. E. Pretty Wedding Solemnized

A quiet, but pretty wedding was solemnized in the rectory of St. Peter-in-Chains Church at eleven o'clock on Wednesday morning, when Florence Margaret, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. McDonnell, became the bride of Henry Price, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Price of Trenton. Rev. Father O'Neill officiated.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was charming in a pale blue afternoon frock with matching turban. She carried a bouquet of red roses and fern.

Attending her was Miss Veronica McCormick, who was dressed in old rose with matching hat, and wore a corsage of pink roses. The groom was assisted by Raymond McDonnell, brother of the bride.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's mother, where Mrs. McDonnell received. She was wearing a navy sheer frock and wore a corsage of yellow roses. Mrs. Price accompanied Mrs. McDonnell and was wearing a flowered sheer and a corsage of red roses.

The couple left on a motor trip to points west, the bride travelling in a navy suit with navy and white accessories. Upon their return they will live in Trenton.

Flight Sergeant Ernest Claude Reid, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Reid, Scott Street, is still at St. Thomas Air Station, and was not among those airmen reported missing in the recent sinking of a passenger liner.

A photograph of Flight Sergeant Reid appeared in a Toronto paper stating that he was among those missing, but it was learned from Mr. and Mrs. Reid that their son is still at St. Thomas.

Two established Trenton business firms will shortly move to new premises. When the new store and apartment block now being rushed to completion, by W. H. Ireland is ready for occupation, Eaton's Order Office and Murray and Bristow, the Tamblyn Drug Store, will occupy the two stores in the block.

There will be four new apartments in the block when the building is eventually completed.

A new Neon sign will inform soldiers and sailors of the location of the Salvation Army Red Shield centre. The old sign was removed due to erection of the Ireland block and Captain Hewitt has completed arrangements for the new sign.

Rev. C. B. Brethen, former pastor of Grace United Church, Trenton, has accepted a call to Richmond Hill. Mr. Brethen has been at Woodville for the past seven years.

AT THE BELLE

"The Trial of Mary Dugan"

"The Trial of Mary Dugan" brings a new romantic team and plenty of excitement to the screen of the Belle theatre tonight. The acting duo is composed of Robert Young and Laraine Day. And the excitement came in romance, comedy and drama of rare cinematic quality.

In the title role, Miss Day tops her dramatic achievements in "Foreign Correspondent" and "The Bad Man." It is the fullest role of her career and her performance justifies her recently acquired title as "the autstanding young actress of 1940."

"Ride Kelly, Ride", Exciting

One of the most exciting racing dramas ever brought to the screen is "Ride, Kelly, Ride" 20th Century-Fox film which is the companion feature attraction. Thrilling from start to finish, the film has all the pulse-pounding action of the sport-of-kings. It depicts the appealing story of a boy and a girl and a thoroughbred that wouldn't be beaten.

Eugene Pallette, Marvin Stephens, Rita Quigley and Mary Healy head the strong featured cast of "Ride, Kelly, Ride." It was based on one of Peter B. Kyne's popular novels and packs all of the roaring drama of the race track.

"Sea Wolf," Thrilling Drama

Edward G. Robinson, Ida Lupino and John Garfield head the cast of "The Sea Wolf," Warner Bros. screen version of the famous Jack London novel opening next at the Belle theatre. The screen play which was adopted from London's novel by Robert Rossen, tells the powerful story of Wolf Larsen, most feared and hated captain who ever sailed the seas. Michael Curtiz, master of the action drama, directed. Also featured are Gene Lockhart, Barry Fitzgerald, Alexander Knox, Stanley Ridges, Francis McDonald, Howard da Silva, and a supporting cast of hundreds of other players in the season's greatest action drama.

"Tortoise Beats the Hare," is the title of a funny color cartoon to be presented on the same program with the Belle latest world news events. On Saturday matinee The Dead End Kids appear in the closing chapter of "Junior G-Men" serial. Continuous shows will be presented on Saturday.

AT THE McCARTHY

"Penny Serenade"

Excitingly reunited in George Stevens' "Penny Serenade", Irene Dunne and Cary Grant come to the McCarthy Theatre, all next week, in what has been acclaimed by Hollywood as the greatest romantic drama of the year. Vivid, absorbing story of an errant newspaperman and his wife, "Penny Serenade" is based upon Martha Cheavens' magazine novel adapted to the screen by Morris Ryskind, and enacted by a stellar cast which includes Beulah Bondi and Edgar Buchanan. You'll praise "Penny Serenade" as the best entertainment to come out of Hollywood in many a day, put it on your "must see' memo without fail.

"The Leather-Pushers"

Alive with thrills, laughter and romance, Universal's new prize-fight drama "The Leather-Pushers" now at the McCarthy Theatre, should be rated one of the outstanding action films of the season.

Literally carrying a punch in every scene, the production provides co-stars Richard Arlen and Andy (Hi-Ya Buck) Devine with what is probably their top-co-starring effort to date.

Set against the colorful background of the prize-ring, the film zips through a series of exciting sequences climaxed by a spectacular battle between Arlen and an opponent for the right to battle the champion. Expertly inter-woven are humorous and romantic sequences.

Arlen in the role of a boxer handles his assignment in an excellent fashion, and Andy Devine furnishes many laughs.

Astrid Allwyn, appearing in her first romantic portrayal, ably acquits herself. Supporting roles of Horace MacMahon, Shemp Howard, Douglas Fowley, Eddie Gribbon and others are well done.

Edith Fellows

Edith Fellows in a light comedy-drama, second feature presentation "Her First Romance," plus an excellent Walt Disney Donald Duck cartoon and the second chapter of "The Green Archer" entitled "The Face at The Window" makes the above program an excellent week-end bill of entertainment for McCarthy Theatre patrons. The entire program will run continuous on Saturday.

Falls 5,000 Feet In Eight Seconds

Toronto, May 9 (CP)—Piloting a crippled bombing plane halfway across the Atlantic to a safe landing in Britain was a thrill for FO. James J. Meikle of Toronto but a greater thrill was his arrival home on leave this week and his introduction to his 18-day-old son.

His wife, the former Catherine Carr of Victoria, B.C., met Meikle in England four years ago and she came back to Canada two months ago to meet his parents for the first time.

FO. Meikle said that "it wasn't any skill on our part but just plain luck that brought the ship out of the uncontrolled spiral," after the big flying boat that he and five others were taking to England somehow lost its ailerons high over the middle of the Atlantic.

"None of our crew got excited but we all figured we were done for. If the ailerons which joggled loose had been torn off completely we might have righted the ship sooner, but the leading edge on each remained and one side had more wind-drag than the other. It gave the plane a tendency to spiral and turn over on its back."

The plane fell 5,000 feet in eight seconds and was only 400 feet above the water when the dragging ailerons by a fluke vibrated into an equal position and allowed the plane to level off.

The Day in Parliament

By The Canadian Press.

TODAY

The House will consider private bills and estimates.

YESTERDAY

The House continued the budget debate; heard Justice Minister Lapointe condemn the views on the war expressed Wednesday by Maxime Raymond (Lib. Beauharnois-Laprairie) and Mr. Raymond's brief reply; Angus MacInnis (C.C.F. Vancouver East) move an amendment to the budget resolution calling for nationalization of the financial system; H. R. Jackman (Con. Toronto-Rosedale) urge preservation of the capitalistic and profit-motive system until something better has been devised to replace it; Rodney Adamson (Con. York West) estimate Canada's minimum requirements are an army, navy and air force totalling 300,000 men.

To encourage the production of cotton in Australia the government has continued its bounty for five more years.

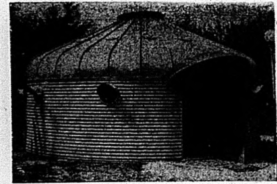
AT PLANE FACTORY DEDICATION

Wendell Willkie, RIGHT, and Sir Henry Self, LEFT, director-general of the British air commission, share southern fried chicken at Nashville, Tenn., where they spoke at dedication of a new $9,000,000 Vultee Aircraft plant.

BATTERED — BUT UNBOWED

Mother's head is done up in bandages, but the youngsters keep their spirits up as she leads them from their bomb-blasted London home after recent Nazi air raid. They are bound for safety in some other area.

SOLUTION TO DEFENCE HOUSING PROBLEM?



A prefabricated house of radical design, looking like an offspring of a grain bin, has been submitted to the U.S. division of defence housing authority for inspection by government officials. Acute shortage of housing in defence areas was given as the reason. The interior is divided into four rooms by canvas partitions. Manufacturers state their plant is capable of turning out 1,000 units per day at the approximate cost of $750 per unit.

BRITISH SOLDIERS EVACUATED FROM GREECE

This picture was approved by the British censors and is the first to arrive on this continent following the British evacuation of Greece following the Axis victory in that country. Over 45,000 of the 60,000 British soldiers who had been battling the invading Germans were safely removed from Greece. Here we see some of those thousands at an unidentified port after disembarking from the ships that carried them from Greece.

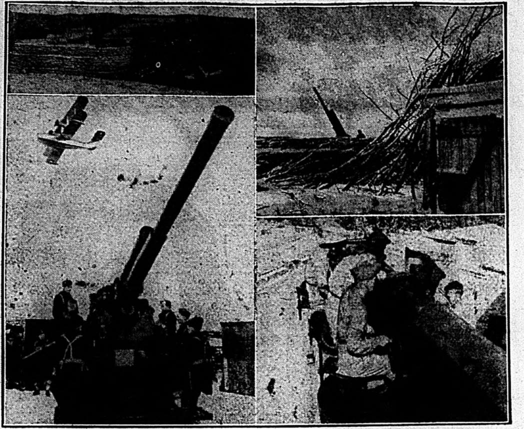
CONSTANT WATCH KEPT ON CANADA'S COAST LINES



Modern anti-aircraft guns protect Canada's eastern and western coasts as well as heavy shore batteries. The long slim barrel of the business-like anti-aircraft guns shown in upper left picture points threateningly skyward, ready to pour steel into any marauding enemy plane that may venture on this side of the Atlantic; in the hands of an experienced crew, these 3.7 guns can fire twelve rounds a minute. Upper right picture shows one of the same sandbagged AA guns in its winter setting. Lower left, one of 3.7 ack-acks manned by its crew, while a giant Stranraer coastal patrol plane soars overhead. Lower right picture shows the four man crew of a height and range finder with their eyes peering through telescopic sights to catch marauding planes; dials record the findings of this instrument, and those findings are transmitted electrically to the predictor, nerve centre of modern AA batteries.

CONSTANT WATCH KEPT ON CANADIAN COAST LINES

Members of a coast anti-aircraft battery are shown in the upper left picture at one of the listening devices which are turned on the sky night and day; so sensitive is this equipment, that the sound of a locomotive whistle a mile away creates an almost deafening racket in the ears of the operators. Another kind of listening device is shown in upper right picture; they are sound locators which will detect airplanes long before they are within sight, and automatically direct the powerful beams of adjoining searchlights such as the one shown immediately under. Lower left is the nerve centre of an anti-aircraft battery; this impressive, compact instrument which requires a crew of six, is the mathematical brain of modern AA batteries; it records the measurements of the height and range finders, and to the expert its vacillating needles and gauges are unfailing aids in pointing the gun, determining its trajectory and insuring a high proportion of hits.

AUSSIES READY IN THE RUBBER COUNTRY

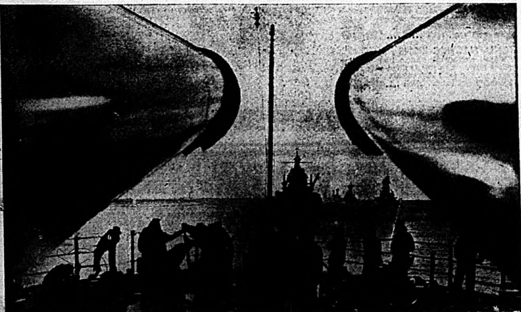
A squad of Australian troops, some of the thousands that have been poured into Singapore and other strongholds in Malaya since the Japanese began making threatening gestures, is shown at bayonet practice among the rubber trees. The rubber plantations of Malaya are the largest in the world—one of the reasons that Japan would like to take the peninsula into her "new order for Asia."

CONSTANT WATCH KEPT ON CANADA'S COAST LINES

Night and day, in fair weather and foul, fighting men of Canada's forces keep vigil at strategic points along the Dominion's eastern and western coast lines, and threatening muzzles of coastal battery guns sweep the sea approaches. Every calibre guns such as those shown in the upper left picture cover the sea approaches on the Pacific coast; skillfully camouflaged and even more skillfully manned, they are in constant readiness to hurl steel at any mishap. While the guns are pointed seaward, their crews perform their regular drill sessions, as shown in upper right picture. Lower left shows a gun crew on the east coast in action during a drill session.

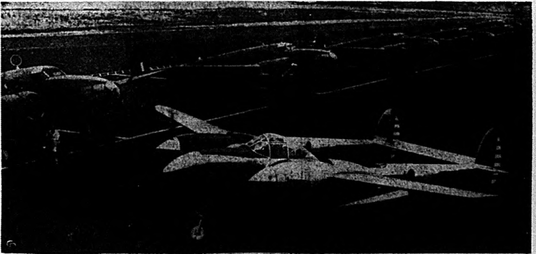
Even during their leisure hours, the men are on duty, as can be seen in lower right picture; when indulging in a game of cribbage, they sit by their rifles with bayonets fixed, and their helmets beside them and their gas masks in readiness. Coast guard duty includes all sorts of war operations so far short of actual fighting.

U.S. WAR SECRETARY URGES AMERICAN NAVY AID IN DELIVERY OF MUNITIONS



Immediate use of the United States' navy "to make the seas secure for the delivery of munitions to Britain" was urged by U.S. War Secretary Henry L. Stimson in an address broadcast to the entire nation. Mr. Stimson warned the American people it would at least be another year before the U.S. would have an army and air force adequate to defend itself against a victorious Axis. A powerful unit of the American navy is the U.S.S. Pennsylvania, ABOVE, which is armed with 14-inch guns, two of which may be seen in this picture.

AMERICA'S FASTEST PLANE CLOCKED AT 458 MILES AN HOUR



A powerful addition to any nation's fighting force is this new Lockheed P-38 interceptor, one of the first to come off the production line at the Lockheed plant [illegible] bank, Calif. After the P-38 was clocked at 458 miles an hour in its first public performance, army air corps officials acclaimed it as "America's fastest plane." In the background, ABOVE, are several of the now-famous Lockheed Hudson bombers waiting to be flown to England for service with the R.A.F. Interceptor P-38's will soon be taking their place in the sky over Britain, too. They are armed with both cannon and machine-guns and are powered by Allison motors.

"DAUGHTER OF DESTINY"

By ELEANOR ATTERBURY COLTON

CHAPTER XVI

Jose Macias waiting for Devona in the lobby, smiled instant approval. "You are beautiful tonight, Devona," he murmured, his hand on he. elbow.

So it was "Devona" already, she noticed. The "Miss Raebourne" of the afternoon, replaced already. "Thank you," and kept her smile casual.

The El Mexicano lobby was as crowded as the Brownstone's had been deserted. Macias, as he took her wrap, handed it to a white-capped maid, ran an appraising glance over Devona's smooth white shoulders, her softly rounded breast, her slim straight litheness, moulded by the soft velvet.

"Very beautiful, Devona," he said again and smiled—a smile that sent a little chill to the tips of her toes.

"Thank you," flushing in spite of herself. "You are very kind."

What Did He Mean?

"No," he raised an eyebrow at her as he led her toward a small table where two waiters hovered lucky."

Devona wouldn't let herself hear that. Instead, she slipped into the chair Macias held for her, glanced quickly around the room. If Dale should see her now——

The room held not Dale, but hundreds of beautifully dressed women and their good-looking escorts. Some in evening dress, some in expensively careless sports clothes some in business grays. All obviously pleasure-seeking. All just as obviously accustomed to paying well for their entertainment. A hot-spot Dale had called this. An expensive one, anyway. But a strange collection of people at that—a man who looked as if he might be an underworld baron, dancing with a girl young enough to be a baby star.

The dinner Macias ordered was excellent. And Devona smiled at herself, she'd learned to appreciate good dinners! Relaxing a little over the coffee and creme de menthe, she tried to believe she'd been overly suspicious of her smiling host. The conversation had been casual, almost commonplace.

Macias smiled at her and asked: "You—like it here?"

"Of course. It's fascinating."

It was, too. Interesting-looking people; gay, haunting music; excellent food; a sort of well-behaved carnival spirit pervading it all. Who wouldn't find it fascinating!

An unwanted memory turned up suddenly. "Interesting but no place for a sweet kid like you," Dale had said once. Little did he know, she thought bitterly. And little had she known then what would be his share in the circumstances that had sent her here—no longer a child no longer able to choose where she would go!

"Good. I'm glad you like it. And do you think you will like singing the songs my troubadours play?" Macias went on nodding toward the three guitar-strumming musicians who wandered from table to table plucking out stirding Spanish melodies from their soft-throated instruments.

"Yes—I'll—love it!" she fibbed extravagantly.

"Good." He reached for her hand, pressed it gently.

Her First Song

Forcing her fingers into impassivity, she let them lie cool and limp in his warm hand for an instant. Then, as if unaware that she did it, withdrew them, pretended to refasten a loosened curl.

"And now—would you like to sing for us?"

"Now!" Stage fright struck her. "Oh—I——"

"The first song you sing for me this morning," he smiled. "I think my patrons will like it."

He announced her then and there was a spattering of applause, and a little murmur trailed her up to the platform. She must do her best, prove to Macias he hadn't been mistaken in giving her this job. She should be — she was everlastingly grateful to him. She'd show him that now.

But standing there, alone, and terribly frightened, in the glaring isolation of the white spotlight she knew she was failing. Her voice, faltering, unsure of the notes, lost in the huge dining room, sounded like some stranger's. Nervousness jerked at her knees, made her mouth dry, contracted her throat. It was awful.

She sang two numbers. And that was two too many, she thought miserably as she slipped back to the table where Macias waited.

"I'm terribly sorry. That was so awful," she gasped, sank trembling into her chair.

He smiled. "You were frightened, that's all. You will get over that. And with the costumes and the real Spanish songs—they will like you all right. You'll see."

Grateful for that straw of encouragement, Devona smiled. "You really think so."

She Signs Contract

"But of course. Come. I'll prove it." Rising he led the way to that foyer.

Closing the door on the gayety outside, Macias moved to the polished desk, took a long, formidable-looking document from a drawer. "Suppose we draw up a little contract."

"A contract!" Devona echoed, puzzled. "But that won't be necessary, will it? I mean, I'm so grateful for the opportunity——"

Macias unscrewed the cap to his fountain pen. "A contract will be a protection to—both of us," he said, calmly filled in blanks on the long sheet. "First—your name. Devona Raebourne is too long." He thought a moment. "We'll call you—Dona Carlotta."

Devona shrugged. A new job. A new life. A new name. Perhaps even a new fate. What difference did it make! No one had tried to find Devona Raebourne. No one would ever hunt for Dona Carlotta!

Then, as Macias talked on, she realized that her hours on this job would be long—the cocktail hour until 2 when the bar closed. Her costumes must be paid for out of her small salary. Her songs would be selected by Manuel and the three troubadours. Her tips would be hers to keep.

Her Future

Tips! Devona throttled her pride. Tips for what? Dancing it seemed with patrons who needed a partner. Playing hostess to parties Macias wished entertained.

She set her jaw, banished her last convent-bred scruple to the dark closets of her mind. This was a job. She'd tackled it. She'd see it through. She had to. There was no other way out.

With fingers that shook until her signature was almost unreadable, she affixed her name to the document that bound her and Macias for one year from date. That Rubicon was crossed, she thought as Macias blotted the signature carefully, laid the paper in a drawer. Desperately, she fought the feeling that she'd sold herself. A year wasn't long. She could stand anything for a year. And by that time maybe some other solution would be possible.

"Now—may I take you home?" he smiled again.

"Yes—please," and waited quietly while he sent for her wraps, ordered the car.

Startling News

On the sidewalk outside the club, a newsboy shouted an extra. For a moment, Devona didn't notice. Then her glance snagged on the glaring black headline. ASSISTANT D. A. FACES DEATH, she read and her breath stopped in her throat. Assistant D. A. But that was Dale.

The boy held the paper toward her beseechingly. "Paper miss?"

"Assistant Dale Brasher injured in gun battle," she read and her eyes looked at the blurry picture of him.

Dale—hurt! But how badly. Was he—had they——

"Well, our young friend Brasher getting into difficulties," Macias, at her elbow, drew her back to herself.

She nodded, turned deliberately and stepped into the waiting limousine. "Yes, it looks that way."

Macias, seating himself beside her, smiled strangely. "You are interested? Shall I get a paper for you?"

Devona shook her head.

"No; not at all interested." And, hating herself for the clamor her heart had set up, hoped devoutedly that Macias hadn't noticed her confusion.

But once back in the hotel, she snatched a paper from the stands, took it, trembling, up to her tiny room. There she read every word. About the raid Dale had planned, the terrifying exchange of gunfire, of his being wounded, shot through the lung, of the ultimate escape of the gunmen. And suddenly she was remembering a conversation by a moonlit pool.

"It's uncanny," Dale had said. "Just when I think I have it all set, someone tips them off."

And now he was hurt—perhaps seriously. Hungrily she studied the blurred newspaper picture. Dale all right. The same straight jaw line, same clear-eyed expression, same obvious determination in those fearless blue eyes.

She Cannot Forget

Then her fingers closed fiercely over the page, crushed it into a tight ball, flung it into the metal wastebacket, where it dropped with a dull thud. And, sobbing, she flung herself face down on the hard bed.

Fearless blue eyes that had looked squarely at her and pretended to speak of love. Love! You only asked of life that it give you love and loyalty. Instead, you got heartbreak. Her slim, tired body shook as she wept until all tears seemed drained from her, leaving only dry, racking sobs.

Finally she sat up, dried her eyes resolutely. "Daughter of a strange destiny," she said aloud. Maybe that had to be, she thought wryly. But there was no use weeping because life wouldn't behave like a pretty dress.

Then, even as she slipped out of the pretty red velvet, hung it in the back of her closet, she tried to put Dale out of her thoughts. She'd learn to forget him eventually. She'd learn to hate him. With every shred of pride and self-respect she had. He'd imposed on her. She'd never forgive him for that. And she didn't really care now what happened to him—ever.

Tomorrow she'd meet Macias for luncheon, as he'd "invited" her to do. After that she'd begin her new life.

"Devona Raebourne is dead," she said to the pretty red gown. "Long live Dona Carlotta!"

Little Benny's Note Book

After supper ma was sitting with her hands in her lap saying, O deer, O deer.

Not saying it about anything special, and after a while pop said, You sigh very gracefully, my deer, but just a same I'd rather hear the well known tinkle to your fairy laughter.

O deer, I just dont seem to feel there's anything to tinkle about at the moment, ma said, and pop said, How can you say that, wearing such a stunning gown? Is it new? he said.

Now that's the last straw, that adds the final mil stone around my neck, that really does make me feel like jumping in a far off lake, ma said and pop said Yee gods what happened? I didn't do a thing, somebody pushed me. What did I say? I said you had a lovely dress, at least that's what I meant to say, but I didn't start to learn English till I was 2 and a half years old, he said.

This dress is just the very cause of all my depression, ma said. It's as old as the ancient hills, but I thought I might as well get a few economical days wear out of it before I discard it or throw it away, and you calmly and coolly ask me if it's new after having seen it on me since the year one. That shows how much attention you pay to my clothes it shows I could wear a discolored mass of ragged tatters and you'd never know the faintest difference, she said, and pop said, It shows nothing of the kind. If you want to know precisely what it shows, it shows that in my opinion you'd look like a queen among Parisian women if you were dressed in 4 bath towels and a sponge, that's how much naturel class you've got in my estimation. Of course it's only one man's opinion but by gollies I'm the man, he said.

Being a swell answer and making ma feel so much better she felt always better as soon as pop asked her if she wanted to go to a movie.

BRITISH SHIPPING LOSSES CONTINUE TO MOUNT

Mannheim Object Of Concentrated Attack By R. A. F.

Smaller Number Of Bombers Blast Industrial Berlin

EXTENSIVE FIRES

London, May 10 —(CP)— A "concentrated and destructive" attack on Mannheim, railway nerve centre of southwestern Germany, and Ludwigshafen, just across the Rhine, was carried out by the Royal Air Force last night, the Air Ministry announced today, while a smaller number of bombers blasted industrial Berlin.

Extensive fires were left burning among docks and factory sections at Mannheim and Ludwigshafen, a communique said.

The Air Ministry said "powerful high explosives did immense damage on both sides of the Rhine and incendiaries contributed largely to the work of destruction" in Mannheim and its sister city.

One pilot observed 27 fires at once. Another saw a large Mannheim factory burned out.

"There were fires in all parts of the town, among the docks and railway goods (freight) yards and in the area occupied by the Ludwingshafen chemical factory," the ministry's news service added.

Polish Squadrons Assist

Jolish squadrons participated in the raids on the cities, which face each other across the Rhine. All the crews saw their bombs burst in the target area except four "whose explosions were lost in a welter of fire and smoke."

A bomber which attacked Berlin fired on a Messerschmitt en route, watched it go out of control, and then continued to the German capital to unload its heavy explosives.

Docks at the invasion ports of Calais, Ostend and Boulogne, the harbor at Kristiansand, Norway, and Ijmuiden, in The Netherlands, and airports in Norway and France also were attacked.

Several planes bombed factories in Berlin.

Offensive night patrols were conducted over German airdromes in Northern France, where fighters lay in wait to strike at returning raiders.

Five British aircraft were missing from all operations.

Fierce dogfights occurred over sun-lit Dover Strait at a height of five or six miles today as German reconnaissance planes returned after a comparatively light night attack on England.

Slovak Borders Are Reported Closed

Budapest, May 10 —(AP)— New restrictions in railway traffic in western Hungary and Slovakia were made effective today and the Slovak frontiers were reported closed, but it was not explained whether this was to facilitate new German troop movements.

It was recalled, however, that Hungarian rail restrictions in December permitted the transit of troops to Rumania, preceding German military occupation of Bulgaria.

SHIPS, PLANES URGENT NEED

Navy Minister Speaks to Newspaper Association Meeting in Hamilton

Hamilton, May 10 (CP)—Ships and planes form the most urgent needs of the British Empire in the fight against Germany and Italy, Navy Minister Macdonald said last night in an address before the Ontario-Quebec division of The Canadian Weekly Newspapers' Association.

"We must have ships and more ships to carry help to Britain and to hold off the invader from that island," said the Navy Minister. "We must have planes and still more planes to meet the German threat to Britain from the air."

Men of the volunteer reserve have won praise from the highest officers in the Royal Navy, Mr. Macdonald said earlier. Twenty five Canadian sailors have been decorated or mentioned in dispatches since the start of the war.

In his address Mr. Macdonald referred to the Versailles Treaty and the "20 foolish years" that followed the treaty. Those years he called "the years of cowardice, the years of compromise, the years of appeasement." He said that for 20 years pacifism flourished and because of that Germany had every reason "to make up its mind that our national vigor was on the decline, that the quality of our manhood was deteriorating, that we would not and could not fight."

BERLIN ADMITS RAID

Berlin, May 10 (AP). — British planes last night caused a number of casualties in the centre of Berlin and started fires in industrial Mannheim, the German high command acknowledged today.

Seven British planes, it was claimed, were shot down.

(The British Air Ministry announced that only two bombers were missing from the attacks on Germany.)

The bombs which fell in Berlin struck a congested district, it was reported. There was no precise figure on the casualty toll.

Says 500,000 Casualties on Enemy

Bournemouth, May 10 (CP) — Brig.-Gen. Lord Croft, Under-Secretary for War, told an audience last night that empire armies had inflicted "400,000 casualties on our enemies at extremely small loss in comparison, and stand now as veterans ready to meet the greater menace in the Middle East." He said 200,000 of these casualties had been inflicted on the Italians in Libya, but did not enumerate the others.

ROOSEVELT MOVES TOWARD ACTION ON CONVOY ISSUE

Observers Agree There Is Increase In Sentiment In Favor Of Convoys

PREPARING WAY

By J. F. SANDERSON,
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Washington, May 10 — (CP)— President Roosevelt is moving toward some decisive action on the convoy issue, it is believed here by many political observers.

In the last two weeks, three members of the President's cabinet, State Secretary Cordell Hull, Navy Secretary Frank Knox and War Secretary Henry Stimson, have advocated in speeches naval action to assure a steady flow of American-produced war supplies to Britain.

There is a definite feeling here that the President has been putting up his cabinet officers to prepare public opinion and that when he considers the time is ripe, he himself will make a pronouncement.

Judge Cameron Named Chairman Of Board

Ottawa, May 10—(CP) — Labor Minister McLarty today announced appointment of Judge C. A. Cameron, Belleville, Ont., as chairman of a Board of Conciliation and Investigation to investigate differences between the Schofield Woollen Company, Limited, of Oshawa, Ont., and employees who are members of the Canadian Hosiery Workers' Union. Other members of the board are F. G. Gardiner, K.C., Toronto, nominated by the company, and Drummond Wren, Toronto, nominated by employees.

The dispute arose over demands of employees for an agreement covering wages and working conditions, department officials said.

'Power-Dive' By Two Canada Geese Results In Rib Injuries To Man

Toronto, May 10 (CP)—A "power dive" by two big Canada geese resulted in rib injuries for a resident of York County who was attended by a Toronto physician yesterday.

Some time ago a horse owned by the man stepped on and destroyed a nest belonging to a pair of the birds. The man was riding the same horse yesterday when the geese swooped down on him. Although the rider ducked, the force of the blow was sufficient to knock him from the saddle. And the impact killed one of the geese.

Early British Victory In Iraq Predicted Due To Dominance Of RAF

Cairo, May 10 (AP).—British patrols pressed retreating Iraqis today in the desert north of Habbaniyah airdrome, the British Middle East Command announced, but the Royal Air Force air base and the port of Basra both were quiet.

Informed circles in London expressed confidence today an early British victory in Iraq because of Royal Air Force dominance in the air and the retreat of Iraq troops from Habbaniyah airdrome, where fighting began nine days ago.

A Cairo communique said the R. A. F. also had bombed Iraqi troops out of Rutbah airport, in the western desert, and had reoccupied it.

Britain will demand cessation of hostilities before considering any request for mediation, these quarters said in commenting on Ankara reports that the rebel Iraq defence minister, Madji Shefket, was there asking Turkey to mediate.

The report from Ankara, which had no confirmation here, said Iraq had demanded the withdrawal of all but 2,000 British troops as a requirement for settling the dispute, but informed sources here said any such request would be rejected.

CLAIMS CHIANG WON'T TALK PEACE EXCEPT THRU U. S.

Japanese Ambassador So Quoted — Officials Say Half Century Necessary to Force Settlement on China

SETTLEMENT URGED

Tokyo, May 10 (AP)—Headed home avowedly to discuss means of settling the troublesome "China affair," Japan's Ambassador to Nanking was quoted today as saying Gen Chiang Kai-Shek was determined not to talk peace except through the United States as mediator.

The newspaper Nichi Nichi said in a dispatch from Shanghai that the Ambassador, Kumatore Honda had declared, however, "there can be no peace which will be concluded through mediation of a third nation."

Japanese Editorials Insistent

Honda's return from Nanking via Shanghai to talk with Premier Prince Fumimaro Konoye and Foreign Minister Yoske Matsucka coincided with increasingly insistent editorials in the Japanese press that the China incident be settled quickly to further the progress of Japan's greater east Asia program.

ITALY LISTS APRIL CASUALTIES AT 100,000 MEN

Navy Losses Reported Aggregated 1,068 Killed and 6,203 Missing

AIR FORCE HIT HARD

Rome, May 10—(AP)—Italy listed the April casualties of her armed forces last night at 98,928 killed, wounded and missing, bringing her acknowledged military losses since entering the war last June 10 to 20,251 killed, 50,413 wounded and 141,977 missing.

The cumulative casualty figures showed:

French front, 881 killed, 2,982 wounded, 315 missing; North Africa, 1,318 killed, 2,424 wounded, 91,956 missing; East Africa, 4,247 killed, 8,080 wounded, 16,335 missing; Greek and Yugoslav fronts, 12,155 killed, 34,786 wounded, 25,480 missing.

Naval losses reported aggregated 1,068 killed, 1,152 wounded, 6,203 missing, while air force losses were given as 582 killed, 989 wounded, 1,688 missing.

The War Ministry, meanwhile, postponed calling to arms university students from the ages of 21 to 26 until July 1 because of "special exigencies."

The announcement did not say whether the postponement resulted from demonstrations three days ago by students who opposed a plan to rearrange their examination schedule so they could answer the call to arms June 1.

Authorities anxious to assure the country's food supply announced, too, that leaves of 20 days would be granted farmers under arms in Italy so they could work on their crops.

THE WAR TODAY

By GUY RHOADEES
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

The first anniversary of Germany's attack in the west came around today and found refugee governments of three Nazi-conquered countries still struggling at the side of the British Commonwealth and the free forces of countries overrun before and after they fell.

In London the representatives of Belgium and the Netherlands vowed to continue the fight while in Montreal the government of little Luxembourg continued to function.

While these exiles and their subjects sorrowed over the fate of their homelands Britain's Royal Air Force poured new vengeance on Germany's military industries, striking at Berlin, Mannheim and channel "invasion" ports.

British authorities said the raid on Berlin was conducted by a small number of aircraft, but German authorities said that although the force was small its bombs did considerable damage. The Germans, however, claimed as usual that the damage was confined to apartment buildings in a crowded section.

The chief target last night was Mannheim, great rail and river transportation centre and important manufacturing city at the junction of the Rhine and Neckar rivers.

German raids on Britain tapered to small force and the R.A.F. fighter command reported only three Nazi planes downed, bringing to 124 the number of German aircraft destroyed in forays over the United Kingdom in the first 10 days of May.

Mastering Night Attacks

Most of the German losses this month have been among night bombers, an indication that the R.A.F. is gradually mastering this form of attack as authorities predicted it would.

On the far side of the world cracks appeared in Axis armor and brisk talk was current in Tokyo regarding the chances of ending the "China incident" and bringing peace to the Orient.

Japan's ambassador to the Tokyo sponsored Nanking government was reported heading home while newspapers carrying increasingly outspoken editorials demanding that the undeclared war be ended.

The ambassador, Kumatore Honda, was quoted as having said that Gen. Chiang Kai-Shek, head of the Chinese government, would listen to no peace terms unless they were accompanied by United States meditation.

The ambassador declared that "there can be no peace which will be concluded through mediation of a third nation." Nevertheless, it was noted, he discussed the subject of an end to hostilities at considerable length.

Authorities in Washington said no request for mediation of the Asiatic war had reached them.

The Japanese press suggested it was hopeless to continue fighting a country the size of China and some papers pressed for consolidation of territorial gains already made and settlement of the dispute with China by negotiation to further progress of the new Japanese East Asia program.

REFUGEE GOV'TS OF LOW COUNTRIES PLEDGE LOYALTY

Royal Netherlands Naval Fliers, Using U. S. Planes, Bomb Nazi Airdromes In Norway

FAITH IN BRITAIN

London, May 10 (CP)—Royal Netherland naval fliers, using United States-built Hudson (Lockheed) planes, joined British pilots in attacking Nazi airdromes in Norway last night on the eve of the first anniversary of the German invasion of the Low Countries, the Air Ministry News Service said today.

It was the first time a Netherland squadron "has formed a striking force against objectives in enemy-occupied territory," the report said.

The Hudson planes which were used were said to have been "presented by Netherlands people overseas."

With the co-operation of the British coastal command, The Netherlanders attacked airdromes at Kristiansand and Mandal, both in southern Norway and reported that they kept high explosives and incendiaries dropping most of the night. The crews said numerous fires were started. At the same time docks at Kristiansand were bombed.

Former King Carol Arrives In Bermuda

Hamilton, Bermuda, May 10 (AP) —The United States liner Excambion docked here this morning with former King Carol of Rumania and Mme. Lupescu aboard. The Rumanian flag was flying from the bow.

There was little excitement in Bermuda over arrival of the royal exile, and only a few persons turned out to see him.

The former king and his suite are planning to go from here to Cuba to make their home. An official Bermuda reception was arranged for their arrival.

Shortly before the ship reached Bermuda, Carol sent a ship's radiogram to his son, young King Michael, at Bucharest, saying: "From across the Atlantic, thoughts and love."

Floral Theft Racket Nipped

Chicago, May 10 (AP)—Organized theft of floral pieces from cemeteries—a new racket which authorities said yielded an estimated $100,000 annually—was discovered yesterday by police. Lieut. Alex Notto said the racket, apparently on an organized basis for years, was disclosed by one of three men arrested with a truck load of flowers taken from Mount Carmel Cemetery.

End In Sight For Nazi Nightraider Opinion Of Australian Premier

By J. F. SANDERSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Washington, May 10 (CP).—The end is in sight for the German night raider and its indiscriminate, destructive bombing attacks over Britain, in the opinion of Robert Menzies, prime minister of Australia.

At a press conference here Friday, following a fast side-trip to Ottawa on his way to Australia from Britain Mr. Menzies said the daylight bomber was defeated last August and September and now "we are beginning to see 20, 30 and even 40 night bombers shot down by Britain's defences."

"That is much too great a percentage for Hitler to lose with any degree of satisfaction and I am confident we are beginning a phase that will see the end of the nightraider, just as we saw the end of the day bomber."

He said it would be impertinent for him to tell the United States what it should do but it should be clear to everyone that "on the material side, the mere diversion of some portion of the energy of the American people is not enough."

Hitler, through his conquests, was accumulating new assets, new resources and new labor all the time and his productive capacity had increased greatly in the last year. Behind this was the organizing genius of the German people.

"We are up against something of such enormous manufacturing skill, resources and ability that we must make up our minds that nothing else counts but its defeat," Mr. Menzies declared.

He was asked if he believed that a vast land army would be required eventually to defeat Hitler in Europe. He said he did not know but the first consideration must be to overcome Germany's air superiority.

The ability of the German people to stand up to repeated and heavy bombing attacks has not been tested, he continued, and he suggested "just wait and see what happens when the hitting power of the air force is up to a point where two tons of bombs can be dropped on Germany for every ton dropped on Britain."

He replied "I hope" when asked if he believed the war could be won without open intervention by the United States.

During April Losses Were 488,124 Tons Says the Admiralty

1,098 Ships, British, Allied And Neutral, Aggregating 4,737,407 Tons Sunk In Past Year

EVACUATION LOSSES HIGH

London, May 10 (CP) — Britain, her Allies and the neutrals lost 1,098 ships aggregating 4,734,407 tons in the year since the Nazi invasion of the Low Countries, new Admiralty statistics showed today.

This, chiefly is the toll of British allied and neutral shipping in the battle of the Atlantic but the totals include Britain's losses in the Dunkirk withdrawal in May and June, 1940, and the withdrawal from Greece last month.

During April losses were 488,124 tons, the Admiralty disclosed, a total surpassed by only two previous months in the year—June, 1940, when 533,302 tons were sent to the bottom, and March of this year when the total reached 489,229.

Predicts Next Nazi Move Will Be Against Gibraltar

London, May 10 (CP)—An informant who correctly forecast the German attacks on Yugoslavia and Greece predicted today that Germany's next major move would be against Gibraltar.

"Certain movements in France," this source said, "combined with the fact that Spain is unlikely to be able to offer much resistance, indicate Hitler's next move will be in this corner of Europe.

"It is more logical than an attack on Turkey, where there would be strong resistance."

Moreover, he pointed out that German occupation of Spain would still further advance German bases for the Battle of the Atlantic.

In any event, the informant said he was convinced that Hitler would try every means at his command to knock Britain out in the next six months.

CITY AND DISTRICT NEWS

PART OF LINE FENCE PREY TO FLAMES

Approximately ten feet of line fence running from the rear of Sills' book store to the river bank and across the proposed Riverside Drive, fell prey to flames shortly before nine o'clock Saturday morning when a rubbish pile on the premises in some manner caught ablaze with the fire spreading to the fence before it was discovered. Upon the arrival of the fire department the fence was blazing briskly and suffered considerable damage before the flames were extinguished.

BUD DEVELOPMENT IS MOST RAPID

Present indications are that only clean, high quality apples will be in demand this fall. Now is the time to ensure that end by careful spraying applied at the proper time.

Due to the recent showers and warm weather, bud development on the district orchards has been most rapid, so rapid in fact that many of the sprays are overlapping. This ideal growing weather is also ideal for the development of scab. Consequently, every grower should watch his orchard very carefully and follow the directions given in the spray calendar very closely.

Some orchards are now ready for the Pink Spray, a spray which must receive particular attention by the orchardists as scab spores are very prevalent at this time.

SUGGESTION TO SEEK HIGHER COL'D. CHEESE MAKE NOT SUPPORTED

A suggestion offered by W. R. McCreary local cheese buyer, that the Kingston Cheese Board petition the Dominion Government asking permission to make colored cheese for the domestic trade, fell on deaf ears at opening meeting of Kingston Cheese Board on Thursday afternoon.

Mr. McCreary urged upon the members of the board the necessity of maintaining the domestic market, stating that this can be done, according to his statement, by the Dominion government permitting the manufacture of colored cheese. According to a recent order of the government no colored cheese will be permitted to be manufactured as from May first, the export trade insisting upon white cheese.

Following a lively discussion during which it was impressed on the board members by Mr. McCreary the necessity of having the Dominion government permit the manufacture of colored cheese during war time, President of the Board, C. Cramer, ruled the discussion out of order as there was no seconder for the motion

POLICE RECOVER A STOLEN CAR

Two Soldiers from Kingston Arrested for Napanee Police

The efficiency of police radio in the apprehension of crime was exemplified early Saturday morning when two soldiers were taken into custody in Belleville and held on a charge of stealing an automobile in Napanee.

While Constables Wright and Arnott were investigating a minor accident on East Dundas St. shortly after 1 a.m., Saturday, Sergeant Arthur Booth received word from Napanee that a motor car had been stolen from that town. A description of the vehicle was given and Sergeant Booth immediately relayed the message over radio station CJR, Belleville police, which was picked up by the two constables in the police cruiser. Within a few minutes the officers had halted a motor car being driven into the city at an excessive rate of speed. In the car were Privates Peter Lash and James Roddy of the C.A.S.F. stationed at Kingston.

The vehicle was that stolen in Napanee, police stated today. The occupants were held for Napanee authorities.

POLICE BLOTTER

A hit-and-run motorist was reported on East Dundas St. shortly after 1.00 a.m. Saturday, when William Preston, R.R. No. 1, Belleville, was knocked off his bicycle and sustained minor injuries and lacerations. Police investigated, and were told that a westbound motor car, travelling at an excessive rate of speed, had sideswiped Preston's bicycle and hurled him to the pavement, where he sustained an ankle injury. The bike was badly damaged, having apparently been run over by the fleeing car. A description of the vehicle was given the police.

Two Soldiers Apprehended.

While investigating this accident Constables Wright and Arnott apprehended two soldiers riding in a motor car, which was alleged to have been stolen in Napanee. The pair were held for the Napanee authorities.

Late Friday afternoon the police answered a call to a South George Street address where the man of the house was in an alleged intoxicated condition and threatening his wife. The man was remanded to the custody of the county jail pending trial on Monday. Another inebriate was taken into custody on Front Street last night and held pending trial.

Belleville Hospital To Hold Open House On Anniversary Of Florence Nightingale

Monday, May 12th, the anniversary of the birth of Florence Nightingale, world famous figure and originator of the nursing profession, is Hospital Day.

In tribute to the famous nurse, hospitals the world over pay respect to her memory by inviting the general public to view their facilities, institutions and services.

In keeping with his practice, the Belleville General Hospital, now known as one of the most modern of its kind in this part of Canada, will hold "Open House" for the convenience of residents of this city and the far-flung district it serves.

Members of the nursing and other staffs will be on duty between the hours of two and four in the afternoon to conduct special tours for the convenience of visitors. Each department will be visited where special demonstrations will be held and brief informative comment given by the department head.

Nurses will stand by in the up-to-date operating rooms, where a mock operation will be performed. The X-ray department, pharmacy, nursery, laboratory maternity wards and rooms will be places of interest.

Can Inspect New Chapel

Of special interest will be the new chapel, the cost of which was borne by congregations of the various religious denominations of the city and district and installed through the offices of the Belleville Ministerial Association. The Rev. G. Freeman, president of the association will be in attendance.

The new laboratory, under the supervision of Dr. J. Mackay, will also prove of interest. Here all tissue examinations, blood counts, urinalysis and tests of contagious diseases, formerly done in outside hospitals, are carried out.

Many new modern appliances have been installed during the past year. These include a fever cabinet and basal metabolism, both of which are filling a long-felt need.

Record Number Patients Treated

Evidence of the work of increased facilities, and the gradual expanding reputation the institution is gaining through the medium of its work is seen in the fact that the number of patients treated last year is fifty percent in excess of the number admitted in 1935. In that year 2,657 patients were treated, in 1936, 2813; 1937, 2,983; 1938, 3,100; 1939, 3,440 and 1940, 3,965.

The hospital broke all maternity records in 1940 when 601 babies were born therein as compared to 291 in 1935. In 1936, 338 babies were brought into the world, in 1937, 340; 1938, 415; and in 1939, 445.

The month of March held the record for the number of births, no less than 67 babies being born during that period. At one time 37 babies were in the nursery, nine of them being born during twenty-four hours.

The Board of Governors, Acting Administrator Gordon Barclay and the various staffs of the hospital extend a cordial welcome to the general public to visit its hospital on Monday.

Asparagus Sells At 3lbs. For 25c

Fresh asparagus suffered a considerable decline in price from that asked for last Saturday's initial offerings of the spring vegetable and retailed on the produce market this morning at three pounds for 25c or at straight ten cents per bunch. Other spring vegetables such as onions, rhubarb and radishes sold readily at 5c per bunch and celery at 5c and 10c per bunch. Last year's vegetables such as parsnips and carrots sold at the regular price of 30c per peck. Potatoes held at $1 per bag, and onions 10c per quart.

The market generally was enhanced by the appearance of the greatest display of transplanting stock seen this season. Solid banks of tomato and cabbage flats graced several vendors' stands while perennials and other plants were offered in profusion. Tomato and cabbage plants sold at 15c per flat with Spanish onion sets being offered at 50c and 75c per flat. Strawberry plants and raspberry canes made their initial appearance on the market with the former being held at 50c per hundred plants and raspberries at 75c per bunch of 25 canes.

Smaller Apple Display

The choice of apples was smaller than that of last week although one or two vendors offered good samples of Spys at 50c per peck, with good McIntosh being offered at the same figure. Cooking varieties sold at $1 per bushel.

Prices on the inside market compared favourably with those of last week with eggs ranging from 25c per dozen for top grade to 20c for the smaller variety. The fowl market was brisk with purchases quickly buying up the offering of chicken at prices ranging from 25c to 28c per pound. Broilers ranged from 60c to 90c per pair. Butter sold at the usual figure of two pounds for 75c.

Whitefish took a further drop of three cents, retailing at 22c per pound, the lowest price of the season. Lake trout held at 25c and mudcats at two pounds for 25c. Suckers sold at four fish for 25c and chad at 5c per pound.

Young porkers were a trifle firmer than has been noted during the past weeks with vendors asking from $4.50 to $5 each for six to seven weeks old shoats.

46% City Taxes Have Been Paid

Approximately forty-six per cent of the total taxes of the City of Belleville, amounting to some $211,000, was paid into the city treasury by taxpayers before and during May 3rd, due date of the first of four annual payments, Chairman of Finance, Alderman H. J. Clarke announced today.

This amount is roughly $18,000 in excess of the first payment in 1940, when the tax rate was three mills higher than at present.

The heavy initial payment of taxes has enabled the city to pay off all outstanding loans, and bank liabilities. Besides this there is a sufficient balance of current credit to take care of city costs until the due date of the next payment July 3rd..

Alderman Clarke paid tribute to the Burrows tax accounting machine installed by City Comptroller Harold Bateman. "This system greatly facilitates the getting out of tax bills and this service, besides the fact that payment can be made in four instalments, is responsible for the substantial increase in collections. I feel that this system is being appreciated by the taxpayers and this is evidenced in their willingness to pay as soon as possible."

A number of rate payers paid their taxes in full this month, taking advantage of the discount offered by the city. This number was in excess of those paying in full during May of last year.

BD. OF EDUCATION TO MEET TWO DELEGATIONS

Teaching Staff of B.C.I. and Committee From Kiwanis Club to Attend

MEET MONDAY

The request of two delegations to be permitted audience with the Belleville Board of Education at a special meeting to discuss current questions of civic matters, paramountly concerning the reported dismissal of Mr. P. C. MacLaurin as principal of Belleville Colegiate Institute & Vocational School, was granted at a committee meeting of the Board held in the Board room Friday evening. The request for the audiences came from a delegation of the teaching staff of the Belleville Collegiate Institute and Vocational School and from the Belleville Kiwanis Club. These two delegations will be heard at a special meeting held in the Board room on Monday evening.

As the Board convened in committee a letter was read from a delegation of teachers from the B.C.I. & V.S. requesting the Board to meet the delegation regarding this question. A letter from the Secretary of the Kiwanis Club was read in regard to Mr. MacLaurin's dismissal as Principal requesting the Board to reconsider the matter. The Board not only agreed to meet the delegations, but announced the press would be included.

Questioning the advisability of meeting such delegations at a special meeting, Trustee Carl Crosby rose to the question. "Why should the Board members be asked to attend a special meeting for this purpose, when we have a regular meeting of the Board next Friday night?" asked Mr. Crosby.

"Perhaps it would be better to have this meeting as a special session, as we have considerable business to transact at our regular meeting," urged Trustee B. C. Sisler, who received the endorsation of Trustee H. Legate

"I see the press is represented at our committee meeting tonight. Recently there have been statements published in the press stating our Board meetings have been held in camera and behind closed doors. I take serious exception to these statements and demand a retraction," continued Trustee Crosby. "Does the fact the press is allowed to attend this meeting bear this out?" concluded Mr. Crosby in question. Three members of the press present were permitted to reply to the questions directed to them pertaining to this matter by members of the Board, but without further incident.

Welcomes the Press Representatives

"I, for one, would like to welcome the press here tonight, although it is not the usual custom of these gentlemen to be present at our meetings," stated Rev. A. B. Payne, as the trio of reporters nodded their heads in admission of the statement. "However, I can assure you gentlemen we only polish off the rough edges in committee meetings and you hear all discussions at our regular meetings, when all recommendations must be ratified," concluded Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne in explanation of procedure.

Members of the Board were unanimous in their assurance that no motions of business were completed at committee meetings, but rather recommended and thoroughly discussed before being presented at the regular meetings of the Board, held each third Friday of the month and to which the press was always welcome and present.

Numerous recommendations were presented and discussed during the session, all of which will be presented for ratification and possible acceptance at the regular Board meeting held next Friday night.

Re-elect Officers Of Wallbridge Branch Women's Institute

The annual meeting of Wallbridge Institute was held at Sidney Town Hall on April 30th, with 14 present. The meeting was opened by the president Mrs. Sam Nicolson in the chair with National Anthem, Institute Ode and Lord's Prayer in unison.

The treasurer Mrs. Wickson gave a report of last year's work. Correspondence was read. Mrs. H. Ketcheson suggested that the Institute serve a 25c lunch also a supper at 15c. on the 12th July as the Orangemen are celebrating at Wallbridge.

On Thursday May 8, Mr. L. J. Ketcheson and J. Hendricks collected the salvage gathered by the community for war purposes.

The election of officers was carried on by Mrs. Elliott. After a discussion of several minutes, the officers of last year were persuaded to carry on for another year with the understanding they would not be asked to take office again.

The officers for 1941 and 1942 are: —

President, Mrs. Sam Nicolson; 1st vice president, Mrs. H. Ketcheson; 2nd vice president, Mrs. F. Shorey; Treasurer, Mrs. Edgar Lane; Secretary, Mrs. Jay White; Pianist, Mrs. Ted Evans; Song leader, Mrs. Cecil Smith; Auditors, Mrs. Wickson, Mrs. L. Ketcheson; Relief Committee, Mrs. Geo. Nicolson, Mrs. J. Hinchcliffe, Mrs. Chas. Colley; District Director, Mrs. Jas. Sine; Directors, Mrs. C. Ketcheson, Mrs. R. Noyes, Mrs. J. Chisholm, Mrs. G. A. Ketcheson, Mrs. Holmes; Press Reporter, Mrs. W. Sine; Red Cross Committee, Mrs. J. Sine, Mrs. L. J. Ketcheson. Mrs. Percy Westover. Mrs. Clare has charge of yarn for knitting and Mrs. L. J. Ketcheson, Red Cross sewing and Mrs. Jas. Sine looks after the refugee work.

Several suggestions were given for next year's program, one that the Institute omit lunch and each convener and her group pay 10c, the money to go in the treasury.

For the year 1940 and 1941, 11 meetings with an attendance of 150 members and 46 visitors were held. Receipts for the year was $450.89 and expenses $397.43 and with a balance of $53.46 in the bank. A total of $156.58 was spent on war work; $105.00 went to the British War Victims' Fund. The branch sent boxes to boys overseas, $5.31 also catered to the Cheesemakers' Banquet. Two leaders, Mrs. Lane and Mrs. Ketcheson attended Stirling meat cookery class. The Institute appointed a member from each street to collect each month for Red Cross, made a beautiful Dresden Plate quilt and sold tickets at 10c each and had a patriotic concert to draw the lucky ticket, 192. The quilt was returned to the president and sold. A dance followed the concert and altogether made $82.91 on the quilt.

One member died and instead of sending her flowers, as was her wish, $5.00 was sent to the British War Victims' Fund. Flowers, fruit and candy was sent to all the sick in the community.

The Agricultural representative from Stirling visited us and gave a talk and lantern slides. Each meeting was devoted to Red Cross work with much accomplished.

New War Industries Will Require Large Supply Trained Workers

When the many factories and wartime industries, either now being planned in the course of construction, go into production a few months hence, the demand for trained workers and machinists will be terrific, according to Mr. George Ferguson, chief instructor of the War Emergency Classes now being held at the Belleville Collegiate. These classes are being held under a joint program of the Dominion and Provincial Governments to train men to take their place as machinists and semi-skilled workers in vital Canadian war industry.

War Emergency Classes were first started at the Belleville Collegiate during the summer holidays last summer when a class of machinists and welders took an intensified two months' training course. Since October of 1940, the courses have been continued with the popularity of the classes increasing so as to warrant full-time use of the technical facilities of the Collegiate and since that time instructors have been on duty twenty-four hours each day, with classes being held in three shifts.

Enlistments Deplete Labor Ranks

Enlistments in the army, navy and airforce together with the quickening tempo of industry taking up surplus labor has practically depleted the ranks of younger men who ordinarily would be expected to take the courses and with the graduation of the last class of machinists, one week ago the average age of the students now undergoing mechanical training at the Collegiate is well over forty years. This is in direct contrast to when the courses first commenced as then youths just finishing high school and young men were predominant.

The initial difficulty of obtaining competent instructors to carry on the classes was overcome with local industrial firms co-operating and loaning key men for instructional duty. In this way high class instructors were obtained and students were trained by actual shop practices.

Several instructors who had been loaned by industrial firms have now been recalled to their jobs. The most recent vacancy being caused by the recall of Mr. Lawrence Vance, welding instructor, to Toronto. Mr. Frank Maracle, night instructor in the machine shop, has been called up and will proceed to Montreal next week to undergo a short period of instruction before entering the flying service.

MOTHER'S DAY

Mother's Day observance gives the thoughts of entire nations to the mother of the family who owe so much of what they are and ever can be to her benign care and love. This observance is not an observance of an abstraction or of an idea, it is so personal that every individual that is living can recall his or her mother and the myriad of acts of love and devotion she has exercised towards her family. No matter how young or how old one be, this day offers the opportunity of grateful recognition of the noblest form of human love this old world can ever know.

Blest are those who on this day are still the objects of the kindly care of mothers who are helping to mould the destiny of their children and who only ask that their children grow up to be noble. Little children are not too young to show their love for her who has loved them so much that not the greatest labor will prevent her sacrifice of herself for them. Men and women who have grown to adulthood still know that life's sweetest shrine is that where mother is, where she, even if in old age, is still mother. And those who have lost their mother in this life have surges of memory which carry them back to those countless days when mother love surrounded them and when her physical presence was with them. And now her memory is a guard, a soothing influence which blesses their lives.

Mother's devotion is the greatest human gift to the world. . Without it what would be humanity, how shrunken and undeveloped! But with mother love life finds its fullest exppression.

To those whose mother is with them this day is the real opportunity to express filial love for those precious endless hours when she soothed the brow of childhood of so many troubles hidden in the veil of the earliest years. To the others are memories which will endure as long as life shall last of that sweet being to whom every man, woman and child owes so much.

RISING BRITISH AIR POWER

British air assaults on German military objectives have reached a great striking power and just two nights ago the greatest fleet of aircraft ever to fly over Germany blasted at targets in the heaviest raid of the war. This is evidence of growing British air strength when Britain can send as many as three or four hundred planes to the land of the Huns and bombard their key points. It is coming true what was said some months ago that British air power would be able to deal mightier blows at the enemy.

At this same time there is believed to be much greater success in meeting enemy air night raids over Britain. Wednesday night the Nazis sent over about 400 planes and lost a good many, so many that the foe did not send over so many the night before last or last night.

There is this to be noted that British fliers are very careful with their bombs to see that they reach their targets, enemy fliers being more careless and no doubt anxious to get away from the British defence. The R.A.F. raids are doing more effective work than the German raids have done in crippling the war effort.

CANADA'S WAR TORCH

Canada's victory loan 1941 is to be "part of the tools" which will help Britain. The symbol of this aid will be a metallic torch which will be dedicated in the Legislature in Victoria, B.C., on Empire Day. The torch will be flown across Canada and from the eastern shores to the British Prime Minister.

According to the announcement of Finance Minister Ilsley at various ceremonies across Canada the people will be asked to place their right hands over their hearts and repeat the pledge,

"I hereby declare my belief in Almighty God and reaffirm my loyalty and allegiance to His Majesty the King and further declare my faith for British institutions.

"I pledge myself and my all to hold the torch on high and to march shoulder to shoulder with the Motherland and the Empire in our righteous cause to victory and enduring peace."

The bomber bearing the torch will be at Belleville (Trenton Airport) on June 9th according to tentative plans.

Such a program will be inspiring and will impress by the drama it contains.

OURSELVES AND OTHERS...

GOOD FRIENDS

I have some good companions
 Whose presence never fails
To bring me joy and gladness
 When daily care prevails;
Some bring me words of wisdom,
 Others a lilting song,
Some tell of tropic sunshine
 When winter days are long.

These true and tried companions,
 They never fail to cheer,
When winter days are weary
 And winter nights are drear;
Though other friends prove faithless
 By bitter word or look,
I still have faithful comrades
 In my tried and tested books.

FOR THE indomitable British people, in spite of the fact that daily and nightly death rains from Hun-ridden skies, have taken time out from clearing away rubble and debris, burying loved ones and training for home defence, to rejuvenate an export trade that has been dormant for a number of years.

ENGLAND, some years back, was famous for its export trade in fishing tackle. A few weeks ago, with the crashing symphony of exploding bombs and anti-aircraft guns as a background, the trade is being revived. In a stone's throw from the famous St. Jame's Palace, London, are 500 varieties of fly. They range from the drab Dun group of which there are 24 variants to brilliant pieces of exquisite workmanship such as the Claret Quill and the gaudy Ibis.

BEFORE the war something like 1,500,000 alone were shipped to sportsmen the world over, chiefly to Canada, New Zealand, the United States and Argentina. The flies shown in St. Jame's Palace are for Canada. They form a collection to delight the heart of any knowledgeable fisherman, minute ambassadors for British craftsmanship.

"THEY MADE A FIGHT FOR IT."

(Coronet)

This is the story of the struggle between the mind of man and the minds of beavers which went on near Farmington, Me., in 1940.

The beaver's dam was dynamited.

It was repaired overnight.

A 6-inch pipe was concealed in the dam to drain it.

Both ends of the pipe were plugged with mud.

A hose was rigged to drain the dam.

It was gnawed through three times.

The entire dam was removed. A complete new dam was built.

A scarecrow was rigged up.

It was torn down, divided into pieces, and incorporated into the dam.

The beavers were trapped and their skins nailed to the wall.

But at least they made a fight for it.

CONVENTION STORY

Rotary District Governor Tom Davis, a great friend of the famous Al. (brown derby) Smith, tells a story of how he and the Great Al, both of whom were Roman Catholics, attended a Rotary convention with two fellow clubmen of the Protestant faith. It appears the hotel in which they were quartered was crowded and the four friends shared a double room.

Early the next morning Davis and the then Governor of New York arose to go to mass. The hotel room was cold. Ice rimmed the water in the room. Shivering with cold they dressed in an atmosphere that was anything but comfortable.

As they reached the door Al turned, Governor Davis said, and looked at the two Protestants snoring in bed, warm and comfortable beneath heavy blankets, then he said, "You know, Tom, I was just thinking. Wouldn't it be h...... if they were right and we were wrong."

SLOGAN FOR US ALL

Things are bad and getting worse.
 Luxury's slipping from the larder!
Here's a slogan to rehearse:
 Work a little harder.

Taxes mounting day by day,
 'Gainst the threat of dire disaster.
Want to stop it? Here's the way:
 Work a little faster.

Gone the happy days of ease!
 Winds of care are blowing stronger.
What to do in times like these:
 Work a little longer!

Lest the bombs of death shall fall,
 Wives and children killing;
Let's be patient, one and all,
 Glad to work and willing.

The Emperor's Dog

Hiram Blauvelt cables from Addis Ababa to the New York Herald Tribune.

——Emperor Haile Selassie, interviewed in his mountain stronghold near this capital city on April 20, the Ethiopian Easter, expressed his thankfulness to Great Britain for the deliverance of Ethiopia from Fascist rule, happy that his kingdom again was joining Britain and the United States as one of the free countries remaining in the world.

The interview, at which only the Emperor, an interpreter and this correspondent were present, took place in a dimly lit, eerie palace in the rugged mountains outside Addis Ababa.

The conclusion of the audience was both anti-climatic and embarrassing, for as I was bowing out I stepped on the Emperor's favorite dog, which let out a series of piercing yelps. (Mr. Blauvelt weighs well over 200 pounds.)

Land, Sea Forces Not Made Obsolete By Air Warfare

By CHARLES P. STEWART

Washington.— Aviation has supplemented surface-fighting forces, ashore and afloat, but they're not obsolete on account of it and they are in no danger of becoming so, either—emphatically not.

My informant was an admiral I'm acquainted with. His family and mine know one another very well. The other evening his daughter dropped in to see my daughter and he came with her. So he and I had a litte chat—purely a social one.

If I'd called on him in a journalistic capacity he'd have been as uncommunicative as an oyster. I'm sure he would. In fact as he was leaving. I remarked that I'd visit him soon for an interview. At the word "interview" he shied instantly like a scared horse.

"Oh, in that case," he said, "I'd have to turn you over to the press section. Admiral Hepburn runs it." And I'm quite aware that the press section's function is the suppression of news. However, what I'd been having with my admiral wasn't an "interview," but a mere personal conversation which was quite all right.

Most big countries have a war department, a navy department and an aviation department. We're different. We have war and navy departments, each with an aviation adjunct, but no independent aviation set-up.

Greater Efficiency

"You see," explained my admiral, when I asked him about it, "the army needs aviators for its particular requirements and the navy needs them for its particular purposes and these respective purposes are quite unlike one another. Aviation shouldn't be regarded as a separate service. It's an army and it likewise is a navy arm and the two arms ought to be classified accordingly. They're much more efficient that way."

Enthusiastic aviators have insisted for a number of years that their service in reality, is pretty much the whole thing or is fast becoming so, anyway. Indeed, the late General William Mitchell maintained that armies and navies no longer are worth bothering with—that fliers have got them both knocked into a cocked hat.

But soldiers and sailors have contended right along, as my admiral did a few days ago, that aviation's just a couple of arms—indispensable but necessarily motivated by the older armed forces.

As a military uneducated layman, I've wondered repeatedly, "Are our aviators overly enthusiastic? Or are our surface fighters, on land and sea, disposed to belittle aviation simply because, as terrestrial and oceanic experts, they're slow to recognize that their respective professions are outmoded by the birds overhead?"

The One-Eyed Death

Well, as previously remarked, my admiral answered these questions.

"I'll say this," he added. "I think maybe the airplane is about due to put the submarine out of business. You'll remember what Kipling called the sub—'the one-eyed death.' One-eye—the periscope. And one eye isn't a full complement. It's a bad handicap to have only one lamp. But a flier's got eyes in every side of his head."

I was curious to learn if my admiral believes a force of any formidable consequence can be landed by air upon enemy soil and actually occupy it.

"Perhaps," he agreed, "if it's a very short flight, as from Denmark to Norway or from Sicily to North Africa. A plane, loaded with men to its capacity, and towing a number of equally-loaded gliders, can cover such distances pretty fast, land the aggregation and fly back for more, to the tune of several trips a day."

"What's the remedy?" I inquired.

"Fighting fliers," said the admiral, "to blast the flying transports."

"Degaussing"

Then he told me about "degaussing" men-o'-war.

The Germans have a trick of planting magnetic mines at the bottom of a maritime channel. The metal in the hull of a ship, passing over such a mine, magnetically attracts it, the mine rises, hits the ships keel, bursts upon contact and blows the gizzard out of that ship. But there's a counter-trick, consisting in demagnetixing the ship, so that the mine won't rise. It is a sort of insulation, in effect.

They call it "degaussing" because the process was invented by Johann Karl Frederick Gauss. It'll be a good joke on Herr Hitler to have his magnetic mines nullified through the ingenuity of a German with a name like that.

I'm giving away no military secret by mentioning the stunt, though, for Johann Karl hit on it away back in the 18th century.

In fact, I don't think I've leaked any confidential information at all.

Changing Ways

London Daily Mail

——The war and Sir Kingsley Wood have certainy changed our standards of living.

A publican in Sussex was telling me the other day that bitter is now a toff's drink, the ordinary man's drink being mild and bitter or just mild.

Basement flats are now at a premium, and penthouses are a drug on the market. English restaurant keepers in Soho who used to pretend to be foreigners are now careful to point out that they have just been kidding.

You don't see a dinner jacket in the smartest restaurants at night; only comedians wear white ties.

There is a tremendous revival in reading books. Gramophone records have come back with a bang. Home Guards in London are now concentrating on street fighting, which was considered much too ungentlemanly for them to learn only a few weeks ago.

Numerology seems to have faded right out of the picture. Astrology is stronger than ever.

THIS QUIZ BUSINESS

The word "quiz," now so popular in connection with question-and-answer features and programs, made its first appearance in the English language about 1780.

It is said to be the only common English word coined as the result of a bet.

According to a popular story, in 1789 Richard Daly, proprietor of the Theatre Royal, in Dublin, Ireland, made a wager with friends that he could coin a perfectly meaningless word and make it the common talk of the town within 24 hours.

The wager accepted, Daly sent boys throughout the city at night to chalk the letters "Q.U.I.Z." on walls, windows and other available places in Dublin.

All Dublin talked about the mystic word "Q.U.I.Z.", Daly won his wager and gave the language a new word.

So far as known, this story was first related in 1836 by Smart in his "Walker Remodelled."

It was probably only a fanciful tale invented to account for an odd word without known root or etymological significance.

The obvious fault of the story is the simple fact that "quiz" in certain senses was already in use before the date of the alleged betting incident.

About 1789 "quiz" was one of the common names of a bandalore, a popular toy of the day equipped with an automatically winding cord by which it was brought back to the hand when thrown.

But even before that, as early as 1782 at least, an odd or eccentric person was called a quiz.

For a century "quiz" meant a joke, jest, hoax or bit of banter, or a person who indulged in such horseplay.

To quiz a person meant to poke fun at him or to play a joke on him.

Even today in England to quiz generally means to banter or to look at a person inquisitively or curiously.

It was in America that "quiz" acquired the meaning of a question or to ask a question.

This usage was probably influenced by the fact that "quis" figures in words of Latin origin, such as "inquisitive," and that "ques." is the common abbreviation of "question" in lists of questions and answers.

VETERAN MEMBER CLAIMS COLLUSION IN DIVORCE CASES

A. W. Neil Says in Nine-Tenths of Cases Before House Procedure is Same

ENDORSES SUGGESTION

By C. R. BLACKBURN
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Ottawa, May 10 (CP)—A charge that there is collusion in "a third if not more" of the divorce actions handled by parliament was made in the House of Commons yesterday by A. W. Neill (Ind. Comox-Alberni) in the course of an outburst against parliamentary divorces which wound up the week's activities in the House.

Mr. Neill, a member of the House since 1921 has for years been one of those joining in the almost annual outburst against parliament dealing with divorce actions.

"In nine-tenths of the cases the procedure is the same," Mr. Neill said. "A man goes to the hotel desk and registers for himself and the woman with him, and there happens to be a man standing at his elbow who is able to swear a few weeks later that he saw him register.

"You cannot always have a coincidence like that. It is ridiculous to ask us to believe that there is not collusion in these cases."

Mr. Neill endorsed a suggestion from Conservative House Leader Hanson that the government appoint a "King's Proctor" to sit in on divorce actions heard in the Senate and intervene when there is evidence of collusion.

Wrangled an Hour

Amid scenes which old observers claimed were without precedent the House wrangled more than an hour over procedure to be used to deal with 35 private bills, 29 of them divorce actions.

The ultimate result was that a bill to incorporate the Alberta Provincial Bank was held back from second reading while its subject matter was referred to the Commons banking and commerce committee, and the 29 divorce bills were given second reading and referred to the committee on miscellaneous and private bills.

Application from the government on Alberta for a provincial bank charter was made last year and the subject matter was referred to the banking and commerce committee, which was still considering it when the session ended. The application was ruled unconstitutional by a legal authority of the Crown.

Trying To Shelve Issue.

The same procedure was adopted yesterday after discussion in which Mr. Hanson said the government was merely trying to shelve the issue.

It was contended by Finance Minister Ilsley that the charter sought was not in conformity with normal provincial bank charters. Mr. Hanson said he would support a bill to give a charter in conformity with the Bank Act.

He suggested the government of Alberta make an application in conformity with the Bank Act. If they did this "on the theory that when they get a charter they will be in a position to put into effect theories they are sponsoring in Canada today, I shall support them and give them an opportunity to demonstrate, if they can, once and for all, that Social Credit is a sound monetary theory," Mr. Hanson said.

John Blackmore, leader of the New Democracy group and sponsor of the bill, said he was ready to put it in terms that would strictly conform to the Bank Act.

Deadlock Created.

A virtual deadlock was created early in the afternoon when for more than an hour Speaker Glen was in conflict with member after member as he endeavored to give effect to a resolution unanimously adopted last Wednesday regarding private bills.

Government business has been given right of way ever since the session started. Wednesday afternoon Prime Minister Mackenzie King moved that Friday be given over to private bills with those which were unopposed given precedence.

The Alberta bill was first on the list and when Finance Minister Ilsley moved an amendment that it be not read a second time but that its subject matter be again referred to the banking and commerce committee this was interpreted by the speaker as opposition, and he ordered the measure placed at the bottom of the list.

Discussion on Every Bill

But there was discussion on every bill that was called and Mr. Speaker ruled that every member who arose to discuss a bill was, in the spirit of the resolution, opposing it.

When there had been many interchanges and observations as the Speaker called bill after bill only to have a member rise to question it, Pensions Minister Mackenzie obtained Common consent to overlook Wednesday's resolution and to take the bills in order and discuss them in the manner ordinarily allowed on second readings.

This move was successful and the House started all over again, beginning with the Alberta bill. But in the meantime there had been many bitter comments describing the procedure as a fiasco," and one likely to make the Commons a "laughing-stock" in the country.

OUTLOOK BRIGHT FOR 1941 FURS

Trappers Read Optimism in All Signs With Steady Market and Firm Demand

Ottawa (CP)—Good supplies of fur, a steady market and continued demand combined to lend optimism to white and Indian trappers scattered throughout Canada, Ottawa officials report.

An important guide to numbers of wild fur-bearing animals is contained in reports from scattered government agencies, and generally they reported the 1941 season started with a better outlook than for some years past.

"A matter of interest to all concerned with the fur industry is the changing trend in export and import business," said one official. "In the past it was economical for Canada to export her finest furs to Great Britain and the United States, and import cheaper products from across the boundary and elsewhere.

"Exchange control, encouragement of muskrat production and the elimination of some sources of cheap fur supply have meant our top-quality fur continues to find a ready market in importing countries, while larger supplies of cheaper pelts are being made available for home consumption."

A stimulant to the fur market has been increased employment and industrial activity in Canada and the United States. This season's sales have been reported at nearly 30 per cent higher than those for last year and prices have been from 10 to 15 per cent better.

United Kingdom purchases have dropped sharply in recent months but more fur is being taken by the United States. over $10,000,000 worth going across the border in the past year.

Development of muskrat farming has made long strides with the encouragement of the Dominion and provincial authorities. Guidmines and resources department ance and assistance to Indians is part of the program of rehabilitation which will expand the Dominion's fur resources and help the tribesmen's income.

Using adjustable hazards, a golf course occupying only seven feet of floor space has been invented that enables nine holes of golf to be played indoors.

HOME PIG CLUBS FOR MORE BACON

Britons Getting More Hog Conscious in Wartime Providing

London (CP)—With more than 800 pig clubs formed in less than a year Britons are rapidly becoming more pig-conscious than ever before. Alex Hobson, secretary of the Small Pig Keepers' Council, estimated these clubs would provide about 30,000 pigs annually or 1,500 tons of bacon.

Backyards, allotments, factory grounds, sports grounds, A.P.S. stations and village schools all have their pigs. In London there are clubs at the zoo and in Hyde Park.

"Pig club members feed their animals on household and garden waste," said Hobson, "but they are allowed a certain amount of meal through arrangements with the Ministry of Food."

Club members may keep four pigs each. They may eat two themselves but the other two must be sold to the Ministry of Food.

One Pleads Guilty To Moral Delinquency Before Grand Jury

Los Angeles, May 10 (AP)—Donald Mackay, a lawyer, charged in court yesterday that "members of the District Attorney's office seem to be very anxious to protect certain people in the film industry from involvement" in a morals scandal.

Mackay, attorney for Virginia Lopez, 31, on trial on charges of contributing to the delinquency of 16-year-old Sylvia Hamalaine, of Hibbing, Minn., added:

"I would like to show that far worse things happened to her at the hands of others than occurred at the hands of my client."

Ernest Roll, Deputy District Attorney, retorted that Mackay apparently was trying to smear certain persons in Hollywood. Another deputy, Percy Hammond, in charge of the grand jury investigation involving the Hamalaine girl, demanded a personal apology.

Counsel Apologizes

Mackay apologized but insisted that other members of the District Attorney's office were reluctant to investigate purportedly wild parties which Miss Lopez charged had been held in film colony homes and attended by her and Miss Hamalaine.

The girl ended the Attorney's argument by declaring:

"I am not going to name anybody else. They don't belong in this case."

She said, however, three other men had mistreated her.

Earlier she testified that Adolph La Rue criminally attacked her Dec. 17 at the instigation of Miss Lopez. La Rue has pleaded guilty to contributing to her delinquency.

The case was brought to the attention of officers by Miss Hamalaine's father, August, who wrote agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation that she was an expectant mother. The girl said she came to Hollywood to attend a radio school.

The grand jury investigation of the wild party charges will be resumed Monday.

Public Demonstration Of Television Made

New York, May 10 (AP)— Development of large screen television for the theatre was given its first public demonstration in the United States to 1,200 guests last night. Images were projected to a 15-by 20-foot size.

The show had as its climax the middleweight championship match between Ken Overlin and Billy Soose from Madison Square Garden. Also included were commentator Lowell Thomas, a roundtable discussion on the possibilities of theatre television, a short drama, and Lucy Monroe, soprano, all televised from the NBC studios.

The demonstration, conducted by the Radio Corporation of America, was designed to show laboratory progress since previous tests with smaller screens. Projection is accomplished with a high brilliancy receiving tube which operates on 75,000 volts and has a special optical system. Connection to the transmitting source was by cable, but the system has worked as well in pick-ups off the air.

Results obtained were regarded by observers as the best they had been to date. Brilliancy did not equal that of a movie, but it was sufficient for satisfactory viewing.

Incendiarists Blamed For Collins Bay Fire

Kingston, Ont., May 10 — (10)— Incendiarists are blamed for a fire which destroyed a barn and other buildings at Harold R. Clark's farm in Collins Bay.

Thousands of dollars damage was done when the barn, drive shed, machine shed, garage and ice house were consumed by flames.

If it had not been for the quick action of R. A. F. men from the Norman Rogers Airdrome and firemen from Kingston a large storehouse would have been destroyed.

Shortly before the fire, two men were seen running from a garage on the property.

Australian Papers To Use Newsprint Made In Australia

Sydney, Australia, May 8 (Delayed)—(AP)—Nine metropolitan Australian newspapers will publish Monday and Tuesday of next week solely upon Australian-made newsprint, it was announced here today. This will be the first large-scale use of the local product.

The paper was made at Boyer, Tasmania, where 400 square miles of forest are available at present for pulpwood. The capital invested there at present by Australian interests amounts to £1,600,000 (about $5,600,000 Canadian) and the first year's output has been estimated at 27,000 tons.

Later, it is expected that capital of £4,000,000 (about $14,000,000 Canadian) will be involved when the projected production of 108,000 tons is reached. The projected total is expected to be sufficient to meet Australia's war-time requirements.

MOTHER GIVEN CHILD'S CUSTODY

Court Agrees Father Tried to "Poison Child's Mind" Against Mother

New York, May 10 (AP)—Supreme Court Justice Dennis Cohalan approved a referee's finding yesterday granting Thelma Bowman Spear custody of her seven-year-old son, James Lewisohn, whose father is Ludwig Lewisohn, the author.

The boy was awarded to his father more than a year ago by the court but referee James A. O'Gorman agreed with Miss Spear's charge that Lewisohn had "tried to poison the child's mind against his mother."

Miss Spear was Lewisohn's common law wife. When they parted, the author married Edna Manley.

U. S. Attaches Funds Of Farbenindustrie

Washington, May 9—(AP)—Attorney General Robert Jackson said today that the United States had attached the funds of I. G. Farbenindustrie, which he described as "probably the most powerful single factor in German influence on American industry, because of its failure to appear in response to an indictment under the Sherman Anti-Trust Law.

Jackson said at a press conference that Farbenindustrie had refused to appear in court on the ground that it was not doing business in the United States and was not subect to United States law as a corporation.

The funds attached are in the National City Bank of New York, the attorney general said. He explained that the action was taken today because it was learned that payments to the German company under licences issued to American corporations totalling about $250,000 were to be made today and that the action was taken "when we could get it."

Drunk, Not Insane

Vancouver Province

—It is relevant to the present insecurity of our streets in Vancouver to note the case at the recent assizes. It was the case of the man sentenced to four years in prison on a conviction of manslaughter. He got drunk and ran amuck in a motor car and killed a woman pedestrian. His defence, which the judge and jury found insufficient, was temporary insanity.

AUSSIES TREND TOWARDS URBAN

Melbourne (CP) — Increasing wartime industrialization and loss of pre-war markets for agricultural products has resulted in a marked switch of emphasis in Australia's economy, from the land to the city. Officials said serious drought conditions in most of Australia caused a large flow of labor from the land and "implemented the munition and supply program."

A device mounted on wheels and equipped with a mast and sail has been invented by a resident of Port Washington, N.Y., to enable persons to learn to sail boats in safety on land.

TRANSFORMATION—

IN FARMING

SCIENCE and technological progress have wrought wonders in the realms of transportation, communication and industrial engineering. The ease and speed of travel by car, and now aeroplane, the practical elimination of space by telephone and radio and the convenience and comfort of electric lights and electrical household appliances are worth-while achievements towards the more abundant life.

In keeping with this progress is the contribution of the implement manufacturer toward lightening the labor and increasing the efficiency of the farmer. Farming has also been transformed.

All too little recognition in this respect has been taken of the tremendous advances in farm tractors. In design—more practical and attractive—with the ease of starting and operating of an automobile, operating at low cost, making possible astounding reductions in the cost of certain farm operations, and with greater power, at prices which put them within the reach of even the smaller farmer.

This more tractable and flexible source of power revolutionizes farming practice, eliminates the back-breaking work of days gone by, and makes it possible, in many instances, to operate gainfully even under existing difficult conditions.

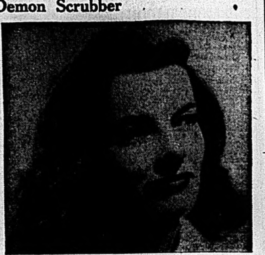
Smart Girl Is a Demon Scrubber



Katharine Hepburn enjoys using fragrant bath preparations.

By HELEN FOLLETT

THE SMART girl knows that cleanliness is the first law of beautifying. She is a demon scrubber and the result is that she looks as fresh as a dew-washed rose.

All over the human frame thousands of little oil geysers are at. The tissues of the human portrait out and flake. This film of oil attracts dust and that's not nice to think about. Sweat glands throw off obnoxious fluids, skin scales are coming and going. It stands to reason that one cannot be in beauty form without the daily overhauling with soap and water. The friction necessary for cleanliness sake is helpful in keeping the skin in good condition.

Bath Accessories

Be dippy. Be a splasher. If the beauty budget permits, stock up on bath accessories that make the scouring a recreation instead of a duty. There are a lot of fragrant preparations in jars and bottles that you'll love. You can get soap, dusting powder and bath salts that carry the same scent. That will make you smell sweet. Delightful odors are gardenia jasmine, mimosa. Lilac is popular; you like it or you don't. Some of the old fashioned rose essences are pleasing and romantic.

Busy women who have to pull themselves out of bed early to start the husband on his way, get breakfast and hustle the kids to school, find it more convenient to bath at night. In which event they should have a quick shower in the morning to give a feeling of freshness.

• • •

Of all tempting luxuries lovely bath linens have the strongest appeal. If you would have bath towels that last forever, take - hold like the pangs of guilty conscience, get Turkish one of unbleached linen. They cost more, but are worth the price.

Friction your body, but be gentle when drying your sainted face. work so that the skin will not dry are delicate. Wrap your hands in a soft towel, go patting upward from collar bones to forehead. That is a brisk facial treatment in itself.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Limited Budget Need Not Interfere With Happy Marriage

Dear Miss Fairfax:

"Is it possible for two people to live on $80.00 a month? I am 19 years old and my boy friend in 29. We've been going together for two years and have been in love for almost all that time.

"He is now making $100 a month, but twenty dollars of this goes to his mother. I feel certain we could get along on his income, but we wouldn't be able to have luxuries. I'd be contented, I know, with a small apartment.

"I'm a very good cook and can fix the plainest things in the market so they are good and look appetizing. I know it wouldn't be all honey and cream, but I'm willing to take the hard knocks as they come. I love him, and if there's any possible chance of living on $80 a month I can do it. Do you have a budget we can follow?

"Ginger"

I could give you the names of two of this country's richest men who began their married lives on less than $80 a month, and who are now internationally famous for their philanthropies.

Their families, however, might object to such recent history. On the other hand, I understand that the Vanderbilts are tremendously proud of that Dutch ancestor who helped her husband plant and tend his vegetable garden, then piled the products on the boat in which he rowed from Staten Island to New York. She helped by her thrift to accumulate the first dollars of that spectacular fortune, which in the third generation had increased to untold proportions.

So, when you tell me, my dear Ginger, that you know how to cook and make the simplest dishes attractive, please let me say that this is more than half the battle. Cheap cuts of meat, if properly cooked, are as appetizing and nutritious as the more expensive cuts.

Now that Spring is here and we have plenty of fresh fruits and vegetables on which to draw, we can get by on a slimmer budget than in winter time. Nothing is more appetizing than a good salad, and by a good salad I do not mean one of those strange conglomerations so often served at women's luncheon's, which are neither a dessert nor a salad.

A perfect salad for this time of the year is dandelion, a prime favorite with the French. The salad must be cut when the leaves are young and tender, as it would take the chewing gifts of a cow to eat the tough outside leaves. Served with the usual French dressing of three parts oil and one of vinegar, combined with the mashed yolks of a couple of hard-boiled eggs, and with a substantial bread and plenty of butter, and a dish of stewed fruit, you have a good and economical luncheon.

Today's brides are in great luck in regard to their house-furnishings. Nearly all big department stores have sample rooms, full of charming suggestions, and if you can't afford the maple or cherry reproductions of Early American furniture almost as good models in pine are procurable. And young people can have lots of fun staining or painting these.

Attractive chintz may be bought as reasonably as twenty cents a yard. So with thrift and common-sense, my dear Ginger, why not marry your fiance?

Fever From Grass Pollens

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M.D.

"Rose fever" it used to be called, and afterwards "spring hay fever," but it is not due to roses, and it is not due to hay, and it is not a fever, and does not necessarily occur exactly in the spring.

"Vernal catarrh" is probably a better name for it, or as good a name as any. At any rate, we know that the time is nearing, if it has not already occurred, when people who are sensitive to the pollens of certain plants begin to have the spring or early summer type of hay fever. In a few people it may begin earlier than this when the trees begin to fower and pollinate. In May, the oak, alder, hickory and walnut may give trouble. In early June, the pecan, and the elm any time between April and June, depending on climate.

Pollens from Grasses

Of course, the real offenders are the grasses. This was discovered long ago by an Englishman named John Bostock, who described his own case of "vernal catarrh." He found he had a cold every spring and finally decided that it was coincident with the blooming of the grasses. He published these observations in a scientific journal and, although he was an eminent medical man and a distinguished physiologist, his views were greeted with scepticism, not to say derision, by the medical world in general.

But time has justified John Bostock and we know now that these periodical catarrhs are, in truth, due to the pollens from the grasses which are thrown out on the early summer air. Since the symptoms occur at about the same time as the blooming of the roses, it was naturally thought for a while that the condition should be called "rose fever."

Vaccines as Preventives

We have learned a great deal about the prevention of this condition and anyone who suffers severely from periodical attacks of sneezing and watering of the eyes in the spring, should consider the possibility of taking vaccines early in the season, some weeks before the symptoms are due to appear. The vaccines are made from solutions of the pollens of the grasses, and in the spring type I believe much can be promised in a preventive way from their use.

I do not believe it is practical to try to prevent the "hay fever" that comes from tree budding, as this is seldom severe and lasts only a few days.

Spring hay fever is more universal in the United States than winter hay fever, owing to the wider distribution of the offending plants.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

O.J.M.:—"Is a hard, dark-colored mole in the middle of the back that occasionally splits open and exudes a sticky substance dangerous, and should it be operated on?"

Answer—The operation is so simple that I should think it would be advisable to operate on it, for convenience, if for nothing else. All such moles should be removed.

DR. DAFOE'S COLUMN on the Quintuplets and the Care of Your Children

No Reason to Worry Over Child's Slang If You Set Example

Sometimes parents get quite upset and cross because young Bill seems to be a blotter for all the latest slang expressions and to exhibit them in all his talk.

I have a letter from a mother who says that she and her husband have tried every means in their power, even to sending the children to bed without supper, in an effort to break them of using too much slang. I'm not surprised such measures haven't been effective.

If a father and mother want their children to use proper language, they must first and foremost make sure that they don't use any slang themselves. That is basic, for no matter how much you scold and punish, whatever words and pronunciations you use will be picked up by your children.

If you do make a point of being careful of your conversation in the home, and encourage good usage in your child without being a nagger, don't get discouraged. Your quiet influence will have an effect on your children that probably will offset the influences to which they are submitted among their companions.

Children are naturally mimics and imitators. They are faddists, too. You have seen a foolish fad like leaving goloshes unbuttoned will sweep through a whole school or a whole community. Children hate to think that someone in their acquaintance is getting ahead of them, whether it be in fads of clothing or language. Many a boy or girl begins smoking just for that reason. They really don't want to smoke, but they feel they must to keep up with the others.

It is the same with slang, and parents sometimes make the mistake of drawing too much attention to it. Of course, it there are other younger children in the family, then the parents can very well appeal to the older boy or girl to watch what they say in the presence of the younger ones. This is often a very good approach, because it brings home to the youngster that slang isn't a desirable thing without actually appearing to censure him for using it.

Children go through the fad stages and come out of them quite undamaged if you just handle them carefully and quietly and try to serve as a good example yourself.

Fortunately the language that children will use when they grow up is far more determined by that they hear in their home than by anything they pick up in the street.

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Proper Dress

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Please tell me the proper dress for the guests to wear to a church wedding to take place at four o'clock, the ceremony to be followed by a large reception in a hall.

Neither my husband nor I ever attend any affairs where it is necessary for us to be dressed in anything but good-looking street clothes, therefore we would have no other use for "party dress", and we don't want to go to unnecessary expense. We are not related to the bride, whose guests we will be.

P. P.

To this day-time wedding and reception, you and your husband should wear your best-looking street-clothes. That is, you wear a suit, or a street-length dress and coat, or an ensemble of dress and coat (for example, a redingote). Wear a hat that matches or harmonizes with your dress, and choose your other accessories carefully—gloves and stockings in the same shade, a good-looking afternoon bag.

Your husband would wear a business suit, dark blue perhaps.

Two Shower Guests

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Five years ago two cousins of mine were hostesses to a shower for me, before my baby was born. Now they are each expecting a baby, about a month apart, and I would very much like to return their kindness. They both live here and know the same people.

But I am puzzled about this: Would it be in good taste for me to have one shower for both? Or should I plan to have two showers, several weeks apart?

Grace

If I were you, I'd plan to give only one shower, with the two guests of honor. And I think it would be more fun!

Movie Invitation

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

If a boy asks you to go to a movie which you have seen, should you tell him that you have seen it, or just accept his invitation without saying anything about it?

N.T.

It seems to me pointless not to tell the boy that you have seen the movie — even if you say you've seen it and would especially enjoy seeing it again. If you don't want to see it again, you run the risk of showing your boredom, or of inadvertently making some comment that will reveal that you have already seen it.

Using Family Car on Date

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Is it proper for a girl to use her family's car if she is going out with a young man who doesn't have a car?

Joan

Yes, if she has her family's permission. The girl and the young man shouldn't over-use the privilege.

Her CROWNING GLORY

by Delight Dixon

THE BEAUTY BAZAAR

This little-girl forehead curl adds a bit of sauciness and a gay, youthful nonchalance to an effective hairdo.

MADAME POMPADOUR is "in again" . . . with variations. There are curls, swirls, ringlets, pugs, puffs, bangs and waves to mark the newest version of the pompadour. There are curls to the right as well as puffs to the left that make this year's pompadours different from those of previous years. And while the truly "up" hairdo is out of the picture, every hair style with a slight or exaggerated upward trend is in.

The special coiffure created for Erin O'Brien Moore, actress, shown on this page, suggests the French Empire when pretty ladies wore their hair softly to match the flowing lines of Grecian gowns. The face-framing hair is drawn upward and away from the face. The hair on the side of the part is pulled back of the ear, barely touching its upper tip, while the other side of the hair is made into soft curls that fall slightly forward to line up with the first wave. Clusters of large, luscious curls are shown over the back of the head.

In order to fashion this style, the hair must be about six inches long because the curls are pinned across the back of the head, then permitted to fall softly over the nape of the neck. Adapted to a youthful face, this style is young and gay. It is just as pleasing and extremely regal when used on older and more dignified heads of gray or graying hair.

The true pompadour, though slightly modified to meet today's wishes, is brushed straight back off of the face and a soft but deep wave extends from ear to ear one inch back of the hair-line. The hair forming the pompadour terminates in a row of soft, flat ringlets that cover the part between the front and back hair. The hair at the back of the head hangs almost shoulder-length and is left soft and fluffy instead of being made into definite curls or hanging curls.

The style designed especially for Actress Dorothy Lowell brings out the vibrant beauty of her lustrous red hair. This is a versatile hairdo. Its back arrangement can be worn as shown in the photograph for daytime, or it can be pinned up into a soft chignon or figure 8 for evening or dressy wear. This is a good style for young or old. The fulness at the back of the head gives softness to a firm jawline or can be used for giving youthfulness to a facial contour no longer firm. A black velvet bow worn on top of the head, midway between front and back arrangement, suggests the George Washington coiffure.

Honey-haired Yvette, radio singer, shows a style especially created for her. It is called the "Petit Enfante Française." The little-girl curl which dips low over the left eye is typical of the hair arrangement of French children and matches the fragile features and delicate coloring of this pretty radio singer. The hair on the side of the part is brushed straight back to cover only the uppermost tip of the ear. The ends of the hair which fashion this modified pompadour turn forward and show two or three wispy ringlets flat against the head.

The back arrangement is waved diagonally, the ends of the hair falling softly to just below the true neckline. This hairdo, either as shown here or adapted to the individual, may be worn by any girl. The forehead curl gives a too-broad face the illusion of slenderness, or, if the curls are dropped over the temple, it adds fulness to a too-thin face.

Lovely ashblonde Muriel Angelus, soprano, is photographed here in a hairdo called "American Beauty Bangs." The cluster of curls forms the top of the coiffure and falls softly over the forehead to make flattering bangs. The hair at the back of the head is brushed straight upward, secured in place, and the ends of the hair made into ringlets which form part of the crown curls. Hair lacquer is sprayed over the back of the head to keep the hairs in place. Bob pins or hairpins, hidden discreetly, secure the substantial curls on top of the head. (Not a hairpin or bobpin must show if the coiffure is to show perfect grooming and control.)

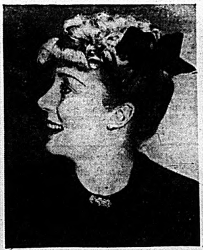
Add a velvet bow, or a barrette to the side of the coiffure to give it a more youthful or dressier touch. Or, match the bow to your costume if you want to carry out the color scheme of the ensemble.

Hats fit becomingly over the newest coiffures. Muriel Angelus is also shown wearing this year's version of the restrained postilion combined with pancake sailor in black velvet with bright green grosgrain ribbon bows and fine-mesh nose veil. The hat rests squarely on top of the head and the flattering veil serves two purposes: It adds prettiness to the picture and holds the pompadour-bangs and side curls in place. A hatpin hidden under the bows holds the hat in place.

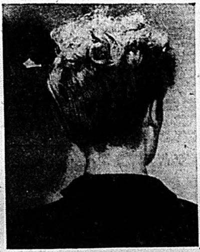
One great advantage in this season's coiffures is that they are suited to the newest hats. Any one or all of these hairdos can wear the small calot or "beanie," or a hat such as that worn by Miss Angelus, to becoming advantage. Add earrings to the ensemble and the complete picture becomes more dramatic.

Hair styles repeat themselves, to be sure, but always slightly modified to meet the needs of the present day demands. One reason why women did not so readily accept the upward hairdos a few seasons ago was because hats had not been styled to fit the drastically-different coiffures. Now, however, hat and hair go together and are harmonious. Even the most severe arrangement can be modified to the individual's needs, to flatter her facial contour, to blend with and flatter her features, and to look well with or without a hat.

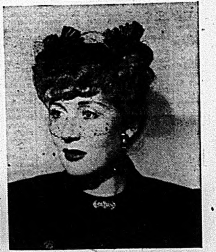
Whether your pompadour is a true pompadour, or any one of the variations shown on this page, you can wear it by fitting it to your face. If you've been doing your hair the same way for a long time, try pulling it up here, over there, pinning your curls up and letting them fall down over the back of your head; or perhaps for complete newness, pile your curls high on top of your head and let them swoop softly over your forehead. They're all new, becoming and extremely feminine to touch off this season's purely lady-like ensemble of makeup, clothes, hair styles and manners.



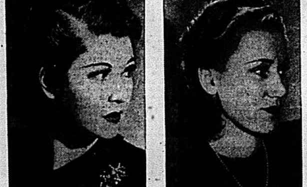
Bangs arranged with studied carelessness over the front of the head and forehead . . .



. . . and simplicity at the back of the head make this a fresh-looking style for the new season.



Add earrings and a hat with a nose veil and the ensemble becomes both dressy and dramatic.



The adaption of a French Empire coiffure, left, is easy to fashion and easy to keep looking well groomed. At right is a versatile hairdo. The back hair can be worn loosely or pinned up into ringlets, a bun or roll.

Delight Dixon Says:

BUILD up your mood to the excitement of the evening date, or be as calm as a little lamb if you're too keyed up and want to effect a tranquil personality. Take a lukewarm shower, follow with a brisk rubdown and then dash on a gay, sparkling, fragrant cologne. Or take a leisurely, perfumed tub bath and spray on a soft, clinging-vine type of fragrance if you want to feel as relaxed as a quiet lamb. Fragrance is an important accessory to one's personality and will go far toward changing one's mood.

When liquid powder, or the liquid powder type of foundation thickens and makes application impossible, do this: First shake the bottle or stir its contents. Then, spoonful by spoonful, add enough skin or face lotion to it to bring it back to its original consistency. The beauty aid will then be as good as new and will go on smoothly and evenly.

One of last year's wardrobe of lipsticks comes all dressed up in a new container that suits today's trend for the military. It's a real Yankee Doodle Dandy trio of three uniformed lipsticks lined up in parade precision in a navy blue case with red strap; or, if you choose, a red case with navy strap. The lipstick containers are red, white and blue. The rouges range from a soft pink to a gold-spiked orange—so good with beiges and browns—and a saucy red that goes with all dark costumes.

Chronic bridge players as well as office workers and those employed at sedentary jobs are likely to develop hip and sit-down bulges. Stretching, bending and correct breathing between rubbers of bridge, or during any business recess, as well as correct posture while sitting, all help encourage suppleness of muscles. An occasional period of relaxation or well-planned exercise is a healthful step for anyone who sits for long hours at one stretch.

On this Mother's Day, why not do some small thing, something extra, to surprise her and make her feel like a Queen? Perhaps you can give her a manicure and a hand massage, a new application of nail polish, brush her hair and massage her scalp and give her a new hairdo. Even if you haven't a dime to spare, I know she will appreciate any thoughtful deed you can perform which will, in a small measure, make her feel that this is her special holiday.

Good posture is as important at the dinner table as it is in the drawing room. Certainly it makes a more attractive you and at the same time aids digestion. Playing with knives and forks, toying with the napkin or tinkering with dishes are little habits to be guarded against if you want to be charming at the dinner table.

What Are Your Problems?

I HAVE been using a mixture of peroxide and ammonia for bleaching my hair for well over three years. Recently, however, and although I have used the same mixture and method of application, my hair has turned a bright gold, almost brass. How can I overcome this over-bleached appearance and what went wrong with my bleaching method? IVY.

The chances are you are using too much ammonia and that you are overlapping the application of bleaching agent and allowing it to remain on too long. Try using less, much less, ammonia in your regular amount of peroxide and let the solution stay on your hair only about one-fourth as long as usual. If your natural hair has any red or gold in it, I suggest that you try using plain peroxide as a bleaching agent, letting it remain on until dry. In the meantime use a bluing rinse for toning down the harsh, over-bleached appearance of your hair.

The cuticle of my right thumb is rough and grows thick and in layers at the sides. It seems that no amount of trimming helps do away with this condition. Do you have any suggestions that will help correct this cuticle condition which appears only on my right thumb? "CANDY."

Try using oily or glycerated cuticle remover instead of scissors or nippers for removing excess cuticle. Also, use a good nail-grooming aid or cuticle oil or cream every day in an effort to keep the nail-framer soft and pliable. If you must trim off hard, ragged edges, be sure that you first use an oil or cream for softening it.

I want to lose 15 pounds by the Fourth of July. We are going to a family reunion on that date and I am ashamed of my size and weight. This extra weight has made me look fat all over and since I am only five feet one inch, is most unbecoming. "NEW YORK CITY."

You forgot to enclose the necessary three-cent stamped, self-addressed envelope. If you will do so at once I'll rush my weight-losing suggestions to you by return mail. Follow these suggestions and you will have no trouble whatever in losing the desired number of pounds.

How can I overcome oily skin, blackheads and blemishes? My skin is terribly oily and broken out and it seems that every pore is filled with a blackhead. Please tell me what cream to use for cleaning my skin. MARIE O'C.

I'm sorry I haven't space in my columns to print my suggestions for overcoming the skin condition you describe. Send along a three-cent stamped, self-addressed envelope and I'll send my suggestions at once. In the meantime use soap and water for cleansing your skin and watch your eating habits and elimination.

MISS DIXON will be happy to answer questions on beauty upon receipt of a three-cent stamped, self-addressed envelope for reply, sent to her in care of this newspaper.

Baseball Winning And Losing Streaks Hard To Explain As Cleveland Drops Four In Row

St. Louis Cards Also Lose Three Straight After Winning 10 in a Row

FELLER WHIPPED

By JUDSON BAILEY
Associated Press Sports Writer

One of the mysteries in sports is what causes a team to go into a losing streak the moment a winning streak is snapped.

It happens so often as it is now happening to Cleveland Indians. They roll along invincible for 11 games, the longest string of victories in the major leagues this season, then, presto, they lose four in a row.

The same malady struck St. Louis Cardinals of the National League, blighting them in three straight games after they had won 10 in succession.

The margin between success and failure often is small. Cleveland's present skid started Tuesday against Washington Senators when Ken Keltner let a grounder go through him for two runs. Then the Tribe lost two to the Yanks. They could just as easily have won both.

Yesterday the Indians built up a four-run lead in the second inning for Bob Feller, the best pitcher in baseball, and yet he was knocked out of the box two innings later as St. Louis Browns triumphed 9-6. It was the first time since 1938 that the Browns had whipped him.

The loss reduced Cleveland's advantage to two games over the Yanks, against whom they will open their first eastern invasion next week.

Rain forced postponement of the three other major league games scheduled yesterday.

EX-MAJOR LEAGUE HURLERS FIND INT. LOOP TOUGH

Many Dropped Down to Minors Cannot Win a Game in the League

WINGS MOVE UP

(By The Associated Press)

The International League is proving a stiff testing grounds for a handful of ex-major league pitchers trying to make a comeback this year.

Roxie Lawson of Montreal, Vallie Eaves of Toronto and Baltimore's Clyde Smoll are three in particular who are finding the sledding tough.

Lawson, a 35-year-old righthander hasn't finished any of the three games he started this year. He lost two.

Eaves lost three straight with the last place Leafs and was knocked out of the box on four occasions.

Smoll dropped his fifth yeserday, 6-5 to Carl Doyle, another National League castoff now hurling for Rochester. Neither was around at the finish. Max Surkont went to Doyle's relief in the fifth and checked the Birds with three hits in 4 1-3 innings, while Ken Trinkle replaced Small in the sixth.

The victory was Doyle's third and lifted the Wings into fifth place in the standings ahead of Syracuse Chiefs, who lost to Montreal, 5-3 in the only other game. The Newark-Buffalo and Jersey City-Toronto contests were postponed because of rain.

Wes Flowers hurled eight hit ball to turn back the Chiefs. His mates nicked Joe Krakauskas, formerly with Cleveland Indians and Washington Senators for nine hits. Krakauskas, who has only been with the Chiefs a week, pitched a two-hitter his last time out.

Pro. Hockey Players Form Association

New York, May 10 (CP)—At a meeting within the next few weeks, the National Hockey League Governors may give preliminary consideration to the status of the newly-formed Association of Professional Hockey Players of America.

The association, formed this spring under the direction of George P. (Jerry) Geran, former Dartmouth College and Boston player, hopes to obtain the co-operation of all professional hockey leagues. Object of the player organization is to assist players and former players in need of financial help.

Organized in New York by Geran, the association's first officers are all members of the New York Rangers: President, Art Coulter; Vice-Presidents, Alex Shibicky, and Mac Colville; Treasurer, Neil Colville; Secretary, Geran.

Geran said today membership applications had been received from players in several minor leagues as well as from N.H.L. players. He hopes the N.H.L. governors will appoint members to serve on the association's advisory committee.

Whirlaway Favored To Take Preakness

By MASON BRUNSON
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Baltimore, May 10 (AP).—Visitors by thousands packed Pimlico today to see eight three-year-olds fight for a $50,000 prize and one shiny silver vase in the 51st Preakness Stakes.

With Whirlaway, Warren Wright's brilliant Kentucky Derby winner, as the main attraction, and mud as a threat to speedsters, Maryland Jockey Club officials looked for a crowd of 40,000 or more by post time (5:45 p.m. E.D.T.)

The weather turned chilly late yesterday and although the weather man promised no rain today, showers Thursday night and most of Friday left the track heavy. But that was expected to be more a help than a hindrance to Whirlaway in his bid for a second leg in the coveted "triple crown", Derby, Preakness and Belmont Stakes.

Most of those who had $2 were ready to wager that the Calumet Comet would walk away from the field.

Those looking for something to overtake him had a wide range of choices.

There was Porter's Cap, C. S. (Lucky Howard's colt that won the Santa Anita Derby and Chesapeake Stakes; there was Royce Martin's Our Boots, four-time conqueror of Whirlaway, and there was Elmer Dale Shaffer's Curious Coin, second in the Wood Memorial and Flamingo Stakes.

For pacemakers there were Crispin Oglebay's Ocean Blue, Goden Phipps' King Cole, Robert Kleberg's dispose and Kansas, from the Millsdale Stable of Tony Pelleteri and Mel Emerich.

The referee, a flying officer, couldn't stay for more than an hour of overtime because he was due back at his station.

Commander Charles F. Hallaran, R.N., former Irish rugby international, died on active service attempting to rescue a sailor who had fallen into the sea. Commander Hallaran, who played rugby 15 times for Ireland between 1921 and 1926, retired from the navy several years ago but rejoined the service when the war began.

Major Cecil Key Hutchison, 64, twice winner of the St. George's Challenge Cup, one of the most valued golf trophies in existence, is dead. Former Scottish international golfer, Major Hutchison won the Chalenge Cup in 1903 and 1910 and in 1909 reached the final of the British amateur championship, losing on the 36th green to Robert Maxwell.

Quebec League Favors New Setup For The Playoffs

Montreal, May 10 (CP)—Officials of the Quebec Senior Hockey League said after the annual meeting last night that a move "may be made" to attempt a revision of the playdow arrangements leading to the Allan and Memorial Cup finals.

The proposed revision was suggested, after te meeting, by James P. McCaffrey of Ottawa Senators. If it were adopted, the Quebec Amateur Hockey Association, the Ottawa District Branch and the Maritime Amateur Hockey Association would band together in playoffs as one unit to declare a champion to advance in Cup play.

Under the arrangement, all gates of such inter-branch playoffs wold be split between the branches instead of being passed on to the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association President Norman Dawe of the Q.A.H.A. said he thought the idea a good one, and delegates believed the Ottawa district and Maritime branches were interested.

McCaffrey said his suggestion would bring the Eastern playdowns into line with the situation in Ontario where two bodies, the Ontario Hockey Association and the Northern Ontario Hockey Association, play off to declare a winner to adance in Cup competition.

Meeting Routine

The meeting itself was routine. George Slater and the entire Board were returned to office and Slater thus enters his fifth term as head of the league.

A new attendance record was set during the 1940-41 season, reports showed, when the league played before a total of 419,955 fans, as compared with 322,852 last year. The figues included four games which Montreal Royals played against St. Jerome Papermakers, an intermediate outfit, in the Provincial playdowns.

Attendance at scheduled games totalled 322,106, with Montreal drawing 104,125, Cornwall 33,830, Quebec 68,180, Ottawa 96,091, and Verdun 19,880.

SOOSE AWARDED DECISION OVER KEN OVERLIN

Middleweight Championship for New York and California Changes Hands

A SLOW MATCH

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, May 10 (CP)—Billy Soose, the ex-Pen State Intercollegiate boxing champion, less than a year ago just another fighter lost in the shuffle in the Pennsylvania coal-mining belt, is the world's middleweight champion —New York and California version.

The Farrell, Pa., puncher was awarded a 15-round decision last night over Ken Overlin, the well-liked champion from Washington, D.C., a decision that had the fight faithful still talking today. Most of the boxing writers at the ringside had scored Overlin as the winner by a wide margin as well as a big majority of the 11,676 fans who contributed to a gross gate of $35,973.

The ring generalship picked up in a dozen years of barnstorming on three continents seemed to be carrying Overlin to victory over the harder-punching Soose. At the 10- round mark Overlin had in the opinion of many, won eight of them. But the Pennsylvanian put on a stirring rally in the last two rounds that was enough to swing the verdict his way.

Referee Arthur Donovan and Judges Marty Monroe and Billy Healy all voted for Soose. Donovan's card gave Soose eight rounds and Overlin seven. Monroe scored the fight the same way. In Healy's eyes it was not even close. He went overboard on Soose, nine, five and one even.

Soose showed little of his usual class in last night's affair and failed to explode any of his much-talked-about right hand bombs under Overlin's chin.

Consistent clinching by Overlin and the failure of Soose to open up with an attack until the late rounds slowed up the match. There were no knockdowns and neither fighter was hurt badly though Overlin was staggered in the ninth and 10th rounds.

Overlin, who won the title from Ceferino Garcia in the Garden April 25, 1940, weighed 159 1-2 to 157 3-4 for Soose.

Race Is Named British Two Mile

Memphis, Tenn., May 10 (AP)—The two-mile race at the Memphis Cotton Carnival track heet here Sunday has been named "The British Two Mile," and here's why:-

Yesterday, from its bombed offices, the Amateur Athetic Association of England remembered traditional courtesies and cabled good wishes to General Chairman Guy Stollenreck, who had met the British officials while managing an American track team in Europe.

Stollenwreck's answering sable said: "In appreciation we are naming event 'British Two Mile', hoping for world record."

The cable was signed by six of the athletes on whom the "world record" hope is based: Fred Wolcott, Rice; Greg Rice, Notre Dame; Allan Tolmich, Wayne University; Roy Cochran, Indiana; Ralph Schwarzkopf, Michigan; and Earle Meadows, Southern California. All of them have participated in meets in London.

Phil Marchildon

Pitcher Phil Marchildon, another of the 1940 Toronto boys brought up by the Philadelphia Athletics this year, once had plans of becoming an aviator and joining the Royal Air Force.

Now, however, he is seeking to stick with the A's as a pitcher.

Marchildon joined the Toronto club in 1939 after graduating from St Michael's college there. He won 10 games against 13 losses last year with a last-place club. He had 135 strikeouts, which was second best in the league.

An inward love breeds outward talk,

But these delights I neither wish,

(Izaak Walton's "Compleat Angler."

Just like "taking coals to Newcastle," William Lang, well known Toronto naturalist and expert angler, had the distinction of taking some of his renowned moving pictures of Canadian angling facilities and wild life directly to Hollywood, the cradle of the movie industry, according to Joe Shortt, President of the Belleville Anglers' Club. "Every person who is the least bit interested in fishing, hunting or wild life should avail themselves of the opportunity of seeing and hearing Mr. Lang at Bridge St. Auditorium on Monday night," Prexy Shortt commented and to which we had to add an amen, as we had the privilege of seeing Bill Lang in action and also of witnessing some of his unique moving pictures of Canadian nature some years ago. Taking into consideration Mr. Lang is coming to Belleville with pictures and lectures he has delivered from New Orleans to Los Angeles and over to Boston and for the direct benefit of Belleville Boys' Camp at Moira Lake, the Bridge St. Church auditorium could not hold a small percentage of those who should attend.

It is to be hoped that now Hank Greenberg is in the American army he will be permitted to serve his term without a lot of publicity, which is after all his desire. Greenberg sought no favours or privileges and accepted his army lot with good grace like any American citizen. However, now that he has been accepted as an ideal army recruit, it is to be hoped people will leave him alone.

Do you remember when Babe Ruth hit his seventh home run of the American Baseball League season at Chicago 17 years ago today, to give him a lead over his rivals —Gabby Hartnett of Chicago Cubs, Jake Fournier of Brooklyn and Harry Heilmann of Detroit? The Babe hit 46 homers that season, to bring his all-time total to 284. When he retired in 1935 he had 729 to his credit.

When the announcement of transfers in the Ontario Baseball Association was made this week, several names well known in district baseball circles were mentioned. For instance Art Calhoun, former Belleville senior moundsman back in 1936, and Doug Mowry, Peterborough catcher, turned up at St. Catharines, while George "Udy" Blazetich, returned home to Welland after seeing Ontario first in Napanee, Toronto and Kirkland Lake. In all the town of Crowland, playing its first year of senior ball, imported no less than eight players many of whom came from the U.S.A. Niagara Falls and Welland have seven new faces each to introduce to their home-town patrons, but this corner can remember when Belleville brought two players into our fair city in 1923, Jack Ouelette and Harold Branscombe, the latter's transfer from Lindsay was held up by the parent body owing to "excessive importations." Western Ontario and the Niagara Peninsula have been allowed a free hand in the matter of importing ball players, while the Central Ontario zone was always restricted in this matter, which is no doubt the reason for the present status of the diamond game in this neck of the woods.

Fortified with Pitcher Jim Stacey and several of his Wooler team mates of 1940, the Continental Can nine made an auspicious entry into the Trenton Softball League last night by beating the 1940 Intermediate "B" champion R.C.A.F. "mushballers" 7 to 5 in the Trenton Town loop opening. Well over 1,000 fans shivered and shook at Bayside Park to help the league inaugural which was preceded by a mammoth parade, headed by league dignitaries, the R. C. A.F. and Trenton Lion's Club Boys' Bands. President Jess Baker and his able executive should be congratulated for the splendid spectacle they arranged to pry off the season's softball lid and incidentally they added to their prowess by donating the entire game's proceeds to the British War Victims' Fund and over 1,000 tickets were sold before the umpires ever sang out that familiar cry of "play ball."

Maybe a college education is of some importance after all, at least Billy Soose, the former Penn State athlete, has reasons to believe so today. Soose was given the decision over Ken Overlin last night in a title bout for the middleweight boxing crown at the Madison Square Gardens. Virtually all of the newsboys at ringside and the majority of the fans sat in amazement when the judges and Referee Donovan voted Soose the new champion. Maybe this proves the NEW saying—"It isn't what you know, but rather WHO you know."

SPORT SPICE—Hear the Quebec and Maritime puck associations are planning a get-together to gang up on the C.A.H.A. relative to financial grabs. . . . The mud conditions at Pimlico track may alter the finish of the Preakness today but still the horse that beats Whirlaway will take the honours. . . . As a warm-up prior to the league opening, Corbys A.C. and the Juniors will meet in a practice game again Monday. . . . It's senior baseball or nothing in the Niagara Peninsula these days, we note there isn't a single intermediate entry in the entire district supervised by "Peck" Ward of the Big Roar Town. . . . Of the million and a half baseball fans to attend big league games thus far this season, one-fifth of them have passed through the turnstiles at Ebbets Field in Brooklyn. . . . At that rate of going Larry MacPhail will be able to purchase a high-ranking diamond star about every month in the year. . . . The St. Louis Browns chalked up their first win over Bob Feller since 1938 yesterday when the Brownies cuffed the slipping Indians down 9-6. . . . It was the Cleveland's third consecutive loss. . . . Well at least we tried.

Champion Jockey Fractures Leg

London, May 9 (CP Cable)—Gordon Richards, England's champion jockey, fractured a leg before the start of a race at Salisbury today.

As his mount was moving toward the starting gate a horse lashed out, its hooves striking Richards' left leg.

The injury prevented Richards riding the King's smart two-year-old Myrobella colt in the Cranbourne Stakes. With a substitute jockey up, the Myrobella Colt raced to easy victory to bring His Majesty his third winner of the season.

CAPT. BASIL ELECTED

Birmingham, May 9—(CP)—Dr. Alfred Lumsden Smith, who ran for a seat in the House of Commons on a "Bomb Berlin" platform came out a poor second today.

He garnered but 1,696 votes in a by-election while Capt. Basil Peto, Conservative condidate, polled 21,573. Stuard Morris, Independent Pacifist candidate, received 1,552 votes.

The by-election resulted from the death in action of Maj. J. R. H. Cartland, Conservative, who in 1935 polled 24,559 votes to 18,684 for his Labor opponent.

Lingerie Supplies Cut

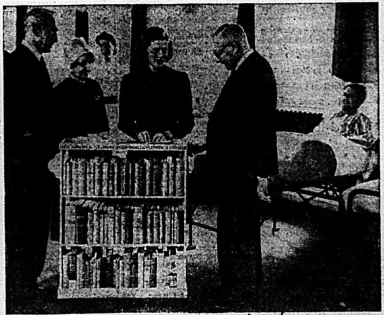
London Daily Sketch

——Women's lingerie production is to be severely curtailed under the Government's Concentration of Industry plan.

"When the plan comes into full operation," a leading hosiery manufacturer said, "production will be restricted to two-thirds of the total manufactured in the six months which ended on November 30 last year.

"Women today are more discriminating in their choice of undies than ever before. It may be, however, that they will have a restricted choice before many weeks have passed and they will certainly have to cut down their buying."

Ida Lupino and Edw. G. Robinson, featured with John Garfield in Jack London's, "The Sea Wolf," the most powerful thrill-packed picture of the season, now on the Belle Theatre screen.



Miss Mary Churchill, youngest daughter of the Prime Minister, distributes books to soldiers in hospital overseas from travelling libraries maintained by the British and Canadian Red Cross Societies. She is shown here at her post being complimented by two British Government officials, Sir Walter Wormersley, (right) Minister of Pensions, and Colonel Herbert Lightstone, M.D., D.S.O., M.C., (left). Colonel Lightstone is a son of Michael Lightstone of Montreal and a brother of Gordon Lightstone of Toronto and Madame Donalda, Canadian singer, of Montreal.

ALLEGED ATTEMPT AT KIDNAPPING THWARTED

Douglas Platt, 16-year-old messenger boy, CENTRE, and a city waterworks employee are credited with thwarting an alleged attempt to kidnap Edith Fontaine, 20, LEFT, outside a Toronto apartment. The girl told police she received a telephone call that her "boy friend" wanted to meet her outside the apartment. When she went out to wait for him she was seized by two men, injuring her arm in the struggle to free herself. Platt saw the struggle and notified police while a waterworks employee rushed to her aid. Rocco Pasquale, RIGHT, and Murray Zaldman were arrested on a charge of assault.

"GREAT BRITAIN SHALL NOT FALL"

Arriving in Ottawa where he was greeted by Prime Minister King, Prime Minister Robert G. Menzies of Australia told the Canadian House of Commons "So long as these Dominions stand, Great Britain shall not fall." The Australian Prime Minister arrived in the Dominion capital aboard an R.C.A.F. bomber which flew him from New York.

Few Price Changes In Produce Lines

Toronto, May 10—Brisk activity in export trading in eggs provided about the only feature to an otherwise drab session of the Toronto open produce market during the current week. Prices varied little, with butter losing 1-4 cent a pound and grade A pullet eggs dropping 1 cent a dozen.

Export business and breaking operations held the egg market on a fairly steady basis. Several cars rolled to seaboard this week for shipment to the United Kingdom as part of Canada's 5,400,000 dozen order from the British Ministry.

Shipments to eastern points were not heavy and they were practically negligible to northern country points. Locally, consumer demand was good, although pullets were draggy and this grade eased off 1 cent in the week's action. Other prices held about unchanged.

The seasonal increase in receipts and cautious buying in the absence of official news on minimum prices imparted a quiet and easy tone to the butter market. The first-grade Ontario product, however, reacted only 1-4 cent a pound during the week to close Friday at 29 1-4 cents a pound. There was no selling pr[illegible]ure yesterday, although sellers were desirous of keeping supplies moving.

Chromium advanced 5 to 35 and Steep Rock added 3, selling at 1.03. Other Base Metals held steady but for a loss of 1-8 for Smelters.

Moore Corporation slipped back 3-4 to 42 1-4 and Ford A was off 1-4 to 15 3-8. Fanny Farmer and Consolidated Bakeries tightened up 1-4 and Loblaw B was down 5-8 to 22 5-8.

Stepped-Up RAF Raids Indicate Greater Strength

(By KIRKE L. SIMPSON)

Washington, May 10 (AP) —The targets selected for Britain's heaviest counter air bombings of the war are as significant as the rising offensive strength of the Royal Air Force.

By London estimates, 300 to 400 British planes joined Thursday night's raids on Nazi "submarine and shipbuilding yards" centres at Hamburg and Bremen. If that report as to the number of ships used is even reasonably accurate, it means that Britain is catching up with Germany in both offensive and defensive air strength

That is an important distinction. Britain's first necessity since the outbreak of the war has been to maintain and increase her defensive air force. Day and night fighters still are her most urgent need, and they have had to be turned out at home or carried to Britain through perilous waters. They cannot be flown across the Atlantic from the United States as can long-range bombers.

Nevertheless, despite months of German bombing of British plants, the means has been found for implementing a British counter air attack approaching in its mass weight some of the heaviest German air blows struck at the British Isles. And the targets selected strongly indicate that the raids were not merely retaliatory, but were a start on stepped-up efforts to deal with the Atlantic sea menace at the source.

Plane Reserves Bigger

No absolute figures are available on the strength of the Royal Air Force today as compared with what it was a year ago when the siege by air began. Britons were informed by their government quite recently, however, that plane reserves of all types now are equal to the numbers on the fighting line. It has also been officially stated that wide dispersion of war production industries has limited the effectiveness of the German bombing campaign.

Britain's home fighter force proved adequate to its task of maintaining daylight air control a year ago. Exploits of British night fighters within the last few days are making night bombing increasingly dangerous for Nazi plane crews.

Those are purely defensive measures, however, like expanded British and American shipbuilding to replace sea tonnage already sunk or which is certain to be destroyed in the weeks and months ahead. Some United States officials have suggested that the best way to meet the torpedo attack at sea is to bomb Nazi submarine construction centres and U-boat rest and refueling bases. With the mass attack on Hamburg and Bremen, it is possible that the Royal Air Force Bomber Command is reaching a point in its expansion where it can wage tit-for-tat war on an effective and sustained scale.

Will Change Sea War

The Hamburg-Bremen raids also serve to give new point to President Roosevelt's recent call for doubling or quadrupling the American bomber output available for Britain. While weather conditions—the same bright moonlight that invited Nazi bombers into far-ranging new attacks on British west coast ports—dictated the timing of the British raids, it may have been assurances of American bombers in quantity which permitted risking mass attacks. In other words, Britain may be using her bombers more freely now because she feels replacements in large numbers will be forthcoming from the United States.

In any event, British mass bombing of Nazi shipbuilding targets, if it can be sustained, is a development that could alter materially the trends of the Battle of the Atlantic. The Hamburg-Bremen targets are about as close to British bomber bases as are English west coast ports to Nazi airfields in France or the Low Countries. That should help even things up for Britain if she is otherwise prepared to carry on a stepped-up air offensive.

DURING APRIL

Statement on Losses

From the start of the war to the end of April, according to Admiralty figures, British, Allied and neutral ships lost number 1,442 and total 5,961,044 tons.

Broken down, these figures show 885 of the ships were British, totalling 3,810,541 tons and 558 were Allied and neutral vessels totalling 2,150,503 tons.

The figure for the 12 months ending April 30 of 4,734,407 tons compares with the total of 5,639,000 sunk in 1917, the top year of imperial Germany's U-boat campaign.

Included in the April total of 488,124 tons were 187,054 tons sunk in the recent "intensive operations" in the Mediterranean, the Admiralty said.

Subtracting of this Mediterranean total from the whole of the April losses shows that only 301,070 tons were sent to the bottom in other naval war theatre last month.

Figures Given

Thus, omitting the cost of the Greek withdrawal, Britain's mercantile losses were less in April than in any month in the one-year period except the first month—May, 1940—when total losses were 248,650 tons.

The Admiralty figures presented these totals:

For 12 months:
British ships lost—719.
British tonnage lost—3,144,301.
Allied and neutral ships lost—379.
Allied and neutral tonnage lost—1,590,106.
Gross ships lost—1,098.
Gross tonnage lost—4,724,407.
For last month:
British ships lost—60.
British tonnage lost—233,089.
Allied and neutral ships lost—46.
Allied and neutral tonnage lost—195,035.
Gross ships lost—106.
Gross tonnage lost—488,124.

Press Criticize Tardy Release

A part of the press criticized the tardy release of the figures. The Evening News said "the people of America naturally want to know, within reason, the full facts of the situation before the vital decision on convoying of Allied cargoes by United States warships is made by their government."

The paper asserted that "officialdom seldom has excelled itself more in ertia and stupidity" than in its failure heretofore to bring home to all interested Britons and Americans the "grim lessons" of the shipping losses.

"The storm blown up in America among interventionists, isolationists and those in between over shipping losses is an inevitable consequence of the muddle and mismanagement in the information services of this country."

The Star said "the clumsy treatment of the news of shipping losses has given isolationists and pro-Germans in the United States a useful lever."

The Admiralty noted that most of the losses in the Mediterranean last month were Greek and a comparison between March and April losses showed that 81 purely British ships were sunk in March, 21 more than last month, and 38 neutral, eight fewer than in April.

In the first four months of 1941, the Admiralty communique showed, the total of British, Allied and neutral merchant marine losses were 368 ships, an aggregate of 1,617,359 tons.

Axis Lose 2,912,000 Tons

On the other side of the ledger, the communique declared the Axis had lost 2,912,000 tons of shipping since the war began, of which 600,000 tons were lost in the past six weeks.

In connection with the statement last night on mercantile losses during April an Admiralty press notice gave the following list of monthly losses, revised to the present, on a calendar month basis since May, 1940.

Incurred in Two Evacuations

"Included in the figure of 488,124 for April, 1941," the statement said, "were our losses incurred in recent intensive operations in the Mediterranean which amounted to no less than 187,054 tons, a large proportion of which was Greek tonnage destroyed in Greek ports.

"The Germans have claimed to have sunk during the month of April 1,144,995 tons and the Italians 74,000 tons, making a total of 1,218,995 tons, or more than 2 1-2 times the actual losses.

"It is estimated that the total tonnage lost by the enemy to date (captured sunk or scuttled) is 2,912,000 tons made up as follows:

"German losses—1,756,000 tons.
"Italian losses—1,090,000 tons.
"Tonnage useful to the enemy—66,000 tons.
"Total—2,912,0000 tons."

On March 25, the Admiralty said, it was announced that "the enemy has lost up to date 2,300,000 tons. This means that in the last six weeks enemy tonnage has been reduced by over 600,000 tons.

REFUGEE GOV'TS

Hitherto, The Netherlands fliers had been restricted in their activities to protection of shipping and perfecting their training.

The anniversary of the German invasion of a year ago today found the exiled governments both of The Netherlands and Belgium fighting on as cogs in the Allied war machine based in Britain.

Pledge Determination

Both pledged their determination to fight on.

Paul Henri Spaak, Belgian foreign minister, declared in a broadcast that "we Belgians will put aside all our internal quarrels. I entreat my fellow countrymen to rally around the King (Leopold) who is prisoner and who personifies our bleeding country . . .

"My faith in a British victory is complete, not only because right is on Britain's side, but because the United States and the British Empire have full control of the greatest riches in the world."

On the ruins of a war-shattered Netherlands church in Austin Friars, in the heart of London, The Netherlands flag was placed at half mast at the beginning of memorial services while Netherland exiles sang their national anthem.

Just Getting Into Stride

Premeir Pieter Gerbrandy declared: Hitler may run to the west and rush to the south and fly to the east and march to the north. We know that gaining victories is not winning a war....The enemy knows it too....He is cut off from vital raw materials....He knows his preparedness has reached its zenith, while America is just getting into stride."

Prime Minister Churchill marked the anniversary by sending messages of thanks to the Prime Ministers of both governments.

He said the "support given by The Netherlands Empire and Netherlands armed forces and merchant marine have been most valuable sources of strength to the Allied cause."

He thanked Belgium similarly for "effective help" in the year since the "barbarous, brutal, unprovoked" invasion of The Netherlands and the attack "without cause or provocation" on Belgium.

Churchill Sends Message

To the Foreign Minister of fallen Luxembourg, whose government-in-exile is established in Montreal, Mr. Churchill sent a message expressing the "sympathy and admiration" of Britons for the "peaceful and industrious people of the Grand Duchy once again so cruelly subjected to the tyranny of a foreign aggressor."

It was just a year ago today that Nazi parachute troops dropped noiselessly down in the thin light of early morning, clouds of planes soared over the Lowlands and waves of Nazi tanks and infantry poured across in all-out, lightning war.

Many Escape Invaders.

Within a week the issue no longer was in doubt and the last French troops were being pushed across the Belgian border, but in that short time thousands of Belgians and Hollanders escaped the invaders.

Now it is upon these thousands of refugees in Britain and upon the millions of Netherlands and Belgian subjects in the far-flung colonies across the seas that the exiled governments depend for resources and encouragement in the battle for emancipation of their peoples.

Queen Wilhelmina of The Netherlands sought haven in London as soon as it became apparent that her nation could not withstand German military power. The Belgian cabinet, forced to leave King Leopold III behind at the capitulation, fled first to France and then to Britain when France fell.

Resistance In Congo.

"The centre of Belgian resistance is in the Congo," a Belgian spokesman asserted today.

That African colony, he continued, equipped the Free Belgian forces participating in Ethiopia, and all its vast deposits of copper and cobalt are being sold to Britain.

"Diamonds from the Congo mines, in addition, are being sold in the United States, which provides us dollars with which to develop our armed forces," the spokesman said.

"Somewhere in England there is a growing daily. Belgians are making their way to England every week from all over the world. We know, for example, that there are thousands of young men eager to join us now in unoccupied France.

Free Belgian Legion, small but Proving Valuable Help

"The French have jailed them by the hundreds in Marseille, Bordeaux and other centres near the Spanish border."

In addition, many thousands of tons of Belgian merchant shipping are helping to supply Britain's war needs.

The tonnage of The Netherlands, both warships and merchantmen, is proving a valuable source of help to Britain. A number of Netherlands submarines, cruisers and armed trawlers constantly are on duty in the battle of the Atlantic.

"There are 68,000,000 Hollanders in the Dutch East Indies and South America," a Netherlands spokesman said. "We are paying our way this year. Our Empire is still intact."

This Empire, he continued, was of great economic assistance to the senior partner in the Allied cause.

Before the war European markets consumed 70 and 22 per cent, respectively, of the Dutch East Indies exports of oil and rubber," he said. "This stream of supplies to Europe now has been completely stopped, to the detriment of Europe's new master and to the benefit of the Allies and their non-belligerent ally, the United States."

The Netherlands government also has a growing legion somewhere in England.

Both governments stressed resistance at home. Belgian coal miners were reported last week to have been on a one-week strike. Sabotage, such as cutting telephone wires and firing factories, was said to be continuing.

Lay Flowers on Graves

Amsterdam, The Netherlands (via Berlin), May 10—(AP)—Bright May flowers were laid on the graves of thousands of Holland's soldiers and civilians today as The Netherlands quietly honored those who fell when the German army began its march to the English channel just one year ago.

No public commemoration services were permitted, however.

Graves of German soldiers who fell during the brief campaign were not forgotten. Members of The Netherlands Nationalist Youth Organization decorated graves of the soldiers of both nations following meetings attended by German Nazis.

The Netherlands Nazi-controlled press carried stories declaring Hollanders and Germans should forget their differences and collaborate in the great German community as brothers.

Papers Praise Adolf

Berlin, May 10—(AP)—Germany noted today, without celebration, the first anniversary of the start of the blitzkrieg through the Low Countries and France.

Editorials and special articles in newspapers described Hitler as a great military genius to whom the German people owe thanks for "the most glorious victory of their history."

MANNHEIM OBJECT

Saturday shopping crowds heard the high-pitched whine of motors, sharp machine-gun bursts and saw thin vapor trails high in the sky as Hurricanes and Spitfires, maintaining a ceaseless patrol, charged into the Germans, who tried to hop from cloud to cloud for cover.

An authoritative source said the attack on industrial objectives at Mannheim and Ludwigshafen, made by 'strong forces" of bombers, was "very successful".

"Heavy damage was done and extensive fires were left burning," he said.

Several planes were said to have bombed industrial objectives in the German capital.

Nazi raids on Britain, on the other hand, were comparatively light, although widespread.

Seven Killed By One Bomb.

A single German raider, dropped a stick of bombs on a south coast town early this morning, killing seven persons. Ten others were taken to hospitals.

The Press Association said it understood the force of planes attacking Berlin last night was "very small" and that the main assault was reserved for targets of "greater military importance".

British raiders, following up the previous night's greatest attacks of the war on Bremen and Hamburg, also lashed violently at Nazi invasion bases on the French coast. Watchers on the English shore said the activity was particularly heavy in the vicinity of Calais.

(Authorized sources in Berlin said the German capital and a larger city in Southern Germany, perhaps Mannheim, were the principal targets of the R.A.F. in last night's attacks.)

124 Shot Down In May.

The three raiders credited to fighters during the night brought the total of German planes shot down thus far in May to 124, of which 91 were night raiders. The previous record total of night bombers destroyed in a single month was 90 in April.

Fighters were credited with shooting down 74 of the night raiders, while anti-aircraft got 15 and barrage balloons the other two.

Last night's raids on England, a communique said, were on "a much reduced scale" and the number of casualties reported was described as not large. Some damage was done in a northwest English town, but the raids, with Liverpool again one of the targets, ended several hours before dawn.

ROOSEVELT MOVES

Political observers generally agree there has been an increase in sentiment in favor of convoys as the argument has been hammered home that it would be folly to spend $7,000,000,000 to aid Britain and sit idly by while most of it went to the bottom of the Atlantic.

In this connection, Prime Minister Churchill made a statement in his speech in the House of Commons last Wednesday that may have been in reference to the convoy issue in the United States.

He said "Anyone can see Hitler's fear of the United States from the fact he has not long ago declared war against them."

It is quite possible Mr. Churchill was making an indirect reply to those Americans who oppose conoys because they believe they would lead, directly and surely, to war.

New Argument Advanced

In the last few days, a new argument has been advanced in Washington—that convoys need not lead to war, that Hitler will do anything to avoid an open break with the United States. This argument has taken on new force and strength because of Mr. Churchill's statement.

Those who favor convoys are of two sorts—those who believe they are necessary and it makes no difference where they lead and those who say they are necessary and need not lead to war because of Hitler's "fear" of the United States.

Meanwhile, there has been a perceptible growth in the number of Congressmen who favor convoying and reports indicate that the capitol, if anything, is behind public opinion throughout the country.

Administration leaders, confident that the President is working on an extremely important statement regarding foreign policy, meanwhile decided today to delay a Senate showdown on the convoy issue until after the President has addressed heads of the Latin American mission here next Wednesday night.

Important Talk

It generally was expected Mr. Roosevelt's talk would be one of the most important in months, and some informed legislators predicted it would clarify many existing questions concerning the extent to which the United States would go in insuring the safety of war supplies consigned to Great Britain.

For that reason, it was said, leaders decided to hold off a vote on the resolution by Senator Charles Tobey (Rep.-New Hampshire) to prohibit convoys—a proposal which was pigeon-holed by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee last week.

Tobey intends to force a vote eventually, however, by offering it as an amendment to administration-sponsored legislation permitting the government to buy or lease foreign ships now lying idle in American harbors. But that legislation will not be called up until after Wednesday.

Seek Congregational Approval

Chairman Walter George (Dem-Georgia) of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said he understood some of Tobey's supporters reiterated his belief that Mr. Roosevelt would seek congressional approval before sending the navy to escort war shipments to Britain. "On a matter of that importance," George declared, "I cannot believe he would do anything else."

On the Senate floor yesterday, Senator Gerald Nye (Rep-North Dakota) said that some of those urging convoys were using a "chain telegraph method" to bring "pressure" on the government. He read a telegram from Edison Marshall of Augusta, Ga., saying that the latter had received a telegram urging him to wire the President suggesting convoys and asking that he induce 10 other persons to do the same.

ANTI-NAZI BEATEN TO DEATH

Dr. Henrich Simon, 61, exiled German publisher and pre-Hitler owner of the newspaper Frankfurter Zeitung, died in New York yesterday after being attacked on a street during the early morning hours. Simon managed to make his way home after the attack and was found unconscious in his bedroom by his wife, Irma. He was pronounced dead on arrival at the hospital.

CLAIMS CHIANG

Along with these press expressions was an editorial in the newspaper Kokumin discussing democracy, Communism and National Socialism, which said:-

"Totalitarian State Socialist was labelled domestic so other nations were more or less unguarded. While unguarded, fifth columnists penetrated into their weakness. In the disguised fifth-column activities, Europe and Near East nations were conquered one by one. They probably took a century for Democracy to penetrate but totalitarian state Socialism was accomplished within one or two years. Now why is this danger to be welcomed instead of guarded against?"

See Half Century Before Settlement

Japanese officials virtually have said there armed forces found China so large it would take a half-century to force a settlement unless one could be reached through amicable handling.

Nichi Nichi quoted the ambassador to Nanking as saying in an interview:—

"According to information I have received from authoritative sources . . . Chiang Kai-Shek says that if Japan wants peace Japan must propose it to Chungking through the United States, and Chiang is strongly determined not to accept even peace overtures in a direct deal with the Japanese government."

(State Department and Japanese sources at Washington declared last night that nothing was known there of any official moves to have the United States serve as a mediator between Japan and China.)

Mention of Third Power as Germany

Honda was said to have mentioned also possible efforts to bring about mediation through some third power other than the United States. Nichi Nichi quoted him as saying:—

"For instance, Germany is thinkable as an influential candidate for mediation. But then, is it possible to transfer Germany's predominant position in Europe to the east as it is?"

The ambassador, according to Nichi Nichi, pictured the United States as actually strengthening the resistance of the Chungking government. He was quoted as saying:—

"It is clear enough that Chungking is actually enforcing a policy to oppose Japan to the last moment by forming a common front with democratic nations such as Great Britain and the United States . . .

"In any event, Chiang is being infused by the United States with the idea that he is fighting for the sake of democracy and is being openly told by President Roosevelt to depend on the United States through and through . . ."

Neutral quarters in Shanghai said today Japan apparently was preparing to withdraw troops from large areas of the interior of China, for concentration along the seacoast.

By holding positions along the coast, it was said, the Japanese could continue to control supply lines and trade routes.

FORTY HOURS' DEVOTION HELD AT POINT ANNE

The Forty Hours' Devotion at Point Anne was held from Tuesday to Thursday. High Mass was celebrated every morning at eight o'clock and a sermon and Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament every evening at seven thirty. A large congregation was present for all the exercises. The altar was beautifully decorated with flowers and lights and the children's choir under the guidance of the organist, Miss Gertrude Simmons, sang in a most pleasing manner. Clergy in attendance were Rt. Rev. J. F. Nicholson, V.G.; Very Rev. Dean Leacy, Napanee; Rev. J. Powell, Erinsville; Rev. G. Hanley, Trenton; Rev. C. E. Baker and Rev. J. J. Collins, Belleville.

"DAUGHTER OF DESTINY"

By ELEANOR ATTERBURY COLTON

CHAPTER XVII

The first weeks at the club El Mexicano were like some horrible nightmare from which Devona prayed hourly to be awakened mercifully. The elaborate Spanish costumes did help to bolster the natural shyness that made her every appearance torturous. But she loathed being stared at, flirted with, flattered. She loathed the torchy rhumba music the Troubadours specialized in. She loathed dancing with bold strangers who held her too close, their hands hot on her bare arm.

But, resolutely, each evening she shed her own fastidious self with her street clothes and stepped into the costume and personality of the Dona Carlotta that Jose Macias' patrons were beginning to applaud vigorously now. They liked her deep-thoated contralto. They liked the fiery—sometimes daring—love songs Manuel had taught her.

A Warning

"You're doing all right," Macias told her after the first month. "I'm very pleased. Next week I'll put your name up in the lights out in front, too.

"I'm glad you're pleased," she said simply. It was something to know she could go on paying her rent. At least for a while. Just how much longer she could go on playing this cat-at-the-mouse-hole game of waiting with Macias she didn't know.

Because, of course, sooner or later, he'd stop playing his role of benign employer and show his true interest in her. Smiling, smooth, ever courteous, he hadn't yet offered to step past the limits of their employer-employee relationship. Not yet.

But that he would and that her job depended on her skill in postponing that dread moment, Devona knew only too well. Every instinct told her his casual pressure on her arm, his extreme kindness and consideration were only preliminaries. That, and Manuel's sly mockery were warning enough.

"There's the boy friend looking for you, sweetie pie," he would mutter when, in the midst of a rehearsal, Macias would leave his office, wander into the big deserted dining room to listen.

"He's not the boy friend," Devona answered hotly the first time.

"No?" Manuel lifted skeptical eyebrows. "Maybe not—yet."

Furious, Devona had waited until Macias was called away. Then she challenged him. "What do you mean?"

And Some Advice

Manuel calmly let a series of runs trickle down the keyboard while he looked at her steadily. "Don't tell me you don't know why you're here, Miss Innocence?"

"To sing—of course."

"Sure. But that's not all. Macias likes his girl friends young and pretty and—standoffish at first! You should have seen the one just before you. Freda Camp her name was. Poor Freda. Pretty as paint and peroxide could make her and nuts about Macias. He was nuts about her until he found out how dippy she was for him.

"Then he got bored and gave her the gate."

"How interesting." Devona stiffened angrily. "Well—I'm no—no Freda. Please understand that I'm here to sing—and that's all. Mr. Macias has been kind enough to——"

"Sure," Manuel agreed lazily. "He always starts out being very kind. Watch him when he gets into a sweat about something though. And——" with an infuriating little pat on her shoulder, "Don't get sore, kid. I'm only trying to tip you off. Anybody can see you're not in his class. Now, want to run through this number again?"

Devona let it go at that but secretly Manuel's crude warning only added weight to the burden of her own fears. She must start looking for work elsewhere—preparing some alternative when Macias decided to break her contract. As break it he would if he really wanted to. The only person that document bound was herself probably.

The Spider's Intrigue

And the money poured in. Sometimes Devona wondered how one place of business could make so much profit. Sometimes she suspected that Macias' carefully casual references to his handsome profits might be mere braggadocio.

Still, his expensively tailored suits, his three cars, his valet, his swank uptown address at the fashionable Louis Quinze Apartment Hotel—all that cost money.

Then once, by accident, she saw a bank statement—a balance running into five figures. His ruthlessness paid him well, she thought, wryly, and then tried to forget about it.

But Macias himseuf wouldn't let her. That very evening he called her to his office just before the dinner crowd began to arrive. He smiled as she came in—studied her deliberately.

"I like that costume the best," he said, his glance traveling from the deep red rose she wore tucked behind her ear, down each ruffled crimson satin flounce to the tips of the matching slippers.

"Do you?" she murmured, wondering what lay behind this flattering overture. After all, she'd worn the outfit many times. He'd picked it out himself.

"I wanted to ask your advice, Dona," he went on, blandly.

"My advice?" she echoed, puzzled.

Handsome Gifts

He turned to his desk, pulled a big box from the drawer. "Yes. What do you think of this?" And, opening the package, tossed a cloud of black lace into her lap.

Carefully Devona shook out the soft, cobwebby lace. "A — mantilla?"

He nodded , bit off the end of his cigar, spat it expertly into an empty jardiniere.

"Why — it's exquisite," examining its rich pattern. "And all hand done. Why this——" She looked up at him. "This is a museum piece!"

Macias turned back toward the packing box again. "And what about these?" He laid a jeweled Spanish comb, a matching pendant, a black lace fan in her lap.

Gorgeous they were. Blood-red rubies against ivory so intricately carved it looked like white foam in suspension. "Why—these are—magnificent!"

"Put them on," he ordered, quietly.

For an instant she met those steady, black eyes. Defiance mushroomed as she read his cool determination.

Was he going to make this the showdown? Then common sense caught up with her. Why defy him over an incident that might well be disguised as a matter of policy! Not that she wasn't perfectly aware of his real motive. Still, she smiled sweetly.

"Oh, I see. To make my costume complete," she said and, turning to the long mirror behind the desk, thrust the deep-pronged comb into a cluster of curls, draped the handsome black mantilla over it. "That looks much more authentic, doesn't it?"

He smiled slowly, accepted her make-believe. "I thought it would improve the outfit. And now, the locket."

With clumsy fingers, he fastened the delicate chain around her throat.

Fascinating Singer

"That ought to fascinate my public," she laughed, still determined to carry the pretense through. "And may I leave these in your private safe after the last show? They're much too valuable to have lying around my hotel room."

His eyes laughed at her as he nodded. "Yes, if you prefer."

The danger thus skirted for the moment, still it left her a little breathless. This, she, knew, was only the beginning!

"It must be nearly time for my numbers, now," she said, edging toward the door. "Was there anything else?"

He waved his cigar by way of dismissal. "Not now. I'll be out to hear you in a minute." His slow smile did nothing to quiet the frantic racing of her heart.

And neither the charm of the lovely mantilla or the troubled emotions churning within herself gave new sparkle to her performance. Her audience responded with real enthusiasm, applauded until Manuel muttered a teasing, "The girl's a hit. Come on, fellows, give 'em another chorus."

Another chorus and still another. And yet they clamored for more. Flushed, thrilled by the response, Devona gave Manuel the signal for the next encore. Then even as she opened her lips to begin the popular Mexican folksong she saw him!

Unexpected Guest

A tall man, familiarly broad-shouldered, lean-jawed, a calm, poised carriage, a swinging stride that could belong to no one else. Dale Brasher!

For an instant the note of song died in her throat. Not Dale! Not tonight!

He was following a head waiter through the crowded room to a small table at the side. So far he hadn't seen her. And when he did!

She'd known this had to happen, of course. Eventually he'd come. Maybe, she prayed fervently, he wouldn't recognize her. Maybe he——

"Hey!" Manuel beside her muttered low. "What's the matter? I've given you that introduction three times."

"Once more, please," and drew a long breath. Then, deliberately leading the way so that the Troubadours would serenade patrons on the opposite side of the room from where Dale sat alone, she began again.

Macias beckoned her, peremptorily. The Troubadours turned to obey that summons.

A "Surprise" for Her

"Just you, Dona. I have a little surprise for you." He took her arm, nodded to the three musicians to go on. "An old friend of yours, I believe."

Deliberately, he was leading her to the table where Dale sat.

Steeling herself, Devona notched her chin higher, met the surprise in Dale's glance as, stumbling, he pushed back his chair, stood up.

"An old friend of yours, Brasher," Macias said, wickedly, all smiling friendliness while he watched them. "Miss Raebourne is my Dona Carlotta, you know."

For an instant their eyes met. Then, her face a perfect mask for the turbulance seething within, she sank carelessly into the chair opposite him, saying quietly, "Good evening, Mr. Brasher."

"MECCA" OINTMENT for Burns, Sores, Cuts, Etc

AT THE BELLE

"The Sea Wolf"

Today's new picture at the Belle Theatre is "The Sea Wolf," Warner Bros. screen version of the famous novel by Jack London, starring Edward G. Robinson, Ida Lupino and John Garfield; with a supporting cast headed by Gene Lockhart, Barry Fitzgerald, Alexander Knox, Stanley Ridges and Francis McDonald.

"The Sea Wolf" is a powerful story of life aboard the hell-ship "Ghost," where Wolf Larsen ruled the lives (and often the deaths) of the men in his shanghaied crews. Into this millieu comes a frightened young girl who is fleeing from prison and a sensitive young author, picked up from the wreck of a San Francisco ferry. The impact of this pair upon the oddly assorted crew of "The Ghost," makes a dramatic and memorable story, which finds its perfect medium in film.

A tender and highly unusual love story is woven through the powerful action, with Ida Lupino and John Garfield as the sweethearts. Robinson, of course, portrays Larsen. Alexander Knox, a very promising screen newcomer, plays the role of the young author, and Barry Fitzgerald, one of the screen's most brilliant character actors, plays "Cookie," a sniveling, slimy coward who frawningly reports to Larsen everything that goes on among the other members of the crew.

Michail Curtis directed "The Sea Wolf," from the script by Robert Rossen, based on Jack London's stirring novel.

Belle latest world news events and "Tortoise Beats the Hare" a color fun cartoon precede the feature attraction. Continuous shows prevail today.

AIKENS W. M. S.

The May meeting of the Aikens Women's Missionary Society was held on Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Arthur Saylor, with fifteen members present.

Due to the absence of the president, Mrs. Fred Westover, who was at the bed side of her mother, Mrs. Chas. Moon, the meeting was in charge of the first vice president, Mrs. E. K. Hubble.

Scripture readings were given by four members. A creed of Christian Living was repeated slowly and thoughtfully by all present, as part of the worship service.

A hymn was sung and the offering was taken and dedicated.

Mrs. A. H. Finkle, a former president, who now resides in Belleville was present, and gave a short talk on "Finding the Way Through Prayer", which was deeply appreciated by all. Thanks were extended to Mrs. Finkle for her contribution to the program by Mrs. W. H. Kells.

The Study Book was in charge of Mrs. Thos. Irwin and Mrs. W. H. Kells, who were assisted by Mrs. Ross McNary and Mrs. Urvan Perry. They presented the life story of Rev. Oliver Jackson, B. D., O.B. E., who carried on Missionary work up and down the rough Newfoundland coast where he met his death after twenty five years of service. Rev. Jackson had great love for the youth of Newfoundland and during his ministry he advocated Christian Education as the need of youth; co-operation in industry as the cure for poverty and intelligent Christian Citizenship as the foundation of Democracy.

A poem of faith was read by Mrs. (Rev.) Scott and prayers were offered by Mrs. Harley Hubble, Mrs. Stanley Spafford and Mrs. Selburn Westover. The meeting was closed with the singing of the National Anthem. Lunch was served at the close of the meeting.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Vivacious Lady"

Co-starring two of the screen's leading favourites, Ginger Rogers and James Stewart, who received the coveted Academy award for the best performances during 1940, "Vivacious Lady" offers a brilliant and up-to-date romance to filmgoers. It is scheduled for the Capitol starting on Sunday midnight after 12.05 a.m.

The stormy love affairs of a night club entertainer and a studious young professor is the theme of the story, the acting of which takes place in a sleepy little college town, in whose dignified atmosphere the heroine is astonished to find herself.

Stewart, as the young pedagogue, marries Miss Rogers, the entertainer, after a brief whirlwind courtship in New York City and takes her back to Old Sharon. Fearing the stern tongue of his Puritanical father, who is also the president of the college, the boy hesitates to tell his family of the marriage.

Only Stewart's cousin, played by James Ellison, knows truth, and he loyally tries to help out the couple. A series of complications, fostered by the determination of Stewart's boyhood sweetheart to marry the young man, and by Miss Rogers' growing impatience with her husband's lack of decision, make up the interlocking crises of the story, with many hilarious situations piling high the entertainment values of the picture.

The two stars have strongly colorful roles that give them notable opportunities to display their abilities and they are given grand support by a hand-picked cast. Ellison is featured as Stewart's play-boy cousin and Charles Coburn and Beulah Bondi as Stewart's parents, Frances Mercer as the "other woman," Phyllis Kennedy as a bored housemaid and Grady Sutton as Stewart's laboratory assistant, all fill prominent roles.

The settings range from the glitter of a Broadway night club to the ivy-clad walls and sedate classrooms of the small college town. And against these settings the conflict of modern romance with old-fashioned ideas is played in striking fashion. A sparkling modern ballad, "You'll be Reminded of Me," is sung by Miss Rogers in the night-club sequence. The story of "Vivacious Lady" is based on a magazine story of the same name by I. A. R. Wylie.

"A Fugitive From Justice"

One of the season's most engrossing action films is featured on the same program. "A Fugitive From Justice," includes in its cast Roger Pryor, Lucile Fairbanks, niece of the late Douglas Fairbanks and Eddie Foy, Jr.

The latest edition of the popular series "Information Please" completes the programme.

The Day in Parliament

(By The Canadian Press)

TODAY:

The House stands adjourned to Monday when debate on the budget will be resumed after a brief time is devoted to estimates.

The senate stands adjourned to Tuesday.

YESTERDAY:

The House spent more than an hour arguing over procedure to be followed in dealing with private bills; referred the subject matter of the Alberta Provincial Bank Bill to the Banking and Commerce Committee after John Blackmore, New Democracy leader, expressed willingness of its sponsors to make the measure conform to the general banking laws of Canada; gave second reading to 29 divorce bills after discussion which drew from A. W. Neil (Ind. Comox-Alberni) the charge that there is collusion in "a third if not more" of divorce actions handled by parliament; gave second reading to a bill incorporating an insurance company.

The senate did not sit.

"PENNY SERENADE"

One of the most pleasurable screen treats of the year, according to Hollywood report, Columbia's new romantic drama, George Stevens "Penny Serenade" opens an entire week's engagement next at the McCarthy Theatre. With Irene Dunne and Cary Grant excitingly starred, "Penny Serenade" is said to be a romance that is everything a love story should be.

Tender, warm, unforgettably moving, "Penny Serenade" is more than an exciting reunion of two grand stars, it is a story that strikes straight to the heart, a story to remember by all those who've ever loved or ever hope to love. Based on Martha Cheavens' original McCalls Magazine novel, "Penny Serenade" tells of an irresponsible newspaperman and of his wife, of their first ecstatic meetings, of their honeymoon and its conclusion in near-tragedy of their later struggles to build a home and happiness, and of the disaster which causes the man to revert to his old, irresponsible self, and the woman to plan a divorce.

Grant is the casual newspaperman who one day wanders into a music store to purchase a record, "Penny Serenade", Miss Dunne is the young woman who waits upon him. Their whirlwind, laugh-filled, courtship, and their sudden marriage and Grant's lonely departure for Japan are thrilling, unexpected preludes to the delightful drama which follows.

When they have saved enough money, Miss Dunne follows her irresponsible husband to Japan. Their honeymoon is cut short by the earthquake; the child they have been anticipating is born dead, both are discouraged and disillusioned. But out of the wreckage of their rhapsodic romance grows something firmer, Grant's willingness to settle down and to build. They buy a country newspaper, struggle through one difficulty after another and then, to complete their new-found happiness, the young couple adopt an infant girl.

The baby brings them closer than ever; a fatal illness almost destroys them completely. Grant reverts to his old self, turns to drink; Miss Dunne fights for her home and future as long as she can. The climax of "Penny Serenade" is said to mark a high spot in tears and laughter.

England's Hour

The war-time life of England as it appears day to day to the ordinary civilian, living in or near London is described by the outstanding English author. One who has faced the first European war in her college days and described her experiences in "Testament of Youth" now compares in perspective the two conflicts

Maurois, Andre.

The Art of Living

With practical advice, combined with wit and imagination, the author of many outstanding biographies and of the current best-seller, "Tragedy of France", writes of subjects that make up the lives of everyone. With a kindly tolerance for the foibles of human nature, he unites good sense, personal experiences and recollections from reading into a spirited discussion.

Langdon-Davies, John.

Invasion in the Snow

The strategy and tactics of the Russo-Finnish War, as observed by a newspaper correspondent are described in this engrossing book. To read this book is to know the Finns better and to admire them, as does the author. He points out that the embattled democracies have much to-learn from this lonely war.

Bush Master

An authentic tale of travel and adventure which reads like fiction is this latest book by the author of the popular "Burma Road". With the Guiana today a danger spot in Hitler's scheme for world power, this description of an expedition into the wilds of Dutch Guiana will attract many readers.

——The sergeant major had the reputation of never being at a loss for an answer: A young officer made a bet with a brother officer that in less than 24 hours he would ask the sergeant major a question that would baffle him.

The sergeant major accompanied the officer on his rounds, in the course of which the cook-house was inspected. Pointing to a large copper of water just beginning to boil, the officer said:

"Why does the water boil only round the edges of the copper and not in the centre?"

"The water round the edge, sir," replied the veteran, "is for the men on guard; they have their breakfast half an hour before the rest of the company."

"ROMAN ROADS" FOLLOWED BY VICTORIOUS BRITISH TROOPS AS THEY CHASE RETREATING ITALIANS

British "Victory Parade" in Captured Asmara

A business-like passing through of troops was all the victory parade with which British marked capture of Asmara, important communications centre and capital city of Eritrea. The town fell before advancing British Empire troops who battered out the Italian defenders. The men shown here are Indians of the Empire forces.

The Road to Victory

Those "Roman roads" by which Italy was to have sealed hold over her East African empire may lead to her downfall—already they have proved the paths of conquest for the men who are beating her armies. The British follow them as they hammer at the retreating Italians. Here Indian troops are shown at an ex-Italian strong point which failed to halt their progress along the road. An overturned truck is at the RIGHT.

LONDON'S HISTORIC PLACES MARKED BY HUNS

Hamburg, Bremen Blasted With Tons Of High Explosives

Emden And Docks At Rotterdam Attacked For Second Night In Succession

MANY FIRES STARTED

London, May 12 (CP)—British pilots, trading steel for steel and fire for fire with the Nazis, beat at the German ports of Hamburg and Bremen again last night in a mighty bombing attack which left vast areas of flaming destruction.

It was Hamburg that was at the focus of these new assaults, said the Air Ministry, and a "disorganization of vital parts" of that biggest of German harbors resulted.

Shipbuilding yards nine miles in length, which line the banks of the River Elbe, were threaded and crossed with British fire, said the Air Ministry, and high explosive and incendiary bombs fell heavily in all that section.

Among the objectives hit were the Blohm and Voss shipyards—where German capital ships were laid down in the first great war.

All this was accomplished abroad at the same time that the British defenders at home—night fighters and anti-aircraft guns—were shooting down eight Nazi raiders during widespread attacks upon the islands.

6 PERSONS KILLED DURING AIR RAID

Four Are Members of One Family in English East Coast Town

London, May 12 (CP) —Six persons were killed and a number injured in an air raid early today on an east coast town where property damage was heavy.

Four of the dead were members of one family, two elder members of which were rescued by workers who spent several hours digging in wreckage. A man and a boy were killed in a neighboring house, one of many wrecked.

High explosives and fire bombs damaged residential property on the northeast coast. A number of persons were killed and injured in two towns in that sector.

MBS Agrees To New Contract With Ascap

St. Louis, May 12—(AP)—Mutual Broadcasting System stations last night agreed to sign a new contract with the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

Under the proposal agreed upon by the stockholders ASCAP will receive three per cent of the gross revenue of mutual programs for four years and 3 1-2 per cent after that until Jan. 1, 1950.

The old contract which ended last December provided for payment of five per cent of the gross. ASCAP songs have been off mutual network, as well as the Columbia Broadcasting System and the National Broadcasting Company stations, since then.

MAINTAIN TRADE WITH AUSTRALIA

Prospects Good With Many Needed Commodities Available Here

Sydney, N.S.W. (CP)—Canada's trade with Australia should be maintained this year in view of the Commonwealth's policy of building up reserve stocks of a wide range of materials, says the Canadian trade commissioner's office.

Many of the commodities—which range from raw cotton and industrial chemicals to industrial diamonds and medical supplies—are available in Canada and the Dominion will thus be assisting the general Empire war effort in addition to getting Australia's business according to a report to Ottawa.

1,700 Machinists Go On Strike

San Francisco, May 12 (AP)—Police of San Francisco and Oakland last night were ordered to duty on an emergency basis to prevent any possible trouble today at 11 shipyards against which more than 1,700 American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organziation machinists have struck.

At the same time the government officials apparently took a hand in the situation but the nature of their efforts remained unannounced.

Employers contend the strike will tie up about $500,000,000 worth of defence contract work.

The strikers are asking $1.15 an hour as against $1.12 granted them recently in a coast-wide agreement.

President's Mother Arrives In Toronto

Toronto, May 12 (CP)—Mrs. Sara Delano Roosevelt, mother of President Roosevelt, came to Toronto today to deliver an address and almost missed the guard of honor of Red Cross transport drivers which she was to inspect.

The uniformed women's unit was waiting at the passenger exit of Union Station for Mrs. Roosevelt to appear but she took an elevator from the train platform and left the station by another exit.

The transport drivers dashed from the station to Mrs. Roosevelt's hotel through a subway while Mrs. Roosevelt crossed the street. They were lined up in the hotel rotunda for the inspection when she arrived.

Mrs. Roosevelt came here to address the Toronto Hadassah organization.

Admiralty Officials Greatly Pleased With Performance Of New Warship

London, May 12 (CP)—Admiralty officials were highly satisfied with the performance of Britain's new super-battleship, H.M.S. Prince of Wales, says a Reuters special correspondent who was aboard the warship during her trials.

This mighty sister-ship of H.M.S. King George V. contains even more secret devices than that floating fortress, though completed only a short time later.

This is the correspondent's account:

"The Prince of Wales has been made virtually unsinkable by elaborate sub-divisioning of the interior by water-tight bulkheads. Should damage occur it could be quickly isolated.

"Elaborate wireless and gunnery apparatus, costing many thousands of pounds, is closely guarded from prying eyes.

"Ten 14-inch guns, mounted in three gigantic turrets, form the main armament. These turrets incorporate revolutionary — but thoroughly tested—new ideas that enable more shells to be fired in less time with greater accuracy than ever before.

Thickness of Armour a secret

"Secondary armament is sixteen 5.25 inch guns arranged in four twin turrets along each side of the ship. In addtion there are a number of multiple pom-poms, the terror of dive-bombers. Thickness of deck armor is secret, but it is calculated to resist very heavy bombs.

"Also secret is the thickness of the side armor encasing the hull. A figure of 16 inches has been mentioned unofficially in the case of 'K. G. 5', and it is said this armor should withstand high-explosive bombs and torpedoes.

"Top speed is another factor that cannot be revealed but I can say that it is around 30 knots . . .

"Officers have cabins fitted with running hot and cold water and built-in electric fires and furniture."

AFRICAN BASES, NAZI PLANE NESTS RAIDED BY R. A. F.

British Forces Capture Iraq Oil Line Fort At Rutba

TRIPOLI SHELLED

Cairo, Egypt, May 12 (AP)—British forces closing in on 38,000 Italians holding Amba Alaji fortress, perched at an altitude of 9,000 feet in Northern Ethiopia, have occupied the nearby stronghold of Gumsa, the Middle East Command announced today.

Four big Fascist guns and quantities of war materials were seized by Indian troops advancing south toward the Mountain Citadel, which lies 280 miles northeast of Addis Ababa. A second British column driving from the north is making continued progress, the War Bulletin said.

A Surprise Raid

Things picked up on the North African front over the week-end, the British Command announced, with Imperial forces at Tobruk capturing 32 Axis prisoners and inflicting casualties in a surprise raid. In the Salum sector, 80 miles farther east on the Egyptian border, the British command reported capture of an Axis tank in continuing harassing raids on the German and Italian positions.

Following the capture of Rutba, station on the Iraq oil line, the communique said the situation had quieted down there. Action at Habbaniyah Airdrome, 60 miles west of Baghdad and at Basra, on the Persain Gulf, has been lacking for several days.

On other Middle East and Mediterranean fronts the Royal Air Force raided Sicily and North Africa from Salum to Tripoli.

British planes roared by daylight Sunday over Sicily, aiming for landing fields from which German planes have attacked British shipping in the Mediterranean.

A communique said heavy damage was caused at bomber nests at Catania and Comiso where Royal Air Force pilots machine-gunned Nazi officers and soldiers fleeing for shelter.

(Although London made no announcement of a follow-up of Royal Navy shelling last Thursday of the Axis Libyan base at Bengasi, German acounts of dive-bombing operations during the week-end in the Mediterranean area indicated British warships pounded the Bengasi fortress again Saturday night. The Germans claimed two British cruisers and three destroyers participating in the new attack were damaged by dive bombers. (There was no comment from London on this Nazi claim.)

China With Material Aid Ready To Take On Japan Singlehanded—Chiang

Chungking, May 12.—(AP)—Gen. Chiang Kai-Shek declared in a speech last night that China, with material and economic aid, is prepared to undertake single-handed the task of putting down Japan.

He added it was his conviction that "any country in the world matching itself against American Democracy would meet with certain destruction".

He spoke at a farewell dinner given by Mme. Chiang for United States Ambassador Nelson Johnson who is leaving to become Minister to Australia.

He declared that the so-called world peace plan advocated April 30 by the Japan Times and Advertiser, which he called "the official mouthpiece" of the Japanese Foreign office, showed that "Japan's aggression in China is but preliminary to a attack on America".

The Japanese dream, he declared, is to effect complete nullification of United States power in the Pacific.

(The Japan Times and Advertiser's "peace plan" of April 30 allocated the "corporate state of Europe, North Africa, the Mediterranean and part of the middle east to Germany; Canada, Newfoundland and Greenland to the United States, with provisions for an "open door" in South America to the Axis Powers; and demilitarization of Malta, Aden, Singapore, Hong Kong and United States bases in the Pacific.)

WOMAN KILLED AS CAR TOPPLES OVER INTO DITCH

Mrs. Chas. Doublestein, Bangor Twp., Was Getting Out of Car When it Rolled Over

SKULL FRACTURED

Bancroft, May 12.— (Special) — Mrs. Charles Doublestein, 47, of Bell's Rapids in Bangor Township, was instantly killed on Saturday night when the automobile in which she was a passenger toppled into the ditch and rolled over on the woman inflicting fatal injuries on the Musclow Road, 16 miles northeast of this village. George McDonald, driver of the car, and his sister, Mrs. M. Mahood, also of Bell's Rapids, escaped serious injury, however.

The party was enroute to Bancroft early Saturday night when a tire on Mr. McDonald's car blew out as the vehicle was proceeding up a slight incline. McDonald successfully brought the vehicle to a stop and Mrs. Mahood alighted just as the vehicle commenced to roll backwards down the incline. Mrs. Doublestein was trying to get out of the rear door of the vehicle when it

Letter Reports Destruction Of 5 Or 6 U-Boats

Vernon, B.C., May 12—(CP)—A letter reporting the destruction of five and possibly six German U-boats has been received by Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Mackie of Vernon from a Canadian youth in training with the Royal Navy.

The letter described a U-boat attack on a convoy which caused "some losses" and then related:

"Our instruments located one (submarine) which we promptly sank. We heard it explode. Soon after, we picked up another, depth-charged furiously and brought tons of oil to the surface — which accounted for the second."

A third submarine which broke the surface also was destroyed, the letter declared and after further depth charges had been dropped a fourth came up 100 yards to starboard and was sunk by gunfire.

"While this action was going on, two U-boats appeared directly to the rear of us and a moment later another only 50 feet off our port side.

"At the same moment one of our destroyers engaged one of the rear boats. . . . We trained our guns on the other rear sub. We must have hit them as they soon crash-dived."

Then, the letter went on, the sub on the port side signalled that it wished to surrender.

The letter-writer, who was not identified, said he saw another crew abandon their sub and "as the last man went overboard, she started to sink and then keeled over. They had scuttled it."

ROOF OF ABBEY SHATTERED BY GERMAN BOMB

Confessors Chapel, Where King and Queen Crowned, Badly Damaged

ELABORATE BUILDING

(By The Canadian Press)

Workmen cleaned away the debris of a bomb-shattered roof today from the very centre of Westminster Abbey's Confessors Chapel, on the spot where the King and Queen were crowned amid pomp and splendor four years ago to the day.

A German bomb in the Saturday-Sunday raid crashed through the Abbey's lantern tower directly over the centre of Confessors Chapel, which extends slightly above the main roof of the Abbey—and sent stone and timber down upon the spot where the Coronation thrones of British sovereigns have been placed for centuries.

The most elaborate church building in Great Britain, Westminster Abbey was consecrated as the Abbey of St. Peter, and British legend has it that St. Peter himself once visited its site and blessed the ground upon which it stands.

Pallium Conferred On 20 Archbishops

Vatican City, May 12 (AP)—At a secret consistory of the College of Cardinals, Pope Pius today conferred the customary Palliums of 20 Archbishops, including Most Rev. Joseph Charbonneau, Archbishop of Montreal, and Most Rev. Alexandre Vachon, Archbishop of Ottawa.

Both these prelates became Archbishops last year.

(The Pallium is a circular band of white wool, with pendants, worn about the neck. The Pope alone has the right to confer the Pallium. Worn by Archbishops, it typifies their participation in the supreme pastoral power of the Pope.)

The ceremony, lasting 20 minutes, presumably ended without the Pope making an expected address to the Cardinals on the international situation.

NEWSMAN SAYS 9861 OF B. E. F. HELD IN GREECE

AP Writer Also Says Over 1,000 Serbs Prisoners At Corinth

VISIT TO BARRACKS

By LOUIS LOCHNER
Associated Press Staff Writer

Corinth, Greece (by courier to Berlin), May 6 (Delayed)— (AP)—An Australian brigadier, 300 British and Imperial officers, and 9,560 troops from the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand and India are held prisoner here along with four Serbian generals, 382 officers and 743 soldiers.

(As 48,000 of the 60,000 troops in Greece were safely evacuated, this group of approximately 10,000 prisoners seen by Mr. Lochner would leave a maximum of 2,000 dead or missing.)

Talks with Prisoners.

The group are awaiting transportation to Germany. I visited them for three-quarters of an hour at their quarters in Greek barracks two miles from Corinth and had an opportunity to talk freely with them.

They corroborated an impression gained from travelling here over the route of British retreat—that a lack of Royal Air Force planes was the big factor in the British-Greek defeat.

Among the distinguished prisoners was an Australian, Brig. Parrington. Another captive was G. P. Farsoun of Haifa, leader of a Palestine contingent of 1,000 Jews and 550 Arabs.

From the officers as well as the soldiers I gained the impression that the British Expeditionary Force in Greece realized it was matched against long odds, with the Germans outnumbering them both on land and in the air.

Stand at Thermopylae

One of the officers, commanding 500 men, told me 400 were killed in their stand at Thermopylae.

Forces caught in the Peloponnesus were troops who had smelled powder aplenty at Bengasi in the Libyan fighting. I was told lack of air protection cost them their chance of getting away from the Peloponnesus on destroyers sent to the Gulf of Corinth for them.

Officers predicted the German push across North Africa would not get beyond the Egyptian frontier town of Salum.

UNITED CHURCH BURNS

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., May 12—(CP)—Loss of $40,000, half to the building and half to the contents, was caused when St. Andrews United Church here was swept by fire early this morning. Believed to have been caused by a short circuit in the wiring of the organ, the fire destroyed a large part of the roof and much of the interior of the church.

The walls are intact, however, and the loss is covered by insurance. Firemen fought the blaze for four hours.

Anzac Cruisers Intercept And Sink German Supply Ship And Tanker

London, May 12 (CP)—A German merchant vessel acting as a supply ship for a Nazi raider, and a Norwegian tanker, captured by the raider, have been intercepted and sunk in the Indian Ocean by the Australian cruiser Canberra and the New Zealand cruiser Leander, it was announced today.

The sunken ships were identified as the 7,400-ton German Toburg, and the 7,031-ton Norwegian tanker Ketty Brovig. A number of Norwegian seamen and Chinese, apparently held prisoner by the Nazis, were rescued, and eighteen German officers and forty-seven German sailors seized.

William H. Hughes, Australian Navy Minister, announced in Sydney that the Canberra and Leander were on patrol duty when they sighted the supply ship and tanker. The latter tried to escape, he said, and the cruisers opened fire, setting them aflame. The crews then abandoned ship.

This incident followed the announcement in London last week that a German surface raider, believed to have been the 21,131-ton former transatlantic liner Hansa, had been sent to the bottom of the Indian Ocean.

On Saturday it was announced that the 8,046-ton tanker San Casimiro had been captured by the Nazis and recaptured by the Royal

Londoners Shoulder Heavy Burden Of Straightening Itself Out After Weekend's Heavy Raids

40 RAIDERS DOWNED

By LOUIS HUNTER
Canadian Press Staff Writer.

London, May 12 (CP Cable)—Undaunted London, bomb blasted and fire scarred, picked its way to business today and cheerfully shouldered the heavy burden of straightening itself out after the weekend's heavy raids.

Saturday night's attack indelibly marked several of the Capital's most historic places, including Westminster Abbey, the Houses of Parliament, Westminster Hall, and the British Museum.

Shelterers yielded the subways—jammed to capacity immediately the sirens sounded last night—to weary office-bound workers, many of whom found their places of business no longer existent or so badly damaged as to be no longer useful.

Underground traffic appeared the heaviest since the raids started last fall. Tube travel was the only comparatively certain method of transportation since many streest were blocked, necessitating rerouting of some bus lines.

Hit By Train, Driver Lives

Smith's Falls, May 12 (Special) — Raoul Labigen, 92 Garneau Street, Hull, narrowly escaped serious injury early Sunday morning when the truck he was driving was struck by a C.N.R. train bound from Ottawa to Belleville.

The accident occurred at a level crossing on the southwest outskirts of this town. Labigen, driving a truck owned by Cecil Fraser of Westboro, was proceeding from Kingston to Smith's Falls, and did not notice the approaching train until almost on the tracks.

The truck was dragged some distance and was badly damaged. Labigen suffered concussion, minor bruises and cuts. He was removed to the hospital here for examination, but was able to return to his home late Sunday afternoon.

S. Halpin, Belleville, was conductor of the train.

Berlin Says Von Papen Returning to Ankara

Berlin, May 12 (AP)—It was reported at the German foreign office today that Franz Von Papen, ambassador to Turkey, finally has left to resume his post at Ankara after a stay in Berlin which turned out to be much longer than first contemplated.

There was no indication as to the content of any special instructions he may have received.

FIRST RECRUITING CAMPAIGN BEGINS

Canada Needs 32,000 Men Within Two Months With Technical Services Requiring 90 P. C.

Ottawa, May 12 (CP)— Canada's first recruiting campaign of the war was launched today, its objective 32,000 more men in the Canadian (Active) army within two months, 90 per cent of them in the technical services.

"It is not a time when men can carefully calculate and measure and balance the advantages or disadvantages of remaining in civilian life or going into uniform," Defence Minister Ralston said last night in a broadcast address opening the drive.

"In the scale pan on the side of enlistment there is a heavy weight. It bears the words 'Canada needs men for the army and needs them now.' My friends, Canada has never called to the brave and true in vain."

He asked "my fellow Canadians who are fit and strong and young to join the army. And he appealed to all Canadian men and women, particularly to veterans of the first Great War, to help make the campaign a success, for "this is everybody's job."

Italian Treachery Fails To Stem Attack

London, May 12 — (CP)— Capture of an important outlying hill in Ethiopia was accomplished by native Indian forces advancing on Amba Alaji, despite the 'despicable trickery' of an Italian garrison manning the height, the British Broadcasting Corporation said tonight, quoting the report of a Reuters News Agency correspondent.

The B.B.C. said that as the Indian troops advanced on the hill, the Italians fluttered white flags at the summit.

"But when the Indians advanced to accept surrender of the height", the B.B.C. said, "the Italians hurled scores of bombs at them as soon as they reached grenade range, causing some casualties.

"The Indians, however, continued to advance and took the hill".

BLACK AND WHITE TERRIER IMPOUNDED

A black and white colored Fox Terrier was found wandering at large in Belleville over the weekend and lodged in the city dog pound by Thos. Thorne, pound custodian. There was no dog collar or dog tag attached the canine when it was found. The animal will be destroyed unless otherwise claimed.

CHARGED WITH THEFT OF TEN DOLLARS

Charged with the theft of ten dollars taken from the cash register at Vivian's garage in Shannonville, 17-year-old George Baptiste of Shannonville was arrested by Provincial Constable Hendren today.

The money was stolen from the garage cash box on Saturday and reported to the Provincial Police by Mr. Ken Vivian. It was following a lengthy investigation, that young Baptiste was taken into custody, but he flatly denied any knowledge of the theft. However, after being questioned at length by Constable Hendren at the Police Station this morning, a charge was subsequently preferred and Baptise was remanded until Thursday at which time he will appear as charged.

PROPERTY DAMAGE AMICABLY SETTLED

Considerable property damage resulted to two motor vehicles on the Shannonville gravel south of Read late Sunday when a motor car driven by Father Chas. F. Gorman, Marysville, was in collision with another automobile driven by John Donovan, 752 Douglas St., Oshawa.

Provincial Constable Hendren, Belleville detachment, O.P.P., investigated and was told that Father Gorman was attempting to pass Donovan's car just as the latter had decided to turn about and return to Read. The front fenders met with considerable force. The matter of damages was later settled and no charges were deemed necessary.

SPRING GROWTH TWO WEEKS AHEAD OF NORMAL FOR SEASON

Verdant foliage in all its spring loveliness and beauty was never more truly exemplified to appreciative residents than over the week-end when motorists driving along country roads were greeted with the sight of stately maples and other trees almost completely leafed out and with meadows and pasture fields deep in a carpet-like growth of lush clover and grasses.

Development of leaves is almost two weeks in advance of other years according to persons who mark the date each season for the appearance of the leaves. It is seldom indeed that leaves, even on the 24th of May, show the development noted at present. Old-timers who have lived their entire lives close to the soil state that never before has the growth of clover and alfalfa matched that of the present season at so early a date.

PACKET FREIGHTER READY FOR SEASON

Preparatory to taking on her current season's initial cargo out of Belleville port, the packet freighter "Glen Allan" pulled anchor at her winter moorings over the week-end and moved around to the south of the Government Dock where this morning last minute preparations were being made before taking aboard a small cargo of cheese and empties for Montreal. When loaded she will proceed on the first of her regular summer trips between here and the St. Lawrence port. The Glen Allan is again in charge of Captain C. J. Bowen of Trenton, veteran of many years' sailing experience on the Great Lakes.

NUMBER OF OFFICERS ARE GAZETTED

U. S. Weather Bureau Radio-Transmitting Apparatus Found

A United States Meteorological Bureau radio-transmitting apparatus, attached to a red silk parachute, was discovered suspended on a small tree on his farm on Sunday afternoon by J. W. Knox, residing near Mountain View.

The apparatus was enclosed in a small box covered with aluminum foil. Instructions on the box asked the finder to return it to the Buffalo Weather Bureau from which place it was released a few minutes past twelve o'clock noon on May 7th.

Other information included on the box revealed that the apparatus had been released by the U.S. Weather Bureau and that it ascends a distance of twelve miles in the air. The parachute and apparatus were attached to a sturdy balloon, which bursts after the maximum height is reached.

As the box floated slowly down toward earth, the radio apparatus broadcast statistics of the temperature, moisture and pressure of the air through which it passed.

Finders of the radio transmitters upon return of the apparatus to the nearest U.S. Weather Bureau, will be paid the sum of one dollar. A card to be used to furnish information regarding time and place of finding, as well as the finder's name, was attached to the box.

POLICE COURT

Godfrey Morris, 30, of this city, pleaded guilty to three charges and was assessed a total of $32.05 in fines and costs in city police court held before Magistrate E. J. Butler, K.C., on Monday morning.

Morris admitted the theft of a brass padlock, taken from his employers. On this count he was given a two months suspended sentence upon making restitution and paying costs amounting to $15.55.

The accused young man also pleaded guilty to a charge of careless driving, that brought a fine and costs of $5.75 and also to operating a motor car with defective brakes, which resulted in a fine and costs of $10.75 being levied. Morris was given until the end of the month in which to raise the sums levied, after the court learned he would be re-employed at his old job as information was relayed to the court stating he was an expert and reliable workman and this was his first trouble.

After totalling the aggregate amount of the fines and costs, Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, K.C., remarked—"And this doesn't include any amusement tax". The entire trouble in which Morris found himself today was the result of a motor car collision on Front St., last Friday night during which time a motor car driven by the accused was in collision with another automobile with little or no damage resulting however Motor vehicle cases and L.C.A. charges were also heard during the morning's proceedings when James Thompson paid a fine for speeding and two other motorists contributed similar amounts on charges of careless driving.

A domestic case concluded the morning's proceedings. It was held in camera, however.

Sticker On Car Solves Labor Problem

Receiving an emergency order to supply eight carpenters for immediate work on a military training centre to be erected somewhere in Prince Edward County Superintendent William D. Ross of the Belleville Employment Bureau, hit upon a novel idea to recruit the skilled labor.

Efforts to secure the men by canvassing pedestrians, business men and others in Picton on Saturday, failing, Supt. Ross printed the words, "Carpenters Wanted" on a large card, placed it on the windshield of his automobile, and sat back to await results. It worked. Within an hour he had secured five carpenters, and promptly placed them "on the job."

No carpenters are available here, Supt. Ross stated, while a marked scarcity is noted in Prince Edward County.

NURSING RAISED TO HIGH STANDARD SAYS MINISTER

Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne Delivers Baccalaureate Sermon to Graduating Class and Staff of Belleville Hospital

"The outstanding life of Florence Nightingale, the Joan of Arc of the nursing profession, by its sense of duty and sacrifice, raised the calling to the high pinnacle it has attained. Her name is honored in military circles the world over and she left a high mark at which to aim, sheer devotion to duty and the alleviation of the suffering of man," the Rev. Rural Dean A. Beauchamp Payne, rector of St. Thomas' Church declared at the evening service yesterday.

Speaking to graduates, students and staff nurses, and members of the 1941 Graduating Class of the Belleville General Hospital on the occasion of their Baccalaureate Service, Mr. Payne stated the "nursing profession because of the advancement of science has been placed on a higher plane than heretofore. It carries greater responsibilities for those who choose it as a vocation."

Reviewed History

He reviewed briefly the history of the profession since the days of the Roman and Grecian Empires and its progress down through the ages until the present time. Taking as his text Joshua 1-7: "Only be thou strong and very courageous, that thou mayest observe to do according to all the law, which Moses, my servant, commanded thee; turn not from it to the right hand or to the left, that thou mayest prosper whithersoever thou goest.' Mr. Payne declared they were a shining beacon light to guide not only members of the nursing profession, but those in all walks of life.

"The profession," he said, "still has its connections with the ancient orders. It is a Christian service with a religious background," Nurses, he pointed out, have a solemn task to perform, especially in the case of little children coming into the world. "It is your duty if a clergyman is not available to perform the baptism, because of the fleeting moments of life. That is the historic background of your calling."

"Every man and woman has a niche in life to fill; a task to be done," Mr. Payne told the congregation. "The nursing profession calls for a high state of efficiency, immense responsibilities and strength and courage. Any work which is recognized and realised by the individual as an achievement of God, must call for the best that is in us. Graduation is but the beginning. Ahead lie the dark watches, long hours of toil and duty and during these periods may there come surging back to you the words of Joshua in all their power.

"Your vocation will present many pitfalls and temptations," Mr. Payne continued, "but a nurse's position is one of trust. Never place that trust and responsibility in the hands of another. So much depends on you in the performance of your duty."

Do All Duty Perfectly

"Monotony may creep in at times," he said, "but even the smallest task may have the greatest possibilities in its performance. "Never think," he warned, "the meanest duty is one to be skipped over. It is not done unless it is done perfectly, and no matter if no one sees it done, God is with you always."

"Sympathy and patience, immeasurable and endless, are two of the qualities demanded by the vocation," he said. "Think of the great example of these qualities as revealed in the life of Jesus Christ.'

"You are children of God, and as such have certain duties to perform. You have lived in a Christian country and I urge you not to let excessive duty crowd out the recognition of your obligations to Christ. It will be difficult, but if you seek to walk along the pathway where you will find the beacon light of guidance shining, you will be doing your duty. It takes strength and courage to uphold the noble profession of nursing."

Urged to Keep High Standard

He urged the nurses to keep the standard of Joshua's words, "Only be thou strong and courageous" before them as long as they are spared to bear the name and title of "nurse." "Just as God commanded Joshua, so He gives His commands to us."

"Carry out your desire to serve with increasing strength, courage and determination," Mr. Payne concluded. "If the soul reveals its strength although the body may be weary from toil, and you can see your tasks being done, you will find courage and strength in the realization that you are holding high the traditions of your noble profession."

Immaculate in their trim uniforms, the graduating class, graduate nurses and staff nurses of the hospital, under the direction of Director of Nursing, Miss Ruth Thompson, were taken to the church by bus. They entered the edifice in a body and occupied the pews in the front centre. Two military nurses in the uniform of the Canadian Army Medical Corps were in attendance. Flying Officer Gordon Friesen, R.C.A.F., administrator of the hospital, now with the force with leave of absence from hospital duties, and relatives of the graduating class, were noted in the congregation.

Special anthems were sung by the choir with appropriate organ music being played by Mr. Ernest Wheatley.

HULL AGAINST ANY RESTRICTIONS ON USE OF SHIPS

Opponents Renew Demands, Administration Ban Transfer of Ships to Britain

OTHER AMENDMENTS

Washington, May 12 (AP)—State Secretary Cordell Hull advised today against restrictions on the use of foreign ships that may be taken over by the United States government, but administration opponents renewed their demands that the pending ship requisition bill be altered to ban the outright transfer of seized Axis vessels to Britain.

Hull set forth his views in a letter made public by the Senate Commerce Committee which is nearing the end of its study of the House-approved ship requisition measure.

"The Department of State feels it would be unwise to place a restrictive or prohibitory provision in the proposed legislation," Hull wrote.

Any restriction, he added, would tend to place vessels acquired under the legislation "in a different category from other vessels now under the American flag."

Testimony before a closed committee last week, made public today by committeemen, showed Chairman Emory S. Land of the Maritime Commission also had urged "wide open legislation with no strings whatsoever."

Nevertheless, Senator Bennet Champ Clark (Dem-Missouri), a committee member, said he would propose an amendment, previously defeated in the House, to prevent the administration from turning over German and Italian vessels to Britain.

Says it Would be Provocative Action

Senator Arthur Vandenberg (Rep-Michigan) said he would support the pending legislation if the Clark amendment were written in by the committee. He contended it would be "completely provocative of war" for a neutral to seize the ships of one belligerent and turn them over to another.

Resuming its hearing on the ship bill the Commerce Committee today called for further testimony from Admiral Land, and some members were curious as to whether he would elaborate on his assertion last week that the government plans to use requisitioned vessels to carry war supplies to Britain through "black-out areas."

Although "blackout area" was not defined in the testimony, the trend of questions and answers indicated that Land had reference to combat areas proclaimed under the United States neutrality law.

Russia Establishes Diplomatic Relations With Iraq Gov't

Moscow, May 12 —(AP)—Soviet Russia has established diplomatic relations with the government of Iraq, Tass, Russian News Agency, reported today.

(It was resumed the government referred to was the coup d'etat regime now fighting British forces.)

The step followed Iraq withdrawal of a request that such recognition be coupled with a declaration of recognition of other Arabian countries, Tass said, a request with which the Russian government said it was unable to comply.

The Foreign Office issued a communique announcing establishment of relations between the two countries for the first time.

The Soviet Press has withheld comment on the British-Iraq conflict publishing only brief dispatches mostly crediting foreign news agencies on the fighting there.

"At the end of 1940", the Tass announcement said "the Iraq government through its Minister in Turkey repeatedly proposed to the government of the U.S.S.R. The establishment of diplomatic relations between the U.S.S.R. and Iraq".

This was the proposal to which Iraq was said to have appended the request for recognition of other Arab countries.

No Conditions Implied

"May 3, 1941, the Tass announcement added, "the Iraq government through the medium of the Soviet ambassador in Ankara again proposed the establishment of diplomatic relations between the U.S.S.R. and Iraq, without making this time the establishment of diplomatic relations dependent on any condition such as a declaration regarding Arabian countries.

"The government of the U.S.S.R. withdrew its objections and accepted the proposal of the Iraq government on the establishment of diplomatic relations."

(Significance of the diplomatic move was not apparent immediately. The announcement that the new Iraq proposal was made May 3, however, places the agreement as having been negotiated and reached after the break between Britain and the new Iraq government of Premier Rashid Ali Al Gailani. Fighting broke out May 2.

(In London there was no comment forthcoming at once in authoritative circles on the Soviet-Iraq development.)

CANADA HELPS PREPARE FOR OFFENSIVE

Tanks have been added to the long list of the tools of war now being manufactured in plants large and small across the entire Dominion. At left a set of acetylene torches quickly slice through armour plate in a Canadian factory. At right one of the war's latest types of metal monsters is shown as it waddles over rough ground.—Photos—Director of Public Information.

"In the Factory Of the Armourer"

The use of the tank in war was a British idea, conceived in 1914. It was first used on the Somme in September, 1916. It was used later on a large scale at Cambrai, November 20, 1917. The tank has done much to change the art of war. It assists the "break through". It adds speed. It increases mobility.

The first requisite in building tanks is good armour plate. It is now being produced in Canada. Good armour plate starts from clean steel scrap in the electric furnace, and 2,300 degrees of heat turns the scrap into ingots, flat slabs of steel.

From the furnace the ingots go to the rolling mill. They are rough-rolled first. They pass back and forward through heated rolls, a glowing red mass, gradually shaping into form. The rolls are splashed with water. Salt is thrown on the plate and explodes with a roar. This breaks the scale which forms on the plate. Gradually the ingot becomes a plate. It grows thinner; it becomes cooler. Then the man at the lever passes it on. It goes through the same process again, but less strenuous this time. The second rolling smooths the surface, reduces the thickness. The worst is over—it passes down the ways—start on its journey from plate to armour plate.

When a steel ingot goes through the rolling mill it is reduced in thickness from 12 inches to probably 1-2 to 2 inches. It is subjected to enormous pressure. The pressure is so great that it rearranges the molecular stucture of the product. It is now heated in a furnace and kept for four hours at a temperature of 1,650 degrees. Then it is removed and air-cooled. This is the annealing process. It improves the quality.

After annealing, it is cut into shapes suited for tanks and stacked up on skids. The battle with heat is not yet over. It now goes to the quenching furnace for four hours more of heat. Then it is quenched in water for the purpose of hardening the plate.

The next trip is to the tempering furnace. Here the temperature is only 1,000 degrees. This operation is to toughen the plate! Still, it is not yet finished. It is now flattened by tremendous pressure in a hydraulic press. This is to correct distortion which might develop in the different treatments through which it has passed.

Now comes the testing time. There is the life story of the plate. How can its hardness, its power of resistance, be tested? There are two tests: The Brinell test and the firing test. In the Brinell test, a hard steel ball 10 m.m. in diameter, about 2-5 of an inch, is pressed into the plate under a load of 3,000 kgs., about 6,600 lbs. The impression it makes is measured and compared with a definite scale. The resulting figure indicates, to those who know these things, the hardness of that particular sheet.

The ultimate test is the firing test. The armour of a tank cannot be as heavy as the armour of a ship. It can be pierced with the proper ammunition in a tank gun. The problem is to measure the resistance of the plate against armour-piercing ammunition fired from an anti-tank gun. The product must stand this final test. If it fails to show sufficient resistance, it doesn't go into the tank. The word of the government inspectors is final, but uniformity of treatment produces uniformity of products and "rejects" are rare.

4 PERSONS DIE IN EARLY BLAZE AT SAINT JOHN

Fire Chief Expresses View That Similarities of Fires May Suggest Incendiarism

Saint John, N.B., May 12 (CP)—Fire Chief C. A. Cunningham said today that an early-morning blaze yesterday which took four lives was the latest in a series of fires pointing to incendiarism.

"The situation has gone beyond the bounds of mere coincidence," said the Fire Chief. "Startling similarities in the fires in the city during the past weeks seem to suggest almost unmistakably that there's an incendiarist at large."

Yesterday's fire in Central Saint John broke out in the rear of a two-storey wooden house occupied by one family and several boarders. An inquest will be held tonight into the deaths of Mrs. Emma McDonald, 79, Mrs. George Kinney, and Mrs. Kinney's two daughters, Marjorie Wilson, 11, and Evelyn Wilson, five. All were on the first floor of the building.

Damage from the flames was slight and dense smoke which poured through the house was believed responsible for the loss of life. Seven other persons on the first floor escaped and six from the second.

Fire Chief Cunningham said that almost without exception recent fires in Saint John have started in sheds or ells of houses. Over-heated stoves or defective electric wiring have not been responsible in any case, he added.

"These starting points," he remarked, "have always been on the ground floor, readily accessible to an arsonist.

"Another item of interest has been the fact that the responsible party, if there is a responsible party, has shown consummate skill in selecting his prey.

"Invariably the wind has been blowing from the woodshed, or ell, toward the main structure. Every time the first fireman has reached the scene, he has been met, not by a fire slowly gaining headway, but by a blazing inferno."

The fire chief added that on three occasions recently there have been two fires in one night.

OFFICIALS APPOINTED

Under an order-in-council tabled in the Commons April 28, Justice Minister Lapointe was empowered to nominate officials of the three departments and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police as representatives on committees with power to board any British ship or vessel of an allied power and conduct investigation into the conduct of seamen while in a Canadian port.

Quit Talking And Do Something Urges U. S. Congressman Patrick

Washington, May 12 (AP)—The convoy issue flared anew in the House of Representatives today with Representative Luther Patrick (Dem-Alabama) declaring the United States should "quit talking and do something" about assuring the delivery of supplies to Great Britain.

"I think we ought to strap on stronger armor and deliver this stuff to the people who are fighting our battle," he said.

"We should stay home and attend to our own business," shouted Representative Robert Rich (Rep-Pennsylvania).

The discussion was started by Representative George Tinkham (Rep-Massachusetts), who referred to recent statements of Cabinet members on the war crisis and then added: "The time has come when the American people are entitled to have from the President a truthful and unequivocal statement of his own position and his own intent."

Representative John Rankin (Dem-Mississippi) jumped up declaring Tinkham "virtually accuses the President of trying to get us into war. The President to my knowledge has made no such statement."

Rankin advocated the transfer to Britain of naval vessels to be manned by British seamen in convoy duty.

MAY BE SECOND CUT

Washington, May 12 — (AP) — United States defence officials said today that there was "a distinct possibility" of a second 20 per cent cut in 1942 model motor car production, but added that the proposal was "in the pure speculation stage."

Such a curtailment would bring production down to slightly more than 3,100,000 units, compared with this year's output of 5,289,972 motor cars.

Automobile manufacturers have already agreed to a request by the office of production management to cut production to 4,224,252 units for the model year beginning in August.

MRS. W. N. STORMS WINNER OF CONTEST

The name of the winner of their Congoleum rug contest was announced today by the New Percival Store as Mrs. W. N. Storms, 77 Grier Street. Mrs. Storms wins with 340 words.

300 SKILLED CRAFTSMEN STRIKE

Washington, May 12 (AP)—More than 900 American Federation of Labor skilled craftsmen struck today at the big navy drydocks at South Boston, Mass., tying up a $3,000,000 United States defence construction job.

Spokesmen for the Union said the walkout halted work on facilities under a $30,000,000 program, now about half through, but said it did not stop ship building activities since 300 men working in the navy yard were not called out at once.

Ottawa, May 12—(CP)—Denton Massey, Conservative member of Parliament for Toronto-Greenwood recently promoted to the rank of Squadron Leader from Flight Lieut. in the Royal Canadian Air Force, has been transferred from Toronto to Trenton, Ont., it was learned here today.

MACE AND OTHER RELICS IN HOUSE OF COMMONS SAFE

Charred Wood and Masonry Piled 50 Feet High Due to Extensive Damage of Building

SHELTER SMASHED

London, May 12 (CP)—Arthur Greenwood, Minister Without Portfolio, whose job is to plan the rebuilding of battered Britain after the war, surveyed wreckage today in the House of Commons, which only four days ago was a thronged debating chamber.

Standing beside a teetering wall, Mr. Greenwood observed rubble, charred wood and masonry piled 50 feet high where pillars once soared to the vaulted roof and where oaken panels and tall windows once had graced the galleries.

Among the thousands of bombs which rained from the moon-lit skies Saturday were those which unroofed part of Westminster Abbey, damaged the British Museum and Big Ben, the giant clock, and storied Westminster Hall.

Whole blocks of the sprawling capital were devoured by flames which the most strenuous efforts could not check.

The central tower of the Abbey, known as The Lantern, was smashed in and wreckage fell on the spot where England's kings and queens are crowned, but the Coronation chairs had been moved to safety in August, 1935.

Other relics, too, were being found safe today among the wreckage.

Major Vyvyan Adams, a Member of Parliament, emerged excitedly from the smoky House of Commons ruins and reported, "I've found the cabinet over there in what used to be the 'No' lobby. It has in it the signatures of Gladstone and Disraeli. That at any rate is safe.

"The mace is safe, too," said Mr. Greenwood. "Luckily, it was taken to another room in the building and this was untouched."

The great oak doors which slammed, by ancient tradition in the face of the Black Rod when he came to the Commons have vanished. They are now somewhere among boulders and bricks where the Speaker's chair, the famous dispatch boxes, the benches, and everything are lying.

The shelter where members gathered during raids stood up to the test but another shelter, which the Premier and his cabinet colleagues used, was wrecked.

Prime Minister Churchill's rooms were untouched, as were those of most of the cabinet ministers.

The bulk of the documents in the vote office, too, were saved, but many papers were smudged and smeared.

The tomb of the Unknown Soldier near the west door of Westminster Abbey also escaped damage.

Among those killed in Saturday night's raid was L. Eaton Smith, Mayor of Westminster and Deputy Chief Air Raid Warden.

The destruction caused at Parliament will not interfere with the House meeting on its next appointed day. New accommodations are able to carry on with much of its customary ceremony unimpaired.

Prime Minister Churchill; Lord Beaverbrook, Minister of State; Sir John Reith, Minister of Works and Public Buildings, and Mrs. Churchill visited the Houses of Parliament during the day to inspect the damage. They were cheered by a group at the gates.

Lighted Vigil Lights In Galt Church Overturned by Vandals

Galt, Ont., May 12 (CP)—Vandals late Sunday afternoon desecrated St. Clement's Roman Catholic Church in nearby Preston. Lighted vigil lights were overturned on carpets which fortunately did not take fire, holy water fonts overturned, a six-foot statue pushed off its pedestal and damaged and in the basement the vandals broke a censor and scattered alter boys' surplusses about the floor.

THE WAR TODAY

(By Don Gilbert)

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

President Roosevelt's position on the question of United States Naval protection for ships carrying war supplies to Britain may be clarified this week. On Wednesday the President will address the Pan-American Union. The speech will be broadcast throughout the world and an important pronouncement on war policy is looked for.

The great debate of the American Nation on the question was further intensified last night by the appearance of former President Herbert Hoover at the microphone. The ex-President's speech revealed him as belonging to that school of opinion ostensibly strongly for Britain yet extremely wary of any risks that might be involved in aiding her.

Herald Tribune Attacks Hoover's Speech

This morning in New York, the Republican newspaper, the Herald Tribune, takes Hoover severely to task and couples his name and arguments with those of Charles A. Lindbergh.

The newspaper declared that Mr. Hoover had "poured into the nation's radio receivers. . . the counsel of blank frustration, confusion and despair", which contributed to neither American unity nor clarity of thought. It said that he had not only repeated Lindbergh's case, but had confused it by declaring himself at the same time in favor of "maximum" aid to Britain.

In reviewing Mr. Hoover's plea that the United States give Britain "every tool that will really aid her" and his statement that the defence of the United States is not dependent upon any other nation, the Herald Tribune asserted that "even Mr. Lindbergh never allowed himself to fall into so gross an inconsistency".

New York Times Analysis

The Times also runs a full column of editorial analysis of the inconsistencies in Mr. Hoover's argument and denies that use of the United States navy automatically would lead to sending over an expeditionary force.

Elsewhere in the non-belligerent world week-end developments in no way served to clarify the situation that will influence the Germany army's next blow.

In Spain, which many expect will serve as a pathway to Gibraltar for German forces, Gen. Francisco Franco reorganize the High Command of the army.

U. S. SENATORS RECEIVE DEMANDS TO DECLARE WAR

Senator Pepper in Favor of "Doing What We Need to Do and Let it Go at That"

PLENTY OF LETTERS

Washington, May 12 —(AP)— Three United States Senators reported today they have been receiving demands by mail that the United States formally enter the war against the Axis.

Senator Claude Pepper (Dem-Florida), advocate of unstinted British aid, informed reporters he don't have to declare war. If we cating "a declaration of war, a break in diplomatic relations with the Axis powers or any other steps necessary for a realistic affirmative defence."

Saying he did not believe a declaration of war necessary, Pepper added that "We should do what we need to do and let it go at that."

"When you occupy territory, you dont' have to declare war. If we should 'accidentally' let go a broadside at a Japanese battleship it wouldn't be a declaration of war. It would just be letting them know how the white man shoots and would teach them decent respect for the rights of their neighbors."

Many Letters Received

Pepper said that his mail from Atlantic seaboard states, the deep south and the far west was running five to two in favor of "affirmative action" against the Axis powers, but letters from Michigan, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois were preponderantly against such a policy.

The office of Chairman Walter George (Dem-Georgia) reported his mail had tripled in the last week and that many persons were advocating a declaration of war or similar major steps to aid Britain.

At the office of Senator James Mead (Dem-New York) a spokesman said "a number of letters and telegrams are advocating for the first time that we declare war or undertake any other measures which may be necessary to prevent an Axis victory."

NAZI CLAIMS ARE EXAGGERATED

Berlin Does Admit Heavy Raid by R.A.F. on Hamburg on Saturday Night

Berlin, May 12—(AP)—The Nazis claimed today that German bombers, seeking to hinder the increasingly heavy Royal Air Force raids on Germany, attacked 20 British airports last night.

(A British communique said German raids on Britain last night were widespread but that nowhere was damage heavy.

The German High Command admitted that "stronger" R.A.F. formations again heavily assaulted Hamburg and Bremen, inflicting new dead and wounded and destruction. It contended as heretofore, that damage was confined largely to residental sections.

In an unusual official admission, yesterday's communique said that Saturday night's raid on Hamburg was carried out by "strong" British forces and that destruction and casualties were heavy.

The High Command claimed that Nazi bombers destroyed two merchantmen totalling 16,000 tons and an 8,000-ton tanker and damaged three more freighters in a convoy passing through St. George's Channel, west of England.

(Confirmation of these claims was not available in London.)

London, May 12—(CP)—An authoritative source said today that while a number of Royal Air Force airdromes were attacked last night German claims that 20 were raided "as usual are grossly exaggerated."

Damage was described as slight except at one or two places where they were service casualties, including some killed.

DROWNED IN PUSLINCH LAKE

Guelph, Ont., May 12—(CP)—Lionel Hickman, 18 Galt, Ont., was drowned and two other Galt youths narrowly escaped possible drowning Sunday when their recently-purchased dinghy upset while they were sailing in nearby Puslinch Lake.

Those saved were Ronald Labram, 19 and Robert Grant, 19, pulled from the water by Dr. H. Conway of Toronto and his brother, Fred. Ronald Labram was rescued when he weakened while attempting to swim to shore while Grant was picked up while he was hanging on to the overturned dinghy.

CHARGED WITH ASSAULT

Alton, Ont., May 12 (CP)—Robert Fleming of Alton was charged wtih assault occasioning actual bodily harm yesterday as the result of wounds suffered by Pte. J. A. May, Camp Borden soldier.

Mrs. Fleming told police that May and a companion had come to the Fleming home Saturday night and had been ordered away by her husband. She said the altercation ended when a shotgun was discharged in the backyard.

May's wounds were superficial.

OVER 5 MILLION TONS SHIPPING UNDER WAY IN U. S.

Bureau of Shipping's Figures Shows Jump in Total —Bureau's Figure More Than Three Times Tonnage Lost by Britain, Allies and Neutrals So Far This Year

New York, May 12 (AP) — The American Bureau of Shipping reported today that 800 ships aggregating 5,055,400 gross tons were under contract or being constructed in American shipyards May 1.

That total equalled approximately 80 per cent. of the 5,961,044 tons of shipping the Admiralty has reported lost in the war thus far by Britain, her allies, and neutrals. The British total includes 1,443 ships, however, making the average ship lost smaller than the average ship under construction or contract in this country.

The bureau's figure was more than three times the tonnage reported lost by Britain, the Allies, and neutrals for far this year—1,617,359 tons, 368 ships.

Figures Show Jump

The figure was a jump of 194 vessels of 1,623,305 tons from the April 1 total. The Bureau said that on May 1, 1940, the comparable figures were 276 vessels totalling 1,349,385 tons.

British Navy Stands In Way Of Hun Plans

(By KIRKE L. SIMPSON.)

Washington, May 12 (AP)—Half-a-million Empire troops garrisoning far-flung British defences in the Middle East afforded Prime Minister Churchill solid ground or pledging to Parliament that there would be no further retreat there, but it is at sea that Britain still has her best guarantee against disaster at home or abroad.

Sooner or later a conclusive test in this war of sea power versus air power seems inevitable. The seas that have befriended Britain and her Empire for centuries are still today at once her greatest bulwark of security and her most deadly menace if she loses in in the sea-air fight.

And the first real pitched battle of that fight may come over possession of the Mediterranean Island of Crete all that is left of free Greece. Mr. Churchill has proclaimed an Anglo-Greek stand to the death on Crete. There only, except for the Rock of Gibraltar, has Britain a toe-hold on Nazi-dominated Europe.

Vital Base for Britain.

Crete is potentially a more vital base for Britain than either Tobruk in Libya or much-bombed Malta in the Sicilian Straits. Mr. Churchill has said all these outposts would be held at all costs. Whether or not Britain's fighting men can make good on his promise seems to depend primarily on the sea-power versus air-power equation, not yet clarified by twenty months of war.

If Nazi air power could achieve a Nazi army passage to Crete in force across seventy miles of sea from the Greek mainland, the defensive value to Britain of the twenty miles of restless Channel waters that guarded her from a like fate at home would be reduced.

Essentially this war has reached a point where sea mastery must be the decisive factor. Failure of German and Italian air power, supplemented by submarine fleets, to wrest that mastery from the British Navy, east and west would balk Axis advance in either direction from the Continent except eastward via Turkey.

Even there the Dardanelles-Bosphorus-Marmora Sea water way impose a serious obstacle. There is much to indicate that what amounts to a lull in the war in the east is traceable to that factor.

Concentrates on Threats

Berlin is concentrating on threats in a effort to immobilize both Turkey and Russia, may even hope to achieve soon unopposed passage of troops through Turkey for a march to the east.

The terrain of Crete lends itself to defense. Its few ports and beaches are dominated by mountains. Given the guns and the men, its defenders could make invasion a bloody and uncertain business. What force and fighting equipment the Anglo-Greek Allies have is a war secret, but Mr. Churchill's pronouncement indicates it is formidable—perhaps too formidable for the Germans to risk invasion.

In summing up events of the air versus sea power struggle, one factor definitely limiting air effectiveness and bolstering British hopes and courage should not be overlooked. Three times in this war British troops and French or Greek Allies have escaped from seemingly impossible Nazi traps. Each time it was British sea power that turned the trick.

It saved British-French forces fleeing Norway, Flanders and the Greek mainland. The Nazi Air Force, for whatever reasons, failed three times to administer a final and crushing blow that could have shaken British morale.

These are negative victories for British sea power it is true, but their effect on British morale was great. German air power was denied the full possible fruits of the great Nazi successes on shore to which it contributed. And British sea power still must be reckoned with to make Axis claims of complete victory realistic.

FRENCH GENERAL SAYS TUNISIA IN GREAT PERIL

Country Long a Sore Point in Italian - French Relations

SERIOUS CLASH IN '39

By WILLIAM McGAFFIN
Associated Press Staff Writer

Tunis, Tunisia, May 12 (AP) — Although neither optimistic nor pessimistic concerning the world situation, Admiral Jean Esteva, resident-general of Tunisia, believes this part of the French empire is in greater danger than any other.

"Obviously" this is true, he said in an interview, "because it is in the dangerous middle Mediterranean basin."

He declined to hazard a guess, however, when asked if he thought French Africa was in greater or less danger of invasion now than several months ago.

Tunisia, with Nice and Corsica, long has been a sore point in Italian-French relations. Fascist demonstrations shouted "Nice, Tunisia, Corsica" in pre-war agitation symbolizing Italian colonial desires and Tunisia itself, containing 100,000 Italian residents, has been a smouldering volcano in world affairs for 60 years, since France made it a protectorate.

(In February, 1939, a serious clash between Italian and French was reported, with four Frenchmen killed. Some of Gen. Maxime Weygand's North African military forces now are stationed in Tunisia and in February Weygand asserted that Germany would not be permitted to use Bizerte, on the Tunisian coast, as a base for operations.)

Would Have Difficult Time

Competent observers here believe the French would have a difficult time holding off any powerful aerial and motorized force unless help came quickly from the outside.

(The Free French leader, Gen. Charles De Gaulle, recently said an attack on Tunisia would bring the whole French empire back into the war.)

Questioned about economic collaboration between Tunisia and the Axis powers, the Admiral replied: "There is no such collaboration."

Admiral Esteva, an extremely religious bachelor who spent the happiest of his 61 years at sea, declared that only "the eternal Father can say who will win the war and said he felt the world was "in need of a great religious revival."

"What will be the repercussion of the Moslems of French Africa, in your opinion, if the war continues in Iraq?" he was asked.

"I don't think it's going to continue," he replied.

Committee Passes Legislation

Washington, May 12 —(AP)— Legislation authorizing the United States Government to take over foreign ships lying idle in American harbors was approved by the Senate Commerce Committee today, 11 to 4.

The committee wrote an amendment into the House-approved legislation to forbid the government from taking over any vessel actually owned by a foreign government, except by purchase.

'Hitler's Shadow', Rudolf Hess, Is Killed In Crash

Berlin, May 12 —(AP)— Rudolf Hess, Hitler's No. 2 political heir, has crashed in a plane flight made contrary to Hitler's orders, the Nazi party announced tonight, and his adjutants, accused of permitting the flight, have been ordered arrested.

The brief announcement from the Nazi headquarters did not at once make clear the extent, if any, of the party deputy's injuries but said Hess had been in failing health.

Hess was said to have been missing since a flight in his own plane last Saturday.

His adjutants — of unspecified number — were accused of having been aware that Hess had been ordered not to fly when he took off.

Hitler announced Sept. 1, 1939, first day of the war, that he had selected Hess as the No. 2 man to succeed him in event of his death. Hitler's first choice was Goering.

Hess, 47 years old, often was called "Hitler's shadow" because of his almost constant association with the Nazi boss.

Selassie To Release British Forces For Action In Other Areas

Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, May 8 (Delayed)—Haille Selassie declared today he intended to release British forces from their task of reconquering Ethiopia from Italy and aid them in their defence elsewhere against "cruel attacks."

In a message to President Roosevelt and the people of the United States on the occasion of his return to his capital, he declared "it was fitting that the first victim of Axis greed should be the first to be delivered."

Since "the unprovoked aggression of 1935 proved to be forerunner of all later aggressions," he said, he prayed that "its atonement" may prove to be the beginning of disaster for all aggressions.

NORWEGIANS RESIST HUNS

Norwegians, modern Vikings, are resisting the intruding Germans, Nazi papers, seized in the Lofoten Island raid by the British, and published by the British Government in a white paper show. The documents are clear proof of the German recognition that Norwegian opposition is very active. Repressive measures published show the extent to which the Nazi Germans will go to punish Norwegians who resist.

One statement is very clear, "With the exception of the Nasjonal Samling Party (Norwegian Nazi Party led by Quisling) all the other organizations and parties and particularly the representatives of big business and industry remain now as before pro-English and consequently anti-German."

The documents accompany a communication from a German military commander in Norway to all officers of the rank of local commander or above.

Mr. Churchill referred to this fact that the German army and race have become and are becoming more hated than any people that history records. The secret documents in the white paper show this.

NO PLACE FOR NAZISM

There have been very recently discovered the remains of a dinosaur, one hundred feet long. This was a species of creature which nature produced aeons of years ago when the world was not as we know it today. For reasons nature which brought forth this huge creature also spelled the death of this vast reptile or lizard. This huge creation existed many millions of years ago. The great dinosaur inhabited many lands and the armored dinosaur far exceeded the modern elephant in size. It lived on land and fed on plants. One of them would almost require a commissariat to provide it with food. Their size and unwieldiness, possibly changes in the nature of vegetation through climate variation and the arrival of smaller creatures brought about their end. They were nature's early effort.

Today Germany has built up a huge system which threatens the world. Hitler has produced an armor-plated nation, mechanized to the hilt, depending on weight of blows to crush opposition and freedom on the earth. This huge beast from Berlin must roam at large to forage for it is against the principle of law, life, civilization and culture. Hitler's armored Germany is a deliberate reversion to the worst in the human makeup, it utilizes every evil motive, every sin and every trick to advance itself. Democratic people look towards progress and democracy has been the result of man's quest for a more ordered state of society. Into this world which has been growing more and more favorable to democracy for generations, the gangster type appears with Hitler and his henchmen, who use men and nations as pawns in their purpose to dominate the world and crush democracy. The dinosaur possessed a low order of intelligence and lost out. The Nazi is the creation of an evil mind. He deliberately does that which is the opposite of all that is right, free and just. Hence Nazism must go.

The German battleships Gneisenau and Scharnhorst have been pounded again and again by the British airmen at Brest where the warships took shelter when driven in from the Atlantic. The persistent attacks by the R.A.F. and the fact that the craft are still in that port surely prove that heavy blows have been delivered at the enemy warships.

It was announced a few days ago that a German commerce raider in the Indian Ocean has been sunk by a British warship and 27 British merchant seamen rescued from her and 53 German crewmen taken prisoner.

These enemy raiders have been relentlessly pursued and chased by the British.

Men of many races are fighting in the British and in Allied forces. The chairman of the American Eagle Club stated in London the other day that there are 10,000 Americans fighting in the British and Allied forces, most of these having enlisted in Canada, but others in the Free French and even Free Rumanian units. Such is the appeal of democracy to the men of the free world.

THE CHILDREN'S HOUR

Between the dark and the daylight,
When the night is beginning to lower,
Comes a pause in the day's occupation
That is known as the Children's Hour.

I see there beside the loud speaker
The innocent, sweet little dears,
While stories of gangsters and bumpoffs
Are brought to their infantile ears.

From four until seven they sit there—
Enslaved by the programs' appeal,
And hear of the gats and the gunmolls,
And what comes to mobsters who squeal.

Cowboys and horses and rustlers,
Love and the wages of sin,
Kidnappers, death and destruction,
Maniacs, arson and gin.

The serial, ah, how it grips 'em!
Enveloping all in its power;
If the children grow up to be normal,
No thanks to the Children's Hour.

M.H.G.

Here in Canada, separated as we are from Europe's war by many hundreds of miles of ocean, we are indeed fortunate. But our good fortune can sometimes make us forgetful of what is going on around us. Our present apparent apathy in this struggle stand s condemned from many quarters. Soldiers, upon returning to Canada from England, have expressed their amazement at our lack of organized effort. Only recently Hon. Mitchell Hepburn, Premier of Ontario, gave utterance to this thought: "We are satisfied to do too little too late while Hitler does too much too soon. We talk big, but we just do not deliver the goods communsurate with our organized capabilities. I am frank to confess that, in my judgment, only the stark realization of a two-ocean invasion will awaken us from our state of apathy."

Let us pray that Ontario's premier is wrong.

But it is up to Canadians to deliver the goods. Already Canada has delivered to the fighting front hundreds of men trained and equipped to fight our cause. Here in Canada it is our sacred duty to keep them supplied with the articles of war. Those of us who are not able to take up arms ourselves, should help as best they can. We can add to our nation's war effort by purchasing War Savings Certificates. If we can't fight, let's lend.

Base ball games have been called or abruptly terminated for several reasons, such as rain, wet grounds, darkness, etc., but the reason for calling that softball game down Miami way the other day is one for the little red book. The pastime was ended because of gravity.

It appears one team had 37 hits and 29 runs while the other squad had fifteen errors and no more pitchers. The boys called off the game because of the gravity of the situation.

This isn't exactly a plug for newspaper advertising but you must admit the power of the press had something to do with ultimate results. It appears the black pet cat of a southern family turned up missing one day and stayed that way for some time. The anxious family finally inserted a "Lost and Found" ad in the local sheet. A few minutes after the paper was on the street the cat walked into the editor's office. That gentleman promptly delivered the cat to its owners personally.

German methodicalness is sometimes over done, observes a writer in the New Statesman. On one of the beaches of Northern France the Germans were practising debarkation. At ten o'clock one morning an officer had himself rowed out, carrying a long pole marked in meters and decimetres. This he stuck firmly into the sand at the point which showed that a man would just be not out of his depth.

The next morning at the same hour a flotilla of barges was drawn up parallel with the shore on a line with the pole. At the word of command the soldiers leaped into the sea—and almost as one man, were promptly drowned. The officer had not counted on the tide being an hour higher.

Then there is the story of the tired business man's wife who gave him a bottle of hair tonic because his secretary's hair was coming out badly on his coat.

THE SMILE

A smile is seldom passed along
By men intent on doing wrong,
The cruel, grasping tyrant brood
Seems always in an angry mood
As if the right to rule a while
Is not allowed to men who smile.
All who would trample others down
Are addicts of the fearful frown.

Malicious men on evil bent
And thugs on robbery intent,
And jealous men who contemplate
Their neighbors' happiness in hate,
And bitter men of every kind
Unto the frown are much inclined.
All tyrants favor stern-set chins
Which leave no room for pleasant grins.

The smile worldwide is understood
To be the sign of motives good.
It's worn by friendly folk and just,
It's something even strangers trust,
A pledge of faith and conduct fair
As such accepted everywhere,
And that's why cruel men and vile
Are very seldom seen to smile.

Letter To The Editor

U.E.L. COMMEMORATION

Dear Sir,
To the Editor:

It would be appropriate to commemorate the landing of the Loyalists, especially this year. If the Loyalists of the American revolution had not come to Canada before, during and following the revolutionary war, it is doubtful if Canada would have continued part of the British Empire and now in a position to actively assist the Mother Country in this war.

A special service might therefore appropriately be held in the Memorial Church at Adolphustown sometime during Sunday, June 15 and a public gathering might also be held on June 16th at 2.00 p.m Standard Time, at the Hay Bay Church.

We should not allow the important action of the Loyalists to be forgotten.

Dear was the land where they were born,
Where slept their honoured dead,
And rich and wide on every side
Their fertile acres spread;
But dearer to their loyal hearts
Than home or gold or lands,
Were Britain's laws and Britain's Crown,
And Britain's flag of long renown
And grip of British hands.

For the information of some who perhaps do not know, it was on the 16th of June, 1784, following the close of the American revolutionary war that the Loyalists made their way up into the Bay of Quinte District and laid the foundations for the Loyalists' settlement in Ontario.

W. C. MIKEL.

Army Thanks The Makers Of Tanks

Journalists visiting a munitions factory somewhere in England the other day saw some impressive results of the drive to produce tanks for the Army.

This factory makes cruiser tanks of the types that so powerfully helped to destroy the Italian armies in Africa. It is of considerable size, covering thousands of square feet of floor space, but less than 12 months after building had begun on the site it occupies it had made its first delivery of armored fighting vehicles, and deliveries have continued ever since without interruption. In the meantime its work has been developed on specialized lines and organized on a basis as near to mass production as possible.

Everything but the foundry work and the manufacture of guns and one or two special components is done in the factory, and the building of a tank is a highly complicated job. How complicated a layman may gather from the fact that about 6,200 detail parts go into the completed structure.

These 6,200 parts require about 50,000 different machining and assembling operations. Over 500 modern machine tools are used in the course of these operations, and in some operations accuracy of measurement to ten-thousandths of an inch is necessary.

• • •

On the day the journalists visited the factory two Army officers of the Royal Armored Corps were present to confirm General Wavell's tribute to British workmanship. They brought the thanks of the African armies to the shop workers, and expressed warm admiration of the undismayed manner in which they "stuck to their jobs in spite of air raids."

One of the officers said he had a soft spot in his heart for the carrier-tank in the building of which the factory specializes. "I once found myself in a very sticky situation," he said, "but a squadron of tanks turned up at the right moment, destroyed 10 out of a force of 12 Italian tanks, the two others running away." The story roused a cheer from the workpeople.

The other officer described a tank battle near Benghazi about which, he said, a good deal would be written by historians and tacticians some day. Briefly, the story was this: A force of our tanks arrived just in time to block the retreat of the Italians. Darkness fell an hour later, but next day a battle developed in which our tank forces were outnumbered by an Italian force which included 70 heavy tanks. The battle continued throughout the day, and the Italian heavy tanks were reduced to about 30 effectives. But the situation for the British forces was "pretty grim" until reinforcements arrived to complete the Italian defeat. In that engagement we lost but two killed and five injured.

"We couldn't have done it," said the officer, "if you fellows who had been making the tanks and the armor had not been doing your jobs damned well. The stuff the Italians threw at us made no difference to us. Don't imagine the Italians are fools and incompetents: they are not. They had everything that could be a nuisance to us, but it was by using British tanks made of British steel that we got the better of them. And when we were hitting the Italians we felt all the time we were hitting them for you." A hearty cheer was the response of the workpeople.

A workman wanted to know if British tanks had proved superior to German tanks. One of the officers who was in France replied without hesitation. "Definitely, yes."

This factory is only one of many that are making tanks. — London News-Chronicle.

ON THE RECORD

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

Stalin

Why did Joseph Stalin decide to become Premier and, therefore, the head of the Soviet Union, which he has indirectly ruled so long? Why in this particular moment?

Internally, his assumption of authority as the titular head of the state changes nothing. Russia is governed by the Communist party, and the Secretary-General of the Communist party can dictate to any head of the state.

The reasons are external. As Secretary-General of the party, even though that role makes him the actual dictator of the Soviet Union, Stalin cannot personally confer with the heads of other states. He can send Molotov to confer with Hitler, and he can receive the German Ambassador, Mr. Ribbentrop, but he cannot himself confer with Hitler on an equal basis. For even in these gangster-ridden times there is such a thing as protocol.

* * *

Therefore we may assume that Stalin has made himself the head of the government, as well as of the party that rules the government, in order to be able personally to meet and confer with Hitler. And I think we may anticipate a meeting between the Communist and the Nazi dictators, probably on the soil of another country, within the next two or three weeks.

* * *

Why in another two or three weeks? Why not tomorrow?

I think Stalin wants to wait that long to see what the United States is going to do and where the United States is going to do it.

Stalin's dearest hope is that we will become embroiled with Japan in the Far East, and thus settle his own uneasiness on that score. This is the whole sense of the Russian-Japanese non-aggression pact, and some of us, including this columnist, who tried to put a better face on it at the time of its announcement were following our wishes rather than our heads. Stalin will never trust Japan but he is prepared to adopt a benevolent neutrality in case of a Japanese Far Eastern war against the United States and Great Britain.

The extent to which the United States is involved will, however, determine his bargaining position with Hitler.

And Stalin needs to do some sharp bargaining.

* * *

The theory that Stalin was settling matters in the East in order to free his hands in the West is correct to this extent: he wanted to increase his bargaining power in the West. He is certainly not going to take on the German armies. He wants to make another deal and make as good a one as he can.

For Stalin has lost a lot of ground.

At the outset of this war, he hoped to make the Nazis pay for his benevolent neutrality, and to extract three advantages from the bargain: An improved position in the Baltic Sea, in the Black Sea, and access to the Persian Gulf.

Undoubtedly he had an understanding with Hitler about all three things. Hence his war against Finland and his occupation of the small independent Baltic states.

But with the occupation of Norway, and German economic domination of Sweden, Stalin's gains in the Baltic are illusory. He is bottled up in the Baltic and Hitler has the key in his pocket.

* * *

It was Russia's hope—and Germany's original intention—to keep the war out of the Balkans, at least until its last stage. Mussolini, who is anything but pro-Russian prevented that by the attack on Greece.

Stalin hoped that the mere expression of his dissatisfaction with Hitler's occupation of Rumania would have an effect. It had no effect. His stronger protestations over the occupation of Bulgaria were equally ignored. His open support of the Yugoslav cause was treated by Hitler as a bluff. Stalin did nothing but talk, and Hitler took every position he wanted. So by now Stalin has had both the Baltic and the Black Sea shot out from under him. He is bottled up in both of them.

Only one envied position remains—the outlet of the Persian Gulf. Stalin will probably agree—because he has to—to a Hitler move in Turkey, Syria, Suez, Iraq. In return he will probably demand the provinces of Erzurum and Kars, former Russian Imperial possessions and domination of Iran to the Persian Gulf—and, incidentally, to the gates of India.

Probably he will get such a deal, although whether, in case of a Hitler victory his gains will be of any more use to him than the first ones, is a great question.

The inconsistencies and vacillations of our foreign policy toward Russia, China and Japan exist to plague us.

Stalin's record shows that he will cheerfully collaborate with countries that put every Communist they can catch into jail. Like all the other democracies we have chosen to snub the Soviet Union, whose larger political and national interests correspond with our own, while we have given excessive tolerance to the little Communist cockroaches that scuttle about in our own kitchens. Thus, we have actually been more tolerant towards the Comintern than towards the Soviet Union.

* * *

As for Japan, we are still waging a little civil war amongst ourselves, with ninety-nine per cent of the people on the side of China, and all being taxed to send aid to China, while a tiny minority still are sending oil and iron ores to Japan in order to render our aid to China useless. We are thus having a little shooting war between ourselves in Asia.

We have managed to make enemies of both Russia and Japan, while rendering China impotent; a few interests collect transient profits and the attitude of the people, which is called in war-time morale, becomes thoroughly cynical. We also add fuel to the Axis propaganda that this is a plutocrats' war.

And we justify our blunders by saying, "Democracies are that way."

If they had been that way in the eighteenth century there wouldn't have been any democracies to start with.

GUNCOTTON

When the war broke out many people supposed large quantities of American cotton would be required for guncotton.

The amount of cotton used in making the high explosive known as guncotton is not a drop in the bucket compared with the total amount of cotton produced in the world.

This explosive compound is prepared by saturating cotton or other cellulose material with nitric and sulphuric acids.

Guncotton was discovered in 1845 at Basel, Switzerland, by a German chemist named Christian Friedrich Schonbein, discoverer of ozone.

Under date of Monday, November 9, 1846, President James K. Polk made the following entry in his diary:

"Just before I started to attend Col. Cross's funeral today, Mr. Robertson, United States consul at Bremen, called and delivered to me a package which he stated contained a small quantity of cotton prepared as a substitute for gunpowder, which he had brought with him from Europe with instructions that it was only to be opened in the presence of the President of the United States. The package was addressed to me with the superscription that it was only to be opened in my presence. The discovery had been made in Germany. I told Mr. Robertson that I was rather an unbeliever in the merits of the discovery, but that as I was about attending the funeral of Col. Cross I had no time to attend to it."

The next day, however—Tuesday, November 10, 1846—President Polk wrote in his diary as follows:

"Today at 3 p.m. I went with Mr. Robertson, United States consul at Bremen, to the War Department, where the package of gun cotton which he delivered to me on yesterday was opened, and some experiments made by Col. Totten. Its explosive qualities surprised me."

True guncotton looks very much like ordinary unrefined cotton.

Small quantities of loose guncotton merely burn when ignited but large quantities of even loose guncotton will explode when ignited or detonated.

When confined it explodes either wet or dry by detonation and is used in under-water blasting, submarine mines and torpedoes.

It produces no smoke or fouling and therefore is used in smokeless powder.

"DAUGHTER OF DESTINY"

By ELEANOR ATTERBURY COLTON

CHAPTER XVIII

Devona had congratulated herself, in the month since she'd last seen Dale Brasher, that her pride, her self-respect, her common sense had at last won out over her heart. She despised him, she had told herself dozens of times. And she really believed it. That is, until this moment. Looking again straight into those deep blue eyes, she wasn't so sure.

"Good evening, Miss Raebourne," he said and something like a mask settled over his face. "This is quite a surprise."

"Really?" Fighting tremoling that spread treacherously over her in chilling tides, she slipped into the chair Macias held for her, let him light her cigarette, order a cocktail.

"Did you hear Dona sing just now?" Macias purred on, beaming quietly as his dark eyes traveled from one to the other, missing nothing.

Dale nodded, his lips set grimly. "Yes, I had heard her sing before."

"Not like that, I'll bet," Macias persisted.

Dale's blue glance met hers across the little candle-lit table. "No—not like that. I knew she had a lovely voice. I didn't know she was commercializing it."

Devona shrugged. "Why not? No one is interested in singing sentimental little ballads in one drawing room after another."

"No, I suppose not. It's no doubt much more exciting to"— Dale glanced around the crowded room—"to enjoy the center of a spotlight."

Macias' Promise

Wincing, Devona tried not to hear the sarcasm in his voice.

"She's learned plenty since she's been with me," Macias went on complacently, obviously enjoying the little scene.

"I can believe that," Dale's smile twisted wryly.

Devona forced a careless: "It was about time, wasn't it?"

"Sure. My patrons go for her in a big way." Macias waved his cigar at the roomful of pleasure seekers. "She's my biggest attraction now."

"Congratulations," Dale mocked her with a little bow. "It's always nice to see an ambitious girl go ahead."

"She's going ahead, all right," Macias said too quietly. "I'm seeing to that."

Dale's lifted eyebrow showed he missed none of the implications in that. "And while Vara thinks you are in San Francisco at school you'll quietly build yourself a career under her nose. Is that the plan?"

"Why not?" she said now, aware that Dale was waiting for an explanation. Aware, too, of Macias' probing black eyes upon her. "Every girl has a right to her career, don't you think?"

"I suppose so. But your mother's reputation——"

"Has nothing to do with me," she interrupted quickly, but not quickly enough to avert Macias' instant curiosity.

"What do you mean—'mother's reputation'?"

Her Secret Is Out

"She's Vara Vadne's daughter, didn't you know?" Dale said carelessly. "Don't tell me you weren't aware that your protege——"

Macias' dark eyes gleamed. "Vara Vadne's daughter! Why didn't you tell me? I could use it in advertising you."

Devona's heart sank. "No. Please. I'm on my own. My mother would not be interested — would prefer it kept secret, I'm sure."

"Meaning that you prefer it kept secret?" Macias smiled, reached for her hand, pressed it possessively. "What ever you wish, my dear."

With that, Devona felt the jaws of the trap closing in around her. With every word that she defied Dale, she put herself more completely into Macias' hands. But there was no choice. She couldn't — wouldn't let Dale see her real feelings. After all, she'd shown him her heart once.

Watching Macias now, Dale seemed only wryly amused at his attitude toward Devona. And Macias was making that attitude plainer with every word.

"She shall have her career. I'm seeing to that. All the best people come here. Some of these days, I'm going to help her get into big time. With all the trimmings," he said confidently, still holding her hand captive in his.

Costly Decision

Flushing, Devona toyed with the thin-stemmed cocktail glass. Career — trimmings — she wanted to fling the whole stupid affair into Macias' face. What did she care about a career or big time or money or fame or anything that Macias could promise her! When just one word, one glance, one little sign from Dale would have set the whole miserable world straight again.

But that was the one thing she couldn't have, she realized only too well when Dale smiled again, and said calmly.

"Okay, I'll keep your secret from Vara. This is no time to upset her, anyway. The new play opens a week from Saturday."

The play. Talbot's cherished brain-child that Vara would breathe into life with her talent. Vara—for whom life seemed always to weave a pattern of brilliant success, of devoted loyalties. A success that would draw Dale even closer to her. And, incidentally, thrust her daughter as hostage into the unscrupulous hands of Jose Macias.

Because this meeting wasn't sheer coincidence! Devona was perfectly aware of that! It was merely Macias' way of making sure there was no last, frail tie between herself and Dale Brasher, his friend. Making sure that nothing stood in the way of his desire.

And Dale, by his very casual indifference, was helping to make that plain.

One Dance With Dale

"And now if you folks will excuse me a moment. I have some details to look after," Macias said, pushed back from the table. "Why don't you two have a dance?"

Dale merely nodded. "Good idea."

A moment later they were moving toward the crowded dance floor. Once again, Devona felt his arm around her, his cheek close to her forehead. The last time he'd held her close in his arms, she remembered without wanting to, he'd whispered that he loved her, wanted never to lose her.

But if Dale were remembering any of that wonderful, awful last day together, his cool courtesy betrayed none of it.

"So you like your work here?" he asked, obviously making polite small talk.

"Very much."

"Rather long hours, aren't they?"

"I love them. It's so gay, so exciting, so — thrilling to meet charming new friends—" She couldn't go on with that awful lie.

"I see. Never a dull moment."

"Oh, never."

"And plenty of wealthy patrons to make your contacts — worthwhile?" His lip curled ever so slightly. "I think you're going to make Vara proud of you, yet."

Vara again! Devona bit her lip. Maybe every new face was a challenge to Dale Brasher, but his loyalty to Vara Vadne seemed fairly consistent.

When the dance ended and they made their way back to the table, Macias was waiting for them.

Good-by to Dale

"I'll have to skip along now, Jose," Dale told him, putting Devona in her chair. "Thanks for the dance, Miss Raebourne. And let us know when you make your first million. We'll drink to your success in champagne."

"She doesn't need to make a million," Macias said placidly. "She's worth that now — to me."

Bought, paid for, labeled — Devona felt the trap close. The preliminary skirmishes were over. The battle was on. She saw it in Macias' dark eyes, heard it in his voice. He'd only been biding his time up to now. But—convinced that Dale had no further claim — he'd begin closing in now.

"I can see that," Dale said dryly. "Good night."

Tears pressed into the corners of her eyes and a shameless little cry for help pushed into her throat. Don't go, Dale. Please. Or take me with you, then, her heart begged silently. But her pride kept her smile in place, her head high. "Good night."

"I'll see you out, Brasher," Macias said as he pushed back from the table. "Little business matter I want to talk over with you."

"Certainly."

Then, while Dale was still within earshot: "Come to my office, Dona, when you've finished your last number. I'm driving you home tonight."

Mute, Devona nodded, wondered if the terror she felt already showed in her face. "How nice. Thanks."

Dale's glance met hers for an instant before he turned, walked swiftly toward that same office. An instant of strange tension, during which scorn fought with indifference in his eyes — and the indifference won! What she did, what happened to her, was none of his concern, his manner said only too plainly. She was making her own bed — let her lie in it.

Another Warning

Eyes blurred with tears, she watched that dear, dark head towering over Macias' until they disappeared into the lobby. Why should she care so terribly when he cared — so little. Life was funny — life was — impossible.

Then she heard Manuel's signaling chords on the piano. Time to work again. She joined the strolling troubadours, whisking tears out of her eyes, setting her smile on her lips as if it were part of her costume. Impossible or not, there wasn't much to do about life except to go on living it!

When, reluctantly, they finished the last encore, she turned toward Macias' office, drew a long breath.

" 'Smatter, kid?" Manuel at her elbow, tucked his guitar into its case. "You look scared stiff. Anything wrong?"

She shook her head. "No — not yet!" and shrugged a little laugh at him, mostly to prove to herself that she could.

"Look here." He studied her face anxiously. "If you're in a jam, just let me know. I'll get you out."

Devona smiled. Good old Manuel. He would try to help her and lose his own job in the process. Besides, no one could help now. This was once more when she had to stand alone. "No, thanks. I'm all right. Just tired."

"Why don't you beat it, then? Get some sleep."

NEWSMAN HELPS PUT OUT 3 FIRES IN FEW MINUTES

Secure at First Hand Troubles of Firemen Every Night in Week

BOMBS HIT CLOSE

By EDDY GILMORE
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

London, May 12 (CP)—After helping put out three fires in one night of London's Blitz parade I feel like putting on the badge of a visiting fireman.

The moon was full and the night soft outside. When the night suddenly was filled with yelling.

Looking out the front door I saw an eerie green light, made more eerie as it blended with the golden glow of the "bomber" moon. There was a big shouting up the street.

Donning helmets, Art Hudson of the Red Cross and I hot-footed it to the scene. The top of a four-storey building was ablaze. We were joined by two reeling customers of a nearby pub.

"Cawn't get in," they yelled, pointing to a locked door. We gave it the old football cry and the door crumpled. "We're going for water, mates," shouted our friends from the pub.

On the top floor we found a blazing incendiary bomb which had burned through the roof. The room was filled with nauseating smoke. With the pub-boys bringing water, we got the flame out.

Poured Bucket Over Companion

Strolling downstairs, feeling well satisfied with ourselves, we discovered that another incendiary had landed on the roof of a one-storey stoop. With Hudson and a lady firefighter shoving, I got up there and kicked the blazing missile off. Then I doused it with a pail of water, and in the excitement also poured another bucket over Art.

This accomplished, we started for a big blaze on top of a garage. We couldn't get in, so again we knocked down a door, went upstairs and shinnied through a window, tore down a roof barrier and joined two fire-watchers. One was a jeweler, one a bank clerk.

Women Join in Work

Together we attacked the blaze, now 10 feet high. The jeweler punted an incendiary off, and women in the street swooped on it with buckets of sand.

Just then there came a whistling and an explosive bomb hit too close, blasting out nearby windows and covering us with a shower of glass. Two splinters raked my right cheek.

This fire out, we went downstairs just as the fire department arrived and inspected things. "Who are you chaps?" asked the leader.

"We're just visiting firemen," we answered, and then went back home and flopped into bed.

Our lungs ached from incendiary fumes, our pants were burned by acid and buttons were off our coat. The sounds of bombs and gunfire still filled the night.

We went to sleep saying to ourselves: "Just think—some of these guys do this night after night."

Navy.

The tanker travelling alone, was seized March 15 by the German raider Gneisenau, and a Nazi prize crew was put aboard her.

When the San Casimiro's chief officer suggested the Germans would be lucky if they got his ship through British patrols, the prize captain, Lieut. Otto Grenz, retorted: "There are no British ships on the sea, so who is going to rescue you?"

A British warship came along, took the prize crew captive and rescued the British crew.

The announcement said that the fact that the Gneisenau hoped to get the tanker to Germany as a prize and the retort of the German officer indicated that "even the personnel of the German Navy are misled by their own propaganda."

Navy Downs Bombers.

Britain's Mediterranean squadrons, on the loose again, have delivered another powerful blow against Italian North Africa and escaped unscathed from a mass assault by Axis bombing and torpedo planes, the Admiralty announced Saturday.

This action took place last Thursday, the Admiralty said, beginning in the early morning hours, when units of the fleet stole up to the Libyan coast and shelled the important Axis port of Bengazi, in an action similar to the April 22 naval and air assault upon Tripoli.

(Berlin said Sunday night that the fleet renewed its shelling of Bengazi during the week-end, but claimed that two cruisers and three destroyers carrying out the action were driven off by dive-bombers. No announcement concerning this action has been made so far by the Admiralty.)

The announcement said two Axis supply ships approaching Bengazi Harbor were intercepted. One, a 3,000-ton merchantman, was sunk, and the other, an ammunition ship of between 5,000 and 6,000 tons, was blown to bits. Additional hits were reported on ships in the harbor.

Later Thursday, the Admiralty announced, the Mediterranean fleet weathered without damage an Axis air assault which began in the afternoon and continued into the night.

In contrast to an Italian boast that six warships and three merchantman were hit and sixteen escorting British fighter planes were destroyed, the Admiralty gave this as the true score:

Seven Axis planes downed for certain, five badly damaged and others hit; two British fighters lost but the crew of one saved—and not a single British ship hit.

Whether the same ships were involved in this battle and in the Bengazi action was not disclosed, but it was believed unlikely since the Italians placed the scene of the former in the Straits of Sicily—more than 400 miles from the Libyan port.

Attack after attack was made on the fleet beginning Thursday afternoon and continuing into the night, the Admiralty statement related, only to be driven off by British fighters, presumably from one or more aircraft carriers, and by anti-aircraft guns of the squadron.

In one case, it added, a Messerschmitt-escorted formation of twenty-five dive bombers was intercepted, "brilliantly broken up and driven off by naval fighters before the attack could materialize."

The Admiralty said the squadron's anti-aircraft guns destroyed three torpedo planes and one Italian bomber and severely damaged two other torpedo carriers. It credited naval fighter planes with downing a Junkers bomber and two Italian bombers, damage to another Junkers, a Messerschmitt fighter and an Italian fighter.

Talk On First Aid Features Meeting Of Women's Cons. Club

An interesting meeting of the Women's Conservative Club was held last Friday evening with the President, Mrs. Harry Rollins in the chair. The meeting opened with the singing of "O Canada" and a Mother's Day sing song.

During the business of the meeting, Mrs. Tugnett was appointed chairlady for Samson Ward, Mrs. Annie Rose chairlady for Baldwin Ward, and Mrs. York Bushell, chairlady for Coleman Ward. Fine Collection Of Manly MacDonald's Paintings Exhibited

Under the auspices of the University Women's Club an exhibit of paintings by Manly MacDonald, A.R.C.A., O.S.A., was held in the Collegiate Library, Saturday afternoon. The collection included many of the best examples of the artist's work, familiar scenes in Quinte district in early Spring and Autumn. The seascapes which Mr. MacDonald does so well were prominently displayed, and two portraits studies, one of his wife and one of his son were also shown. Mr. MacDonald was present during the afternoon and his many friends in this district had the pleasure of a chat with him.

The beautiful painting which Mr. MacDonald donated to the club for their war efforts was drawn for during the afternoon with little Miss Judith Taylor, a British war guest from Manchester, England, making the drawing. The picture was won by Miss Helen McHenry, Embrun, Ont.

Tea was served in connection with the exhibit the guests being welcomed by Mrs. W. J. Doyle, president. GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

WIDOW'S MARRIAGE

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

1. I am planning to marry next month. I am a widow, and I have a daughter who is nineteen years old. My fiance and I want the members of our families to be at our wedding, and as my home is too small to accommodate the number of guests, would it be proper to have the wedding in my church?

2. Wherever we have it, would it be proper for him to have his brother as his best man, and for me to have my daughter as my attendant?

3. We would also like to know if it would be proper to send announcements? Under our special circumstances, this would be very convenient for us.

H.O.

1. Don't hesitate to plan to be married in your church just because you are to have so few guests. This small, intimate kind of church wedding can be especially charming and impressive.

2. Yes, the customary thing is for the bridegroom to have his brother as his best man, even when the wedding is such a small one. And it would be proper — charming, too — for you to have your daughter as your only attendant.

3. Yes, by all means plan to send out marriage announcements.

The marriage announcement of a widow of mature years is usually sent in this form: —

Mr. John Ford Worthy and
Mrs. George Wells Carlton announce their marriage on Tuesday, the tenth of June
Nineteen hundred and forty-one
Buffalo, New York

If you prefer, it is permissable for you to use your first name ... Mrs. Mary Brown Carlton .... in this announcement.

GIFT REQUIRED?

Dear Mrs. Beeckman,

I have received an invitation to a church wedding and reception. I shall probably not be able to accept, but of course I shall reply to the invitation.

Do I have to send a gift?

M.M.

The fact that we are invited to the wedding reception usually means that we are close or fairly close friends of either the bride or groom or both. And a friend would probably wish to send a gift for the new home.

However, the only real answer to this question as to whether or not we send a wedding gift is the same answer that decides the sending of any other kind of gift — your own wish. So the answer to your question is your answer to its question.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Loneliness Phobia Responsible for Mis-Marriages of Middle Aged.

When you hear of some middle-aged man or woman marrying a boy or girl of whom the elder partner might be a parent or grandparent, put the rash act down to loneliness.

Perhaps you've read in your papers of the young man of 24 who married his landlady, more than twice his age, and absconded with her life savings on the day of the wedding. You could actually hear people say, "She should have known better," but for me the robbed landlady gets nothing but sympathy. It was only because she "was old enough to know better" that she was victimized by the worthless Get-Rich-Quick youngster now being held under $15,000 bond.

Nothing is so tempting to lonely middle age as youth. By some oblique reasoning, men and women who are getting on in years imagine they may remain younger a little longer if they are associated with youth. They've seen neglected old people, and think to avoid the inevitable by keeping up with the young Joneses. But the young Joneses, unless they are marrying for money, lots and lots of it, will have none of them. They're too busy keeping up with each other.

The best medicine for lonely people is to stop thinking of their own solitary condition and to take up some cause, study, avocation — something which will put them in contact with their fellow creatures and make them dwell less on their own unhappiness.

Loneliness is a bad habit, and lonely people should try to understand their own difficulties. They should remember that they are likely to find a congenial friend or sweetheart among the stayers-at-home than among the lively frequenters of dance-halls.

In other words, all that is necessary for lonely people to do is to force their way out of their own unhappy shells and seek each other out. Hearts need love as much as fish need water or lungs need air. But it's just about as safe for the aging man or woman to seek for something young and glittering as it is for a crawling baby to reach for a bright knife or a pair of scissors because the thing has attracted his eye.

As long as people have dramatic emotions it's folly to point out the danger of living by thrills, when thrills are what they're after. But the weight of evidence is against a Sixty "who feels as young as ever" to find anything in marriage with Sweet Sixteen but disillusionment and unhappiness.

Friendship, hobbies, interest in causes may seem a chill substitute for the divine madness of falling in love. But it certainly keeps a person off the "anxious bench."

Here's hoping that the Washington landlady may get back her savings of $2,100. It's probable the young man knew what he was about when he engaged board with the widow lady, as he married her under an assumed name.

The Stars Say

For Tuesday May 13

By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE

JUDGING by the lunar transits this should be a very active day, with the prospect of much creative incentive in the direction of new propositions and with the energies bent to high purpose and backed up by decided skill, ingenuity and initiative. However, unless these fine forces and faculties are kept in grooves both practical, controlled and amicable there is danger of defeat and disruption. This mainly through deception, fraud, intrigue or possible opposition from a group, community or public source. Caution spells success.

Those whose birthday it is may look for a year of progress and much constructive work, perhaps in a new direction or on some major proposition requiring initiative, executive ability and practical plans executed with aggressive and energetic attack. But be prepared for some subtle opposition, with treachery, deceit and sinister intent at the source. This might be from public or community antagonism and should be met with resistance and reason as well as amiability. Bitterness and strife would be unfavorable.

A child born on this day should have much creative ability energy and practical ideas, but its inclination to ill-considered words and speech may prove its undoing.

DR. DAFOE'S COLUMN on the Quintuplets and the Care of Your Children

HANDS OFF POLICY CONCERNING CHILDREN'S FRIENDS OFTEN WISE

Fewer parents these days try to choose their children's boy friends or girl friends. I think that is a good thing, too. I'm inclined to agree with the father who said to me not long ago: "We have taught our son and daughter all we know about decency. That is about all we can do. They must carry on from there by themselves". It is my advice to a woman who wrote me about her daughter, saying:

"My daughter never seems to go out with boys. The boys who do come around to see her aren't in her class socially, and her father and I don't want her to go with them. The result is that she sits around home a good deal while others are going to dances and this seems to make her unhappy. What are we to do?"

The girl should be let alone to solve the problem for herself. She will probably do it a whole lot better than her parents will.

Ordinarily a girl in her teens has no trouble making her own friends and finding her own boys to go out with. As soon as parents begin interfering with this natural procedure, then they are likely to make trouble for themselves. I have seen more than one girl run away from home because her parents persisted in interfering with her friends.

Of course, if a girl doesn't have any interference from her parents and still has no boy friends, that is another matter. But still the parents can't do much about it, for the trouble must be with the girl herself and she must mend her ways if she is to be sought after, as is the right of all girls, by the other sex.

I remember one fine looking young girl who lived near here who spoiled her youthful fun because she considered that she was too good for the boys of the village. Her family was fairly well-to-do by our standards, and she never forgot it. Nobody ever took her out, or if they did, once was enough. She froze them with her snootiness and superior ways. I just wonder if the mother who wrote me that letter perhaps wasn't being a mite snooty when she said that the boys that came for her daughter weren't good enough for her. That doesn't seem quite reasonable, somehow or other.

Any daughter who is sitting around these days waiting for a boys who is her social equal to come along, may have to wait for a long time.

Parents often drive off the boy friends of daughters by giving her clothes and advantages no ordinary young man could afford to give his wife.

Young men have told me that girls who overdress frighten them away. Some of the young fellows like nothing better than to take out a flashy dresser. But a lot more of them are a little bit frightened by it. Perhaps they feel inferior when they are with such a girl, or perhaps it is an unconscious feeling on their part that such an extravagant dresser is too expensive a girl for them.

HOLD OLD CARS FOR SALE WITH NEW CAR PRICE

Estimated Half - Million Autos "Laid Up" in Britain These Days — Driving Costly and Precarious in Spots

By PAT USHER

London (CP) — A second-hand motorcar in good condition costs more in Britain today than the same car when new. But the used car in run-down condition is a liability. Spare parts are difficult or impossible to obtain. When a car begins to go to pieces the owner usually puts it in storage and resorts to other means of transport.

Several factors have forced up the price of used cars. Many people believe there will be such a shortage of automobiles in post-war Britain that old timers will command high prices. One London dealer estimates at least 500,000 cars have been laid up by owners who expect eventually to get double their purchase price.

Manufacture of new automobiles is virtually stopped for the duration. Those that are made are reserved for the export market. The private motorist must get authorization from the ministry of supply before he can buy a new car—and he must have a good reason.

No figures are now available as to the number of vehicles operating on Britain's roads because the government considers "it would not be in the public interest to disclose them." But car registrations are estimated in competent quarters to have dropped less than a quarter.

Bicycles always have been popular in Britain, where distances between towns are much shorter than in Canada. Since the war more bicycles than ever have appeared on the roads. Many motorists have turned to this less expensive form of transport as an economy measure.

The gasoline ration allows the private driver to travel approximately 200 miles a month. But those doing work of national importance or to whom a car is essential can get an extra allowance. For instance a commercial traveller who needs a car to cover his route can travel between 550 and 600 miles monthly.

Special Regulations

War time conditions have compelled special motoring regulations. If you drive in the blackout you must have your headlights masked. Tips of mudguards or bumpers must be painted white. Parked cars must be immobilized by removal of the distributor head or some essential part of the engine. Even in daylight they must always be left locked. Speed limit in the blackout in built-up areas is 20 miles an hour. In open country there is no speed limit.

The tourist must frequently halt at road blocks manned by soldiers. These usually obstruct half the road. Some drivers who ignored a sentry's challenge have been shot and killed. When stopped the driver must show his identity card and driving licence. Then he is allowed to proceed.

The private motorist can camouflage his car if he wishes to protect it from possible machine-gun attacks by daylight raiders. A few have done so. But the color scheme and design must differ from that used by military vehicles.

Picton and District

Picton, May 10 — Mrs. H. P. Plumptre, Ontario Director, Canadian Red Cross, addressed three hundred women in the Regent Theatre here Thursday afternoon, on Red Cross work.

The new clothing which is being sent overseas is giving Canada a great name, she said. Only new clothing is sent since shipping space is limited and new clothing cheers the recipients, especially the poor.

The sign of the Red Cross is used to secure immunity from attack. Mercy in war is greater than any hatred in war. The Red Cross represents over sixty nations of the world coming together to make the horrors of war less dreadful and to mitigate suffering. The Red Cross is a link with other organizations working for humanity.

A cable came from Geneva Wednesday morning telling of the safe arrival of comforts for prisoners of war, said Mrs. Plumptre, who exhibited a specimen box. These are packed at the rate of 1000 a day in Toronto and sent to the United States for shipment to Lisbon and there to Marseilles before going on to Switzerland. Care is taken that they do not fall into German hands. It requires $125 a year to send boxes to each prisoner, each box being valued at $2.50, said Mrs. Plumptre.

Telling of work among bomb suffers, Mrs. Plumptre related that Red Cross trucks were on the streets distributing food, clothing and blankets for the sufferers.

Out of this war is growing the solidarity of the Empire, said the speaker. Our gifts carry the message that we are good fellow members of the empire.

Many of the thirty-six mobile kitchen promises have already been sent overseas, each one costing $3,500. Each is outfitted to cook for and feed two hundred and fifty people, said the speaker.

The Canadian Red Cross hospital in England was completely equipped by Canadians and other hospitals receive supplies.

Accounts of the Red Cross are audited at Provincial Headquarters and later at Dominion Headquarters and then sent to the Department of National Defense.

Cost of administration is only three and one-half cents of each dollar and for every paid worker there are thousands of volunteers, said Mrs. Plumptre. An efficient head of the organization is required. Jam will be required again this year and instructions will be sent out. Canadian magazines and papers would be appreciated in Canadian hospitals overseas.

The greatest expenditures of the Red Cross is for new materials and the second for parcels for prisoners said the speaker.

Other Red Cross work enumerated by the speaker included taking part in collecting blood for overseas, training of women for many activities, visiting patients in hospitals, assisting those affected by tragedies at sea. "Wherever there is suffering, there I go," is the Red Cross motto.

Mrs. J. P. Reycroft presided and Mrs. Plumptre was thanked by Mr. E. L. Bronskill and Mayor Nesbitt McKibbon.

Joins Navy

Another of Picton's popular young men has joined the Royal Canadian Navy as a writer in the person of Allan McGibbon. He was ordered to report to Kingston for duty yesterday. He is a son of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. McGibbon and has been bookkeeper at the Lipson store here.

Mrs. C. G. Rutter Elected President Picton Home-School Association

Picton — Several important features marked the meeting of the Home and School Association on Wednesday evening.

Mrs. F. Webster presided and the various reports were given. The treasurer, Mrs. C. G. Rutter announced over sixty dollars made at the rummage sale. The program began with a very enjoyable piano solo by Stanley Creeggan. This was followed by the report of the nominating committee given by Mrs. Frank Kemsley. The slate of officers was as follows:—

Honorary presidents, Mrs. Iva Martin, Mrs. H. V. Tobey, Mrs. Geo. Cook; President, Mrs. C. G. Rutter; Vice president, Mrs. A. F. Brown; Rec. Secretary, Mrs. H. Knapman; Cor. Secretary, Mrs. W. E. Scott; Treasurer, Mrs. Lyall Woods; Pianist, Mrs. H. Anderson; Assistant pianist, Mrs. C. Walters; Convener of Music, Mrs. A.A. Lloyd; Convener of Publications, Mrs. E. A. Morden; Convener of Visiting, Mrs. W. C. Hicks; Convener of Finance, Mrs. Ern Ward; Convener of Publicity, Mrs. Ray Clapp; Convener of Social, Mrs. C. E. Goodwin;, Mrs. B. Kingsley; Convener Membership, Mrs. W. Lane, Mrs. L. B. Calnan; Convener League of Nations, Mrs. F. Kemsley; Convenor Program, Mrs. F. J. Webster, Mrs. D. Fournia; Rep. of Teachers, Mrs. Todd, Miss McAlpine.

A violin duet by Earl Holt and Donald Hough "Men of Harlech", showed how well music is advancing in the school.

A play, "Trial of Fire" by pupils of Mr. Jack Blakely's class was very good. The characters were:—

The Judge, Gerald McKinnon; Counsel for Accused, Willard Drew; Crown Attorney, Richard Thomas; Clerk of Court, Earl Foreman; Policeman, Arnold Claxton; Dependents, Kerosene, Alice Caton; Defective chimney, Patsy Hogle; Cigarette, Lee Collier; Gasoline, Christine Cowan; Match, Hazel Gilroy; Lightning, Ivy Miller; Electricity, L. C. Conley; Bonfire, Barbara MacStephen; The arch criminal, Carelessness, Phyllis McWilliam; The jury, Alfred Thompson, Harry Jones, Harry Algar, Laverne Hegadorn, Rebecca Francis, Noreen Smith (foreman).

The play was conducted like a court trial, and each defendant proved that he was innocent if properly handled, but the arch criminal "Carelessness" could not prove innocence and was led away to be banished.

Mrs. Gordon Walmsley conducted a quiz on accidents to remind people of the ways in which accidents occur in the home and elsewhere.

Mrs. F. Kemsley gave a little reading entitled "Overhead". Two women in an organization who said they were not interested in League of Nations work, and yet were working with new Canadians to promote better understanding and good will. This is League of Nations work.

Convention Report

The report of the delegate to the Royal York Hotel in Toronto was well given by Mrs. D. Fournia.

Mrs. L. B. Calnan who also attended the convention gave her report.

She attended a panel discussion of about five hundred women.

The next meeting will be Dramatic Night. A vote of thanks to all who contributed to a delightful program was moved by Mrs. C.G. Rutter and seconded by Mrs. C. Walters.

Trenton and District

Trenton, May 12—Civil officials bands, civilians and boy scouts all took part in a huge parade in this town prior to the official opening of the Trenton Softball League here Friday night.

The parade was formed up on the Market Square by Sergeant-Major Ellarby, with the Airforce band in the lead. The band was followed by the members of the 6ARD softball team and the players of the Continental Cans. Civic officials including the mayor and members of the council, war veterans and other officials paraded after the teams. The Lions' Club Boys' Band, making its first appearance in a parade received a tremendous ovation from the crowds that lined Dundas Street in the main business section.

Welcomed By Mayor

Mayor Harry Cory officially opened the game when he pitched the first ball to Councillor Kenneth Couch who promptly clouted it for a single. Councillor Ross Burtt was behind the plate but failed to handle the ball.

The Continental Canners won the first game of the season by defeating the R.C.A.F. Flyers, Intermediate "B" Provincial Championship of last year, by a score of 7 to 5.

The Canners started in the second frame to take a lead from their opponents when Henry made first on an error and Stacey clouted out a double. Both runners moved home on a long single to right field for the first two runs.

The Flyers evened the score in the first half of the fourth when Brethet and Whalen both scored on a single by Bogden. However the Canners again tied the score in the last half of the fourth, with Ruttan and Emerson collecting runs.

The score was again evened in the seventh by the Flyers with Casey and Langhette scoring on a double by Gauthier. A single by Austin in the seventh resulted in another run being scored by the Cans, with two more being added in the eighth. CENSUS TAKERS AS APPRAISERS

Housing Programs to be Implemented by Information from Their Returns

Ottawa (CP)—Census enumerators this year will make a special check on every 10th house they visit, asking detailed questions as to its condition and value. By this means information wanted for Canadian housing programs will be assembled.

Instructions to enumerators issued here by the trade and commerce department give advice as to how the condition of a building can be decided.

A dwelling is considered to be in need of major repair if there are sagging or rotting foundations causing wall to crack or lean; if shingles on a shingle roof are warped and missing or there is another type of leaking roof; if the chimney is cracked or there are bricks missing, or if the outside steps or stairways are unsafe.

The enumerator is advised that this question of major repairs should be answered chiefly from observation rather than by questioning. In giving the estimated value of a building, the enumerator is asked to remember that "this value will be the amount that this dwelling would sell for on June 2, 1941, if the owner were willing to sell to a willing buyer in competition with similar dwellings."

Screen Actress Found Dead In Her Own Home

Hollywood, Calif., May 12—(AP)—Peggy Shannon, 31, screen actress and former Ziegfield Follies girl, was found dead in her home yesterday.

Albert G. Roberts, her husband, told police he and another studio worker returned from a fishing trip to find the actress' body in a kitchen chair, her head resting on a table. A cigarette was between her lips and an empty glass was nearby.

Detectivve Lieut. Chet Burris said her death probably was from natural causes but he would ask an autopsy.

When Clara Bow suffered a nervous breakdown in 1932, Miss Shannon took her role in "The Secret Call" and for a time was groomed as Miss Bow's successor.

Miss Shannon's most recent picture was "Cafe Hostess."

Aiken said Eire will be short about 30,000 tons of wheat but next year hopes to produce all the food it needs.

CLARIFY RANK OF COMMODORE

Special Admiralty Order Safeguards Position of Canadian Officer

London, May 12 — (CP) — Position of Commodore L. W. Murray as head of the Canadian navy in British waters has been safeguarded by a special admiralty order clarifying a commodore's status. Holders of this rank, given temporarily for special duties, will in future rank above all captains and below Rear-Admirals.

Formerly it was found that a captain, given rank of commodore for special work, was required when consulting with captains outside his command to take his place according to relative seniority in the captains' list.

In wartime, due to rapid transfer of ships from one station to another, the officer chosen to command a certain sphere of operations and given commodore's rank sometimes found himself superseded in command by arrival of another ship with a senior captain whose participation had not been foreseen at the time of the commodore's appointment.

To prevent this situation and ensure command remains in the hands of the officer originally chosen the clarifying order was passed.

Yankees In Fourth Place Due To Lack Of Hitting And Failure Of Rookie Hurlers On Squad

Only Two Members of Team Hitting Over .300 Mark

DODGERS ON TOP

(By Bill Boni)

(Associated Press Sport Writer)

While Brooklyn Dodgers two full games out front in the National League, head west today and Cleveland Indians, pacing the American League by three, are bound for their first swing through the East, New York Yankees finish up their first road trip in Boston.

This temporarily stationary position making them fit subjects for study, it develops that the Yanks, Lo and Behold, are in fourth place. They have, at present, only two regular batting over .300 (Bill Dickey, .371 and Joe Dimaggio, .329) and, what is more important, have yet to get a winning pitching job from a single one of their highly-touted Rookies.

They plumbed the season's low yesterday, when Boston Red Sox dropped them out of second place with a 13-5 shellacking in which four Yankee hurlers were clubbed for 17 hits.

Finished in Showers

Spud Chandler started the game, his third, and for the third time finished it in the showers. Steve Peek, Charlie Stanceu and Norm Branch followed him to the mound, which might just as well have been in front of a firing squad. The erstwhile sluggers really had the table turned on them in the second inning, when the Sox sent 12 men up to the plate and seven across it.

While the Yanks were being thumped yesterday, the Indians, aided by home runs by Ray Mack and Hal Trosky, won the opener of a double header from St. Louis Browns, 7-5, but then were nosed out in the nightcap, 6-5.

Hit Two-Run Triple

Another 10-inning battle saw Washington Senators bow to Philadelphia Athletics, 10-3. Buddy Lewis hit a two-run triple and then brought in the tying marker for the Nats in the ninth, only to become the goat just an inning later when his error let in the A's winning run.

In Chicago, meanwhile, 40-year-old Ted Lyons, with nine days' rest, pitched a seven-hitter to best Detroit Tigers and Tommy Bridges, 2-1.

The Dodgers and St. Louis Cardinals kept their two-game distance at the head of the National League parade, Brooklyn by shading the Phillies, 6-5, and the Redbirds with a 7-4 conquest of Pittsburgh Pirates. Kirby Higbe got into a lot of tight spots against his former Philadelphia teammates but gave up only six hits.

A nice job of relief pitching, three-hit ball for eight innings by Lanky Southpaw Cliff Melton, gave New York Giants an 8-3 decision over Boston Braves.

Passeau Man of Day

For the Chicago Cubs, the man of the day was Claude Passeau. The towering right-hander shackled Cincinnati Reds with the exception of one inning, the sixth, when they put together their only three hits, all singles, for their only run. The Cubs meanwhile made a dozen safeties good for a 9-1 verdict.

In Saturday's National League games, the Braves and Giants split a doubleheader, Boston taking the first 11-3 and New York the second 4-2 Cincinnati won 5-1 over Chicago Cubs, while the Dodgers took the Phillies 4-1. The St. Louis-Pittsburgh game was rained out. In the American League, the Athletics nosed out Washington 8-7, Cleveland turned back the Browns 4-3 and Chicago eked out a 4-3 decision over the Tigers. New York-Boston were rained out.

GOOD PITCHING, HITTING KEEPING ROYALS NEAR TOP

Montreal Only One Game Behind Newark Bears—Two Players Injured

LEAFS LOSE TWO

(By The Associated Press)

In the course of "buying" a National League pennant for Brooklyn Dodgers, Boss Larry MacPhail may also have purchased one for Montreal Royals, Brooklyn's farm in the International League.

The Royals, second only to Newark in the league standing are only a game behind the Bears today as the result of Sunday's doubleheader triumph over Baltimore Orioles.

Montreal's clouting recently, has been something fearful for opposing pitchers to see, and with adequate hurling of their own, it may be hard to keep the Royals away from the top.

In yesterday's twin triumph, 15-3 and 11-4, the Royals slammed out 29 hits for a total of 53 bases. Woody Jensen, Charlie Gilbert, Herman Franks and George Staller all had homers for the winners.

That slugging was just added emphasis to a hitting display which went for a total of 76 hits and 51 runs during the last week, and it was reflected in yesterday's attendance, 18,124.

Newark not only lost a full game in the pennant chase by splitting a doubleheader with Syracuse Chiefs, but had even harder luck than Montreal. Ed Levy, the Bear's big first sacker, suffered a broken wrist in a collision with Chris Hartje during the second game and will be sidelines for about two months. The Bears won that game 2-0.

Syracuse won the first clash, 7-1, but lost Frank Secory, hard-hitting outfielder, whose right leg was broken in an unnecessary slide for home. He won't play again for three months.

Rochester's Red Wings made the only change in the league standings, beating Toronto 6-3 and 11-10 to move into third place, a half game ahead of Buffalo Bisons, who lost the first game to Jersey City, 5-4, then came back to win 4-1.

In Saturday's games, the Leafs defeated Jersey City in a doubleheader for the first time since 1938. They had to go 12 innings to win the first game, 5-4, and Walter Lanfranconi held the Jerseys to two hits to take the nightcap 1-0. Buffalo eked out a 7-6 victory over Newark, Rochester beat Baltimore 4-3 and Montreal and Syracuse played to a 2-2 tie in a game called at the end of the 14th inning to allow Syracuse to catch a train. The game last three hours, 26 minutes.

82ND RUNNING OF KING'S PLATE WIDE OPEN RACE

Undisturbed, Warrigan and Budpath Sulit Choices in the Wagering

RACE AT WOODBINE

By SCOTT YOUNG

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, May 12 (CP)—Ontario's leading province-born three-year-olds today were going through one of the final few training stretches before the 82nd running of the King's Plate here next Saturday, and contained in one of the sweating black, bay or chestnut thoroughbreds was the power every owner would like to identify with his own entry—the power to win this historical nine-furlongs event.

As usual, no one knew where that power was hidden. The 1941 renewal of the continent's oldest continuously-run stake race for the King's 50 guineas and the major share of the $8,000-added purse poeted by the Ontario Jockey Club was shaping up wide-open, a typical plate race for Woodbine Park's opening day.

As the hardboots watched the thoroughbreds sharpen under heavy training during the past few weeks, some have believed the winning-power to lie with Undisturbed. Others favored Budpath or Warrigan. A solid, if comparatively small, section of track opinion was behind Skyliner, and the filly Depositor had some support.

Other fine thoroughbreds such as Passa Grille, Taffrail, Attrisius and Top Boots had more or less confident expert approval.

Conditions of the race limit it to three-year-olds foaled in Ontario, and with no previous three-year-old victories.

About 20,000 racing fans from many parts of Ontario are expected to crowd into Woodbine Park in Toronto's East End for the Plate, if the weather is fine. If it blows up rain, the attendance may be about 5,000 less than that.

WHIRLAWAY WINS PREAKNESS IN EASY FASHION

Five Lengths in Front at Finish on Track Only Rated as "Good"

PAID EVEN MONEY

By SID FEDER

(Associated Press Sports Writer)

New York, May 12—(AP)—A new worry popped up today for "Whacky" Whirlaway and his hopes for the precious triple crown of racing.

As Belmont opened its spring meeting here, it was learned that the "brains" of the little Kentucky cannonball might not be in the saddle June 7 when the colt goes after the third jewel in the crown, in the Belmont stakes.

Although no definite yes or no was forthcoming, it was disclosed Mrs. Payne Whitney has a couple of colts in her barn that she expects to have ready for the mile-and-a-half grind which annually tops off the Kentucky Derby and the Preakness for three-year-olds. If she does, naturally she'll have her contract rider, Eddie Arcaro, aboard her chief hope.

In that case, the little guy from the blue grass, generally regarded as the No. 1 jockey in the business would be riding to beat the colt he rode to triumph in the Derby and Preakness.

Wins by Five Lengths

Of course, the way Whirly waltzed off with the Derby by eight lengths and followed it up by leaving the rest of the field five lengths behind Saturday in the Preakness is no guarantee he'll miss Eddie enough to lose the Belmont.

Whirlaway Warren Wright's stretch-running colt, won the Preakness much the same way as he did the Derby, except that he made his move earlier. He was five lengths ahead of Goden Phipps' King Cole, who set the early pace in the 1 1-16-mile run. Our Boots was third by a neck over Porter's Cap, who came on strong at the finish.

Whirlaway started last in the eight-horse race and ran right through the pack to win in the good time of 1:58 4-5 over a track rated only as "good" after heavy rain Friday.

Through victory, Whirlaway took $49,365 which brought his earnings for the year to $117,416. He paid only $4.30 for a $2 ticket.

MAURICE NEWLIN

Maurice Newlin, the other half of the San Antonio twin battery combination last year, may stick with the Browns this season as a pitching hopeful.

Newlin, who won 23 games for the San Antonio club in 1940, is a graduate of the sandlots and American Legion loop.

In 1939 he won 26 games at Topeka, thus giving him a great minor league record the last two years.

A native of Bloomingdale, Ind., Newlin now lives in San Antonio. He is a righthander.

QUICK & ROBERTSON

"CORRECT CLOTHING FOR MEN"

CALLING 'EM

Between the Lines

with Ken J. Colling

Look for some startling changes in the roster of at least three local softball clubs as they move up to the starter's barrier this week. Alfie Rowbotham, who caught for the "Oilers" last season, was being counted on heavily by the Corby A.C. outfit, but at the last minute Alfie decided to throw his lot in with the Reliance squad. The same may go for Mansfield, a junior now employed at the Stephen-Adamson Company, whose absence from the Junior line-up may result in a deep gap in Red Townsend's infield. Skippers Barriage and Bawden of the Corby nine, have been literally tearing their hair seeking an experienced receiver to take care of the slants of Connie Harris and Johnnie Bawden. "Now that we've got two tried and proven pitchers, we're minus a catcher with sufficient experience to hold 'em up," lamented Gerald Barriage. However, the Corbys A.C. aren't the only club afflicted with worries including the possible loss of Art Cole, who may vacate the city soon.

With the season's schedule opening Wednesday with the newly-entered Reliance nine testing the Juniors' strength, the pitching strength of the "plane-makers" doesn't seem to be compared with that of Corbys, especially on paper. Archie Major, puck-kicker-out deluxe for the Reliance Hockey Club, seems to be the best of Ken Soden's mound corps. Ted Follwell, who hurled in the local "No-Kick" loop last season, is seeking a pitching berth with the Reliance, while Jimmie Follwell of Argo football fame, is battling Johnnie Hamilton for the first base position. The Reliance team could line-up Eddie Schrieder with very little difficulty, . but it is rumored a "dark horse" moundsman may yet loom up on the Reliance hilltop. Red Townsend used Powers and former Ki-Y pitcher Herrington in an exhibition game recently, but kept Ralph Campbell, a towering teen-aged youth from Foxboro, under cover and it would not surpise many if Campbell got the opening game assignment versus the Reliance. Little has been heard from the camps of the SAC. or Point Anne camps as yet, but trust Buddy Gaulin to be in when the melon is cut.

With the hockey curtain rang down about ten days ago, talks of player migrations are being heard all across Canada. Here's an interesting note found in Peterboro Fred Craig's column last Friday, pertaining to a hockey meeting held in the Liftlock City the evening previous. Fred says: "There was plenty of enthusiasm shown at last night's meeting of the Peterborough Hockey Club, enough to serve warning on other clubs in the group that the Petes will have to be respected in the 1941-42 campaign. The officers and players plan to make next season a memorable one in hockey circles in Peterborough hence last night's meeting and an early start on the preparations for next winter. It was decided not to elect officers for the present and instead a committee composed of Frank Buckland, Jimmy Ellis and Johnny Godfrey was appointed to take charge of plans for next winter. That trio realizes the need of reinforcements and for bolstering up weak spots in the lineup and they expect to be able to do something about it long before practices begin. The feature of the meeting was the enthusiasm shown by all and sundry."

At this civic testimonial banquet held to honor the "Combines" last month, a similar note was struck regarding the future of hockey in Kingston, where it is understood a senior "A" club is being anticipated for the next hockey season. For years back Kingston Scribe Bill Walshe has been urging the Limestone sport activities to abandon sporting activities and affiliations west of Cataraqui and seek berths in the Ottawa Valley. This has been done in football, tennis and basketball for years back and now Kingston is playing its major baseball in the Eastern diamond set-up, casting into abandon that old phrase penned by Horace Greeley—"go west young man, go west." However, it will be interesting to await Walshe's stand when the hockey season rolls around next autumn. Will he then be as forceful regarding Kingston seeking Eastern affiliations, or will he be forced to eat humble pie when the Kingston interests return to the O.H.A.?

Locally Ken Soden, genial Secretary-treasurer of the Reliance Hockey Club, is more than anxious to have other Belleville industrial firms assist in the provision of a strong senior hockey team for Belleville next season. Soden is of the opinion that all should assist in the icing of a strong "Belleville" team. Not so long ago a defenceman by the name of Durno took up residence in Belleville as an effort to bolster the local hockey team was launched. However, Durno had previously applied for a position with the Ontario Provincial Police and was given an appointment in Western Ontario only a few weeks after he located in Belleville. It is common knowledge that the playing strength of both Peterborough and Kingston will be materially strengthened next season and it is also believed Oshawa will be included in a district senior "A" group so fore-warned is fore-armed.

Only one more river to cross—that's the position Warren Wright's Whirlaway finds himself today after winning the Preakness on Saturday and with as much ease as he ran off with the Kentucky Derby honours the week previous. Out of the barrier last in an eight-horse race, Whirlaway really whirled down the back stretch to eventually win by five lengths, which is no mean chore for any equine star. Credit for riding Whirlaway in such a masterful style in both the Derby and Preakness is given Jockey Eddie Arcaro, but the experts today are more inclined to give the praise for making a "wild, crazy horse" into a real champion to Trainer Ben Jones, whose faith in the big champion never flinched despite Whirlaway's wildness as a two-year-old. "He's the greatest three-year-old I ever saw and he'll win the Belmont Stakes just as easy," predicted Jockey Arcaro and it looks as though Whirlaway will be the first "triple-crown" turf champion since War Admiral back in 1937.

SPORT SALAD—They'll do it every time—last winter the Phillies sold Pitcher Walter Higbe to Brooklyn. . . . Yesterday Higbe returned to Shibe Park in Philadelphia in the livery of a Dodger moundsman and chalked up a win for his new team against Phillies and the "Daffiness Boys" from Flatbush continue to dominate the National League. . . . Old Ted Lyons was up to his old tricks yesterday—that of winning ball games. . . . The perennial Chicago hurler scattered seven Detroit hits masterfully as his team mates collected two runs and the Pale Hose won by a 2-1 count. . . . The Red Sox climbed into second place in the American League by blasting the Yankees 13 to 5 and the latter club dropped to a bad fourth slot position. . . . In all of the excitement of the Preakness don't forget that the 82nd running of the King's Plate is the next important turf event of the year. ■ ■

HOW TO RELIEVE PILE TORTURE
QUICKLY AND EASILY

If you are troubled with itching piles or rectal soreness, do not delay treatment and run the risk of letting this condition become chronic. Any itching or soreness or painful passage of stool is nature's warning and proper treatment should be secured at once.

For this purpose get a package of Hem-Roid from J. S. McKeown or any druggist and use as directed. This formula which is used internally is a small, easy to take tablet, will quickly relieve the itching and soreness and aid in healing the sore tender spots. Hem-Roid is pleasant to use, is highly recommended and it seems the height of folly for any one to risk a painful and chronic pile condition when such a fine remedy may be had at such a small cost.

If you try Hem-Roid and are not entirely pleased with the results, your druggist will gladly return your money.

Little Benny's Note Book

I finely got up this morning after being called 3 times and shook 2, thinking G, I wish I could have breakfist in bed like people do in the movies.

And I was the last one down for breakfist, ma saying, Look at him, it's the same old time worn story, he'll just have time to gobble a few scanty mouthfulls before he rushes off to school. I declare I dont know how he grows even as much as he does, she said, and I said, Well G winnickers, ma, I'm going to turn over a new leaf.

Well I'm sure I couldn't listen to better news, and I'll be only too pleased to help you with every reasonable means, ma said, and I said, Then I'll tell you the swellest means. You can bring me my breakfist brite and early every morning, and I'll be glad to wake up and eat it gradually and get all the good out of it, especially if I smell flapcakes with it. How's that for an idea, ma? I said.

It's shocking, that's how it is, ma said. The idea of even having the thought that you'd like to eat like an invalid at your age. Willyum how can you sit there unmoved while he's giving vent to such nonsense? she said, and pop said, The fact that I am composing my features, with my habitual self control doesn't mean that I am unmoved, my deer. I am we aware that according to one school of thought the whole cause of the present social unrest throughout the world is the existance of people who think that others are born to get up in the morning and bring them their breakfist, rising like larks while they lie there like junk-birds. And yet the idea has a certain charm and I dont know but what I could be induced to give it a try myself, he said.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, May 12 (CP)—Mining and industrial stocks registered minor gains on Toronto Exchange today. Trading was dull with 60,000 shares traded.

Pivotal industrials recording better prices included Fanny Farmer, Distillers-Seagrams, Bell Telephone, Ford A, Loblaw A and International Petroleum.

Macassa, MacLeod-Cockshutt and Little Long Lac were stronger golds while Wright Hargreaves posted a new low for the year at $5 and prices were a bit heavy for East Malartic and Dome. Changes were insignificant in the base metals.

WALL STREET

New York, May 12—(AP)—The rallying theme was less pronounced in today's stock market although scattered favorites were able to tack on modest advances.

There was some cashing in on Saturday's brisk upswing but little weakness was in evidence. Slightly mixed trends ruled near the fourth hour in relatively slow dealings.

A fall in recently buoyant cotton futures chilled speculative fever in commodities. Bonds were uneven.

Among stocks up occasionally were Southern Railway, Douglas Aircraft, Bethlehem Steel, Consolidated Oil, Pure Oil, Socony-Vacuum, Newport News Shipbuilding and Sears Roebuck.

Inclined to falter were U. S. Steel, General Motors, Chrysler, U.S. Rubber, Anaconda, Kennecott, Western Union, Santa Fe, Standard Oil of N.J. and U.S. Gypsum.

Canadian issues were mixed. Dome was unchanged and Canadian Pacific showed a 1-8 point gain while Distillers Seagram lost 1-4. In the bond market Canada 4s were 3-4 point higher.

Butter And Egg Prices Unchanged

Toronto, May 12—Steady prices prevailed for all lines on Saturday's short session of the Toronto open produce market, with butter remaining quiet.

Prices held previous levels on the butter market in the face of the seasonal increase in fresh receipts and the continued lack of buying interest. Odd small sales of the first-grade Ontario product were recorded at 29 1-4 cents a pound.

Eggs still moved well through consumer channels as the result of reasonable prices and this in turn helped to keep fresh receipts clearing steadily on the wholesale market. Quotations were unchanged for all grades in both sections of trading Saturday.

Montreal Produce

Montreal, May 12—Produce market prices here Saturday as reported by the Dominion Department of Agriculture, follow:

Butter, first-grade creamery prints, jobbing price, 31c; first-grade solids, jobbing price, 30 1-2c.

Eggs: Graded shipments in used free cases, selling at A-large, 21 1-2c to 22c; A-medium, 20 1-2c to 21c; B-grade, 20c; C grade, 18c. Receipts for week, 48,269 cases; last year 24,133 cases.

There's A New Lawrence Of Arabia! Major Glubb, 44, Native Of Cornwall

London, May 12 (C.P. Cable) — There's a new Lawrence of Arabia! British troops protecting the oil line in Iraq are being led, according to an enemy communique, by Capt. Abu Heneik, which means "father of the Little Chin."

This leader actually is Major John Bagot Glubb, 44, a Cornishman, who has carried on the Lawrence tradition in the desert, where a good many Arabs believe he is Lawrence sent back to them.

Glubb, who brought peace among the nomadic Bedouins in Transjordan and Iraq after living 22 years among them, is commander of a desert patrol of hand-picked Arabs, each of whom has sworn his life to Abu Heneik.

Glubb knows Iraq better almost than any living Englishman and the Bedouins have called him "Lord of the Desert."

Firemen Honored By Their Comrades

Two members of the Belleville Fire Department, Mr. John Thompson and Mr. Gerald "Warpy" O'Brien, were signally honored by the members of the Belleville Fire Fighters' Association, Local No. 497, early on Monday morning, when during the change of shifts they were presented with handsome Waterman pen and pencil sets in recognition of their service with the local department. Mr. Thompson and Mr. O'Brien have enlisted with the fire fighting service of the R.C.A.F. and will leave shortly to assume their new duties. Both men have been granted leave of absence from their present positions on the fire department for the duration of the war by the city council.

With the departure of Mr. Thompson and Mr. O'Brien, the Belleville Fire Department will lose the services of two valuable members of the force and whose positions Fire Chief Lynch will find it hard to refill. Mr. Thompson has been with the local department for 13 years and Mr. O'Brien for fourteen years.

HAMBURG, BREMEN

Across the river from the Blohm and Voss yards, the Air Ministry News Service said, "Flames leaped high and, away from the dock, industrial quarters of the town were vigorously assailed."

The attack on Bremen was as heavy and successful as that at Hamburg, with clear weather at both places, the service said.

It was the third hammering in four nights for the Nazi ports of Hamburg and Bremen. On Saturday night an armada of 100 planes smashed at Hamburg with the new super bombs, causing destruction in shipyards and industrial plants.

Bomber crews returning from the assaults said they shot down at least four fighter planes and perhaps two more.

An authoritative source in London said large fires were seen at Hamburg and Bremen after last night's raids, made in good weather.

In the Saturday raid new devastation struck Hamburg's much-bombed shipyards and industrial plants. Smaller units of R.A.F. bombers struck at Berlin and Nazi-held cities on the continent.

Nazis Acknowledge Destruction

The Nazis acknowledged widespread destruction and raging fires in Hamburg and indicated that the Saturday raid was just as damaging, if not more so, than Thursday when 300 to 400 planes raided Hamburg and Bremen.

One pilot said that Saturday night was clear and that industrial plants and factories in Hamburg were easy targets. He said that the flash of one of his bomb bursts was similar to a great flaming red ball half a mile across.

The Air Ministry said Saturday also was a night of "marked success against many fighters which the enemy put up to help their ground defences."

"Four enemy aircraft are known to have been destroyed and at least two others severely damaged by our bombers," a communique said.

President Roosevelt Is Able to Receive Premier Menzies

Washington, May 12 (AP)—President Roosevelt was feeling "fine" today, the White House reported, although he is still weak from the effect of an upset stomach.

Mr. Roosevelt became ill last Tuesday from a gastro-intestinal disturbance. He felt well enough today, however, to receive Prime Minister Menzies of Australia, and to have State Secretary Hull in for lunch.

EIGHT VIOLENT DEATHS REPORTED DURING WEEKEND

Three Suicides Reported in Various Parts of the Province

BODY WASHED ASHORE

(By the Canadian Press)

Eight persons met violent deaths in Ontario during the week-end. Three deaths were caused by car accidents, three police attributed to suicide, a youngster died of burns received several weeks ago and a man died after being trampled by a horse.

Ena LaPorte of Montreal, died from injuries received when the car in which she was a passenger turned over near Hawkesbury. The driver of the car told police he was attempting to avoid a head-on collision when the accident occurred. Four-year-old John Patterson of Toronto, died in hospital from injuries police said he received when hit by a car while playing near his home. John Beaudet of Collingwood, died soon after the car in which he was driving swerved and overturned ten miles from Toronto.

Suffering a fractured skull and other injuries when trampled by a horse in his barn, George Mitchell, Leamington farmer, died Sunday.

Three Suicides

At North Bay, the body of a man identified as Toivo Kikkila, 49, was found hanging from a tree in nearby woods. At Renfrew, Harvey McMillan, 41, was killed in the explosion of a dynamite cap. Police said the cap was missing from the man's shed and that he had been in ill health. In Toronto the body of Jack Maleuch, 49, was found hanging from a fence in a yard.

Fourteen months old David Ladell died in hospital at London from burns received when he toppled into a bonfire on his father's farm April 12.

Police identified a body washed ashore at Pelee Island as that of Walter Hobaski, 23, of Dearborn, Mich. He was one of four hunters drowned in November, 1940. Bodies of the other three previously had been found.

RCAF Airmen Rescue Six From Blazing Ruins

By ROSS MUNRO
Canadian Press War Correspondent

Somewhere in England, May 12 (CP)—Two men of the Royal Canadian Air Force Army Co-operation Squadron—Sgt. Gordon Armstrong, an air gunner from Toronto, and Cpl. Glen Campbell, a fitter from Calgary—rescued at least six persons from the blazing ruins of a London building during a terrific raid.

Winding up a four-day leave in London, they were in their hotel when a bomb exploded nearby, blew out their windows and littered the floor with debris. The airmen prepared to move into the street shelter when a basket of incendiaries lit up the end of the street and they pitched in as fire-fighters.

With buildings tumbling, fires blazing and the possibility a 'heavy' would land in the circle of flames, the Canadians struggled with sand bags and stirrup pumps along with civilian workers.

Most of the fires were under control when a warden dashed up and asked for help.

"The last one wiped out most of my rescue squad," he shouted.

Airmen Help Fire Warden

The airmen went with him to a wrecked building. Scrambling over debris and between twisted girders and broken beams, they made their way towards trapped people, tunnelling through precarious passages and crawling on hands and knees through the shambles.

Finally Armstrong and Campbell reached a group of badly-wounded victims, placed them on stretchers and passed them to the open where doctors were waiting.

Dawn broke before the Canucks left their work and new rescue squads took over, praising the sweating, grimy airmen for their night's job.

The first available train took them back to their squadron and they appeared on the airdrome after roll call, a little late.

"It was quite a night, quite a night," said Cpl. Campbell. "We got out at least half a dozen of those smashed-up people."

To the civilian workers' praise was added that of the squadron's officers and airmen. And the squadron newspaper, "Wings Abroad," devoted its weekly column, "Orchids to——" to the deeds of the two young men.

Ambassador Winant Back at Desk Today After Long Vigil

London, May 12 CP)—United States ambassador John Winant was back at his desk today, like thousands of Londoners lucky enough to have a desk to return to, after spending a long vigil Saturday night dousing incendiaries, fire watching and taking daring automobile tours of burning areas.

The ambassador started his Saturday night activities during the big Nazi raid by escorting home a lady caller who insisted upon returning to her post as a voluntary fire warden.

IRISHMAN LEADS 1,500 ETHIOPIANS IN SWIFT RAIDS

'Somali Joe' Leads Strange Unit Which Harasses Italians

VETERAN OF WARS

On the Ethiopian Southern Front May 9 (Delayed)—Capt. Thomas Henfrey, a tall, dark-moustached Irishman from Munster whose troops call him "Somali Joe", leads one of the strangest units harrying Italian troops still fighting in Southern Ethiopia.

"Somali Joe", whose uniform includes the sky blue cloak of an Ethiopian officer with the Lion of Judah head on gold clasps, lived for 20 years in Tanganyika after having fought in the Khyber Pass and in Saudi Arabia in the last war.

Today he heads about 1,500 Ethiopian irregulars, most of them mounted on mules. His scouts nip in and out of the Italian lines and they operate so swiftly that Fascists seldom know of their presence until it is too late.

WOMAN KILLED

swerved towards the ditch as Mrs. Doublestein fell out of the open door, it it believed the car turned over sideways and pinned her to the ground, where she received fatal injuries. McDonald remained at the wheel and escaped injury.

Herbert Woodcock and Raymond Riffick, nearby residents, arrived at the scene to assist Mr. McDonald in pushing the car from off the woman, who was pinned beneath. She was dead when released. An inquest was held here before Coroner Dr. O. W. Anderson and it was unofficially announced that death had been the result of a fractured skull. After identification the body was released for burial and the proceedings adjourned until May 20th., Provincial Constable S. W. Palmateer of Bancroft, announced. Police are investigating the mechanical effectiveness of the brakes of the car.

Surviving the late Mrs. Charles Doublestein are her husband, also Mrs. Phillip McMillen and Miss Frances of Sudbury, Ontario, Pte. Emmerson Doublestein of the R.C.A. stationed at Peterborough and Delford, eight, and Carson ten and Rita 16, all of whom reside at home in Bell's Rapids.

Motorists Embarrassed By Small Boys' Prank

It is an old trick, but apparently has not lost any of its potency.

Motorists driving along the Belleville-Foxboro highway on Sunday afternoon, were made the innocent victims of a schoolboy prank, one that has the proverbial grey whiskers attached but which was productive of plenty of fun on the part of the perpetrators, and embarrassment on that of the victims.

A lady's purse, shining in its brand newness, lay invitingly on the highway adjacent to one of the wheel-tracks. It had the appearance of being dropped from a passing automobile. Several motorists halted a few yards past where the purse lay, walked back to pick it up, then stared in amazement as the article slowly moved of its own accord toward the side of the road. Then, red of face, they slowly turned and walked back to their car, as scarcely audible snickers of laughter came from the ditch where a half-dozen teen-aged youths lay concealed.

Wiring And Cowling Of Car Damaged

Considerable damage to the wiring and to the cowling of a motor car owned by Mr. Roy Toppings of 283 Ann Street resulted on Saturday evening, when as the car was being started the motor backfired through the carburetor setting fire to oil soaked wires. Mr. Toppings was peparing to drive his automobile downtown, when the backfire occurred and firemen had to be called to extinguish the flames which quickly destroyed the wiring and ate up underneath the hood cowling where the gasoline tank was positioned. Although an explosion was imminently possible as the flames heated the gasoline tank, the blaze was brought under control by the use of chemicals.

Two Chimney Fires

Two chimney fires, one on Albert Street on Saturday and the other at the residence of Mr. Gerald Clapp, 244 Ann Street on Sunday, were the only other alarms answered by the department over the week-end. No damage resulted in either of the blazes, it was reported.

63 Faculty Members Urge Roosevelt To Deliver 'Tools'

Los Angeles, May 12 (AP)—Sixty-three Faculty members at the University of California at Los Angeles has signed a telegram to President Roosevelt urging "every possible step to assure the delivery of war materials to Britain and her allies." The group, headed by Dr. Louis Knott Koontz, called itself "the Temporary Committee of Faculty Members for Defence of Democracy."

Open to Pedestrian Traffic Only

Some streets were open to pedestrian traffic only. These resembled midways at the circus, with throngs swarming over sidewalks and roadways. Workers had to climb over heaps of rubble to make their way along paths cleared between piles of wreckage or over masses of hose-lines still buried in dust and debris.

Londoners are sure they will have to bear more heavy attacks but the blows will be eased by the knowledge that the Royal Air Force is growing stronger, hammering the Germans more heavily, and clearing the skies of a greater number of enemy raiders. They were cheered by the record enemy losses during the week-end.

Three Alerts Last Night

After Saturday night's hard pounding, German raiders caused three alerts last night and this morning in the Capital, but the Ministry of Home Security announced damage was not heavy, nor the number of casualties large.

Night fighters and anti-aircraft gunfire accounted for seven of the raiders, adding to the 33 destroyed Saturday night during the "reprisal" raid on the Capital and bringing the total of night bombers shot down thus far in May to 131. The highest record for a full previous month was 90 in April.

Night fighters, which got four of those reported shot down last night, were credited with getting 107 of the total.

In addition, the Air Ministry said, five German raiders were destroyed during the daylight hours Sunday four by fighter planes and one by anti-aircraft fire.

Shelters Crowded

Although last night's London raid was the lightest in three weeks, thousands of Londoners went to shelters lest the lashing fury of the Saturday night attack—during which German bombs struck the British museum, Westminster Abbey and the Houses of Parliament, including the tower of Big Ben and the House of Commons meeting chamber—might be repeated.

Roaring fires engulfed whole blocks of the city after that violent raid and none could estimate the toll of dead and injured. One bomb plummeted through the roof of a hotel and exploded in a basement where 140 persons had taken refuge.

Moonlight Helps R. A. F.

The Ministry of Home Security said the number of casualties would be high. The bright moonlight gave the attackers some help but proved an invaluable ally for the night fighters and ground guns, whose bag of 33 was believed to have accounted for 10 per cent of the attacking force.

The anger of Britons was expressed by Rev. Jocelyn Perkins, Sacrist and Minor Canon of Westminster Abbey.

"I can imagine the storm of anger that will sweep over our Dominions and America when the news of this latest exhibition of Aryan culture reaches them," he said. "The story . . . is one which will stamp Hitler for all time."

Abbey Damaged Gravely

He said the Abbey, in which every sovereign from William the Conqueror to George VI, with the exception of Edward V and Edward VIII, were crowned, undoubtedly was damaged gravely but added it was "structurally intact except for a relatively small part of it under and in the immediate vicinity of the lantern tower."

The lantern tower is the central part of the Abbey.

He credited fire fighters with saving the Abbey from destruction, but bombs crashed through the roof, scattered debris through the confessor's chapel where sat the coronation chairs upon which King George and Queen Elizabeth were crowned four years ago today and left that part of the structure open to the sky.

Will Have to Rebuild House

Across the street from the Abbey, construction of which was begun in 1050, bombs also smashed into the Houses of Parliament. The Chamber where the House of Commons regularly holds its sessions was wrecked so badly it was believed it would have to be rebuilt before it could be used again.

Big Ben, whose chimes are broadcast throughout the Empire as a symbol of home, had its face blackened by a bomb hit on the clock tower. The apparatus which broadcasts the chimes was put out of action but the clock still rang the hours and its hands kept right on telling the time.

The roof of the members' lobby was smashed and the roof of Westminster Hall, often described as the most magnificent roof in the world, was pierced by bombs and the hall damaged. The hall, started in 1097, was the scene of some of the most famous trials in English history.

Museum Set Afire

In another part of the city, a shower of incendiary bombs set the British Museum afire and the roof was burned through, but most of the building's treasures had been removed months ago and the damage was comparatively light.

Capt. E. L. H. Elliot, resident superintendent of the House of Lords, was killed at his post while fighting fires.

In the ancient Abbey itself—it was consecrated in 1065, partly rebuilt in 1245 and the interior completed in 1740 from designs of Sir Christopher Wren—the pulpit and many pews were destroyed. The eastern part of the Abbey, where the Royal Tombs are situated, was intact.

In other districts, five hospitals, a hotel, a movie theatre, a Salvation Army centre and several churches were hit. Blocks of flats were squashed by bombs and a corner of shops was bombed just before dawn brought the all-clear.

AFRICAN BASES.

(The Italians, too, claimed a further toll from Britain's Mediterranean fleet. They claimed yesterday that in continuation of an air and naval battle which started last week two British cruisers suffered hits as they headed westward toward Gibraltar.)

The R.A.F. brought week-end raids on Axis bases at Derna, Jedabaya and El Gazala, Libya, to a climax last night with a heavy attack on Tripoli, Italy's big North African port from which the Axis counter-drive into Egypt was sprung.

Axis Raid Suez Canal Area

Axis aircraft raided the Suez Canal area Saturday night for the third successive night but the Egyptian Government said property damage was slight.

British patrols inflicted casualties and took prisoners at Salum, high water mark of the new Axis push into Egypt, and at Libyan Tobruk where a British garrison is beating off repeated attacks.

In Ethiopia, Indian troops advancing toward the Italian stronghold at Amba Alaji and a column pushing up from the south caught approximately 38,000 Fascists in a trap from which British authorities said there could be no escape.

On the Iraq front, announcement of the fall of the fort at Rutba after a bombing raid and attack by British armored cars Sunday came after a week-end of conflicting claims over operations in that region guarding the Mosul-Hafa Oil line.

Under Complete Control

Iraq communiques had been quoted as claiming the British attacking forces were driven back to the West, toward Transjordan.

British sources, which announced the capture last week of the airfield at Rutba, said that with British occupation of the fort "the whole of this important area is now under our complete control."

The R.A.F. also carried the war to the oil-rich Mosul region in Northern Iraq.

A comunique yesterday said communications centres and a transport park at Mosul, across the Tigris River from ancient Nineveh, were bombed heavily.

British Deny Report

Beirut, Lebanon, May 12 (AP)—An Iraq comunique claimed today the fort at Rutba still was holding out and that there was increased activity near Basra, to the south, where Iraq units were reported battling British troops.

(A British Middle East communique today from Cairo said that after bombing of the fort at Rutba by a single Royal Air Force plane, motorized troops took over the stronghold Sunday morning and are in control of the entire Rutba area.

Convert Corncobs Into Defence Products

Glendale, Calif., May 12 (AP) — Mountains of corncobs soon may be converted into nitro-cellulose, gunpowder, synthetic rubber and other products, Francis E. Wilkinson, inventor, said today.

Wilkinson, returning this week from a conference with Department of Agriculture officials at Washington, said a plant was under construction at Missouri Valley, Iowa, to start converting tons of corncobs a day this fall—36,000,000 bushels a year—into defence products.

Wilkinson conducted preliminary research in cob-processing at his laboratory here.

"The pitch in corncobs," he claimed in an interview, "provides the finest cellulose known.

"The gums from cobs are ideal for mixing with natural rubber in the manufacture of tires.

"Department of Agriculture laboratories have credited more than 50 products—among them alcohol, guncotton, motor fuel and gunpowder—as recoverable from cobs as soon as an economical process could be developed. Now we have that process."

HOLY NAME SOCIETY HOLDS MEETING

The regular monthly meeting of the Holy Name Society, and the largest meeting of 1941, was held on Sunday morning after the eight-thirty Mass in St. Michael's Auditorium.

At the conclusion of the church services twenty-four new members were admitted into the society by its Spiritual Director, Rt. Rev. Monsignor Nicholson.

The monthly breakfast prepared by Mr. Ted Royle and Mr. George Lee, was most capably served by the Children of Mary and the Girls of the Home Economics Class of the Academy.

The President, Mr. Austin [illegible]ton, welcomed the new members and the guests [illegible] Mgr. Nicholson introduced the guest speaker of the day, Dr. W. R. Thompson F.R.S., of the Dominion Entomological Laboratories. Dr. Thompson is one of the Empires most learned Entomolcgists. He lived for many years in France and therefore delivered a most interesting address on Southern France. Mr. George Lee moved a vote of thanks, which was seconded by Allen Meagher, to Dr. Thompson for his outstanding address. Mr. LaFontaine, the director of the K. of C. Army Hut at the Mountain View Airport also spoke briefly.

The meeting was closed by the singing of the National Anthem.

ROOF OF ABBEY

Construction of the massive, beautiful edifice was started by Edward the Confessor in 1050 and the building was consecrated in 1065 before he died.

Rebuilt in 1245

Partly rebuilt in 1245, the hallowed cruciform structure had its interior designed by Sir Christopher Wren and was completed in 1740, after Wren's death.

Every British sovereign from William the Conqueror to the present King, with the exception of King Edward V, received the crown beneath the roof of the Abbey's lantern.

There, too, through the centuries, British sovereigns and other outstanding figures of the Empire have been buried.

The main church, built in the form of a cross with an aisled nave and transepts, has six chapels, one of which, the Chapel of Henry VII, standing directly behind the Confessors Chapel, suffered damage in the week-end raid.

Within the solemn splendor of this magnificent building, King George and Queen Elizabeth received their crowns four years ago today when the Abbey, with statuary, banners and Coronation trappings, presented a sight far different from that seen today by the heavy-hearted workmen cleaning away the rubble left by explosives, fire and water.

FIRST RECRUITING

Col. Ralston disclosed that "there are positions in the fighting services which women can fill" and that plans are in hand for filling them.

"We have decided to ask now at one call for the men to complete the formations we have pledged for overseas this year and for the 4th Division and also for the reinforcements required for the next two months," Col. Ralston said in an address broadcast over facilities of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Ten Per Cent Needed for Infantry

"After that we shall be wanting men from month to month to meet the normal wastage of our active units and their reserves, and we shall want to be ready to meet additional requirements should the need arise."

He said the men wanted were in the main for artillery units, the armored units, engineers, ordnance and other technical services. Only about 10 per cent would be needed in the infantry.

Col. Ralston was heard in the Maritime Provinces in the early evening and later in the rest of Canada. Air Minister Power, Associate Defence Minister, read a French translation of the speech over the French network.

Col. Ralston said there "isn't any sign" of a shortage of manpower in Canada. He had been assured that the needs of the navy, army and air force could be met without preventing a "full program of necessary industrial production."

"Already many women are taking men's places in the factories," he said. "Again, there are positions in the fighting services which women can fill, and which will be filled under arrangements which the Department of National War Services, in collaboration with the defence services, have in hand."

He said the army needed trained men to operate the machines of war but it was not necessary for a man to be trained before he was qualified to enlist. It would be useful but "we now can take green men and train them in our army trade schools."

Col. Ralston said arrangements had been made whereby the employer of a key industrial worker who enlisted could apply to a board, which would have power to advise that the man be given leave from the army for an "appropriate period" to continue his work, if the man himself were willing.

Germany Claims Occupation of Melos.

Berlin, May 12 (AP)—Germany claimed today occupation of Melos Island, in the Cyclades group 75 miles north of Crete.

Melos would be the 12th of Greece's Cyclades Islands which Germany and Italy have announced occupied thus far. The seizure o fMelos, the Germans claimed, "completely surprised" 118 Britons and 200 Cretans who were found there and taken prisoner.

(Comment on this enemy claim was not immediately available in London.)

Toronto, May 12 (CP)—Dr. Chaim Weizmann, Jewish leader and president of the Jewish Agency for Palestine, said in an address before 9,000 persons here last night that Central European Jewry would be forced to wander from place to place until the majority populations were "detoxicated" of their anti-Semitic views.

$7,000 Tablecloth Work of Five Years Stolen From Car

Chicago, May 12 (AP)—Mrs. Lora Stern's crocheting suffered a five-year setback, she told police, when thieves stole a silk lace tablecloth from her husband's parked car. Rome Communique

Rome, May 12—(AP)—The Italian High Command claimed today Fascist coastal batteries and German planes thwarted an attempted attack by three British warships Saturday night of the Libyan Port of Bengasi and that the ships were hit by Nazi air bombs.

(The Germans claimed last night that hits were scored on five British warships—two cruisers and three destroyers—Saturday night at Bengasi. A British statement on the encounter has not yet been issued.)

In Ethiopia, a British attack on Italians in the Amba Alija sector, 280 miles northeast of Addis Ababa, was declared repulsed.

(British accounts said 38,000 Italian troops are trapped in this sector.)

The naval sortie against Bengasi was the second in three days. Units of the British fleet supported by aircraft shelled the base, a main port of entry for Axis supplies to North Africa, Thursday night.

(The British Admiralty announced that two Axis supply ships including one laden with ammunition were destroyed and other shipping in the harbor damaged in the Thursday raid.)

AT THE McCARTHY

"Penny Serenade"

Jack Karr, Toronto Daily Star, reviews "Penny Serenade" which is now at the McCarthy theatre for a solid week's showing. It's terrific entertainment.

"If you are looking for the gay and screwy Irene Dunne and Cary Grant you knew in "The Awful Truth" and "My Favorite Wife" you'll have to seek much further than "Penny Serenade' for you won't find them there. Instead, you'll discover an intensely earnest young couple whose mad-cap moments threaten to come to the surface every so often only to be completely snowed under by stark and cheerless drama.

'Penny Serenade" is the sort of thing over which the ladies will rave....an emotional masterpiece that'll have them weeping and sniffling into their handkerchiefs. As for the boys—they'll probably blow their noses vigorously and be very gruff about it...but secretly they'll lap it up and be annoyed at themselves—for liking it.

From this you may gather that the film is a tear bringer, but it is so superbly directed and impeccably acted, not only by the two principals but by the small supporting cast, that "Penny Serenade" is what you might call simply a beautiful picture. For those who must know in advance what it's all about...Cary Grant is a newspaperman who falls in love with music salesgirl Irene Dunne marries her after a whirlwind courtship and then is sent to Japan as Tokyo correspondent. Following him some months later, Irene and an earthquake arrive in the Orient at approximatey the same time, and she suffers a premature birth, the baby dying. The rest of the picture is taken up in having the young couple trying to find interest in life again through the adoption of a baby. Then, when this child dies, their marriage is only saved by again adopting another infant.

This is told by the flashback method. That is, the picture starts at the end and works its way to the beginning with Miss Dunne playing phonograph records, each one recalling a definite phase in her life. Now without Grant and Dunne, this would have been pretty hard to take....but, thankfully, their performances and the outstanding direction of George Stevens give it a sock that will make it one of the most intriguing pictures in years. Couple that with the fact that the grim reality of the story is given a dash of humor in the most unexpected places and you'll understand what is meant.

The Dunne followers know that they can always rely on the versatile Irene for a splendid performance no matter whether she's carrying comedy or heavy drama....and they won't be one whit disappointed with what she has to do here. Nor will those avid Grant fans be disappointed with Cary, for he reaches emotional heights in this one that are totally unexpected. Beulah Bondi, always a favorite, is superb as the orphanage head, while Buchanan comes close to stealing the show whenever he's on the screen.

Bob Hope

The man of the hour, Bob Hope is an excellent "Screen Snapshots" presentation, latest McCarthy-Fox News events and a new technicolor cartoon novelty "The Carpenters" round out this five star program. The Glasbake ovenware piece given is the custard cup plus a coupon for casserole bottom which will be given next week.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Vivacious Lady"

Co-starring Ginger Rogers and James Stewart, 1940 Academy Award winners, "Vivacious Lady," a sparkling, fast-moving comedy, opened Sunday midnight at the Capitol Theatre, and proved to be one of the screen's gayest offerings. The film is a vehicle for titian-haired Ginger Rogers who has just won outstanding honors in "Kitty Foyle," triumphed in "Stage Door," and for James Stewart who scored decisively in "The Philadelphia Story."

The breezy story of "Vivacious Lady" concerns itself with the early marital troubles of two newlyweds, one of whom is a reticent professor of botany at a small college, and the other a vivacious nightclub beauty born and reared in the dizzy whirl of Broadway. Their contrasting personalities, backgrounds and ambitions attract them to each other and after a hasty marriage, they return to the young man's home town to settle down.

But the shy instructor loses his nerve when it becomes time to introduce his intolerant father to his bride so she agrees to pose temporarily as a friend of her husband's playboy cousin.

The efforts of the young couple to keep the deception is the theme of this hilarious story, which is counterpointed by the plans of the groom's former fiancee to have an early wedding and the irresponsible cousin's frank campaign to steal the affections of the lonesome bride. The complications which result build to a convulsive climax, with the frantic professor and his heretofore submissive mother openly rebelling against the tyranny of the old man—to provide one of the funniest sequences in the picture.

In addition to the stars, the RKO Radio cast includes James Ellison, as the playboy cousin; Charles Coburn as the domineering father; Beulah Bondi as the weak-willed mother; Frances Mercer, as Stewart's jealous fiancee and Phyllis Kennedy, as an independent servant.

"Vivacious Lady" was deftly directed by George Stevens.

"A Fugitive From Justice"

Headlines and radio broadcasts are interspersed with scenes of exciting action so that there is never a flagging moment in Warner Bros.' "A Fugitive From Justice," which also opened Sunday midnight. The film races along to the tune of staccato radio bulletins and "extra" editions, giving the audience the same sensation as though it were sitting in the front seat of a police car with the siren on.

Featured in the fast-paced film are Roger Pryor and Lucile Fairbanks, in her promising screen debut. Other parts in the film are capably handled by Sheila Bromley, Eddie Foy, Jr., Morgan Conway and Donald Douglas.

The latest "Information Please" closes the bill.

AT THE BELLE

"The Sea Wolf"

The feature attraction at the Belle Theatre tonight will be "The Sea Wolf," starring Edward G. Robinson, Ida Lupino and John Garfield. The film version of the world famous novel by Jack London was produced by Warner Bros. who have given us such recent hits as "Sante Fe Trail" and "They Drive By Night.'

The Belle latest World News Events and "Tortoise Chases the Hare,' a funny color fun cartoon completes the program.

"You're The One," Funny

Tuneful, hilarious and lively, Paramounts newest comedy hit, "You're the One," featuring Bonnie Baker, Orrin Tucker and his orchestra and Jerry Colonna at the head of a sparkling cast opens next at the Belle Theatre.

Written and produced by Gene Markey and directed by Ralph Murphy, the film has a cast abounding in screen favorites like Lillian Cornell, Albert Dekker, Edward Everett Horton and Teddy Hart. With a combination such as this, it is inevitable that "You're the One" should be the swell entertainment bet that it is.

Bonnie, the "Oh, Johnnie" girl of radio's Hit Parade, featuring Tucker and his orchestra, is headed straight for a permanent place on the screen in her splendid work if this film is any criterion. She and Tucker make an extremely engaging pair.

Singing the song that she took from an obscurity that lasted more than twenty years, Bonnie Baker sings "Oh, Johnny" in a manner that seems a great deal more effective than on the radio. Her tantalizing little voice is heard with greater effect when Bonnie and her pretty face and cute mannerisms are seen. In addition, she shows amply that she is as much at home on the screen as on the radio.

Some of the hit tunes which the picture presents are Strawberry Lane, I Could Kiss You For That, Gee, I Wish I'd Listened to My Mother and You're the One.

Exciting "Chan" Mystery

High in the skies over America's greatest city, Charlie Chan matches wits with death-dealing, sabotage-minded spies. It happens in "Murder Over New York," the 20th Century-Fox picture with Sidney Toler again the title role which is announced as the second feature hit.

Supporting Toler in "Murder Over New York," are Marjorie Weaver, Robert Lowery, Ricardo Cortez and many others.

This time Chan faces the problem of finding the murderer of one of his best friends and in addition, saving a stratosphere bombing plane. With his customary astuteness and ability to think quickly in pinches, Chan outwits the criminals in a thrilling and suspensive climax, staged high over the city of New York.

The Belle News of the Day will also be exhibited.

HESS' FLIGHT ACT OF SANE MAN SAYS LONDON

VICTORY LOAN CALLS FOR $600,000,000

Former No. 2 Heir Apparent To Hitler Prisoner Of War

Sources Declare Hess Brought No Peace Terms Or On Any Special Mission—Fractures Ankle

SANE AND HEALTHY

London, May 13 (CP)—Rudolf Hess, parachuting from a crash-bound Messerschmitt fighter onto a Scottish moor last Saturday night—a potential bearer of Nazi secrets—fled the Hitler hierarchy in a development that may alter the course of the war, British authorities declared today.

Casting aside, for the moment at least, the crop of rumors linked with this strange chapter in the gigantic struggle, they insisted only that Hess came to Britain defiantly sane.

A hint—and only a hint—that Hess was pursued in his escape appeared in photographs of tail of his wrecked plane: ten closely bunched bullet holes.

British sources would not say positively that these were put there by aerial pursuers of Hess. They said that his 800-mile flight was the voluntary act of a rational man, showing that "the core of Germany was rotten".

They declared he had no special mission—that he brought no peace terms; but that Britain is the beneficiary of a great propaganda windfall, if not actual military help.

The German version was that Hess was a victim of hallucinations and one of these was an undying hope for restoration of friendship between Germany and Britain and that he might have reasoned that, through personal sacrifice, he could bring this about.

Prisoner of War

How Hess, now a prisoner of war at some secret place, might advance this concept of what the Nazis claimed was a disordered mind was a problem for the attention of British Intelligence, propaganda and statesmanship.

Nazi Spokesmen Say Act Was Of "Man Mentally Deranged Because Of Physical Illness"

PURGE NOT FEARED

Berlin, May 13 (AP)—A Nazi party communique today declared Rudolf Hess "appears to have lived under the hallucination that he was still able to bring about an understanding between Germany and England through personal action with old English acquaintances."

"In fact, as already confirmed through a report from London," the communique said, "he baled out of a plane in Scotland near a place which he wanted to visit and apparently was found there injured.

"Rudolf Hess, as for years was known in the party, suffered seriously physically and recently resorted increasingly to various aids, mesmerizers, astrologers and so forth.

"In how far these persons also carry the blame for the mental derangement which induced him to take this step is also a point of investigation.

Advocates 'Peaceful Occupation' Of Ireland By U. S. Planes

French Lick, Ind., May 13 (AP)—Alvin M. Owsley of Indianapolis, former United States Minister to Denmark, Rumania and Eire, said last night the United States Air Force should be sent at once to a "peaceful occupation of Ireland."

"The Irish will trust us where they will not trust the British," he said in an address to the Indiana Gas Association.

Owsley, Past National Commander of the American Legion, said if Britain fell, four Central or South American countries would have Nazi governments within 48 hours. He did not identify the countries.

A GREAT BLOW TO NAZI MORALE SAYS WASHINGTON

Reports Contain Elements Hardly Reassuring to Average Man in Reich, Sources State

HESS FLED GERMANY

Washington, May 13 (AP)—Diplomatic circles agreed today that the melodramatic flight of Rudolf Hess to Britain would be a great blow to the morale of the German people, no matter what explanation they accept.

Both the British and Nazi accounts of the war's strangest episode, it was said, contain elements that can hardly be reassuring to the average man in the Third Reich.

These sources reasoned as follows:

The Nazi account speaks of Hess' "failing health for years" and raises doubts as to his sanity, at least at the time he decamped. Inasmuch as Hess continued active in important government and Nazi

Merciless Bombing To Break Nazi Morale Suggested By Hitler's Foe

Montreal, May 13 (CP)—Otto Strasser, long a foe of Hitler, outlined in a copyright interview with the Montreal Herald today a five-point plan for defeating Germany and suggested merciless bombing to break the German morale.

Strasser, leader of the Anti-Nazi Black Front Group, who is living in Canada, also expressed conviction that Hitler will attempt an invasion of Britain—"even if it means not only the destruction of the German army but his own suicidal death."

Here is the program Strasser, one of the founders of the National Socialist Party, suggested for German defeat:—

1. — Anti - Hitler propaganda among prisoners of war.

2.—An organization to propagandize German Nationals within the United States and South America.

3.—By means of short-wave radio stations, pamphlets and parachutists to foment internal unrest within Germany itself and German-occupied territories.

4.—The creation of an independent and democratic "Free German Legion."

5.—The creation of an authoritative German National Council including Breuning, Treviranus, Rauschmann, Thomas Mann, Sollmann, Holtemann and Otto Strasser.

(All these men are in exile, in Britain, Canada and the United States.)

In addition, Strasser suggested that the blockade of Germany should be intensified by every means available and that the country itself should be bombed mercilessly.

"The German people can't take it as the British do," Strasser added: "Bring the war to their homes, their hearts and their souls. Let them see to what Hitler has led them—and leave the rest to time."

He said the Allies should encourage internal revolution in Germany and Nazi-occupied countries by supporting all organization, including the Black Front, which has operated underground in Germany since 1931, aimed at undermining the confidence of the people.

MARINES CALLED TO RESTORE ORDER IN SHANGHAI

U. S. Police Sergeant Wounded In Gun Battle Near Barracks

10 OTHERS INJURED

Shanghai, May 13 —(AP)—United States Marines were called out to restore order today after a spectacular gun battle on Bubbling Well Road, near their barracks, resulted in the wounding of at least 10 persons, one of them an American police sergeant.

One of the wounded, a Chinese coolie, died later.

The wounded American is Sergeant A. Wickdall, 25, of the International Settlement police force. Wickdall was struck in the neck by a bullet, but seriousness of the injury could not be learned at once.

HITLER, DARLAN HOLD MEETING

No Location or What Was Discussed Given Out After Conference

Berlin, May 13.—(AP)—A conference of Hitler and the French Vice Premier, Admiral Jean Darlan, was disclosed today but the official announcement gave no hint where they met or what questions were discussed.

The meeting, the announcement said, was in the presence of the Nazi Foreign Minister, Ribbentrop.

Some observers regarded the meeting of Hitler and Darlan the forerunner of French concessions to the Nazis.

Last week, after an earlier Paris meeting of Darlan and Otto Abetz, Hitler's representative in the former French capital, it was announced that Vichy arranged tentatively to reduce by one fourth the fee she is required to pay for maintenance of German troops in occupied France. Also the Nazis agree to relax regulations limiting freight and passenger transportation and correspondence across the line between occupied and unoccupied France.

What favors these concessions won for Germany were not indicated.

It has been reported frequently however, that the Nazis wanted permission for the passage of troops across Southern France, use of French naval bases on the Mediterranean, and concessions giving the Axis greater leeway for moves in North Africa, possibly involving French territory or bases there.

British House Of Commons Bombed Beyond Repair 'For A Long Time To Come'

London, May 13—(CP) — Prime Minister Churchill told members of the House of Commons today he believed the historic debating chamber in which they and their predecessors have sat had been bombed beyond repair, "at least for a very long time to come."

"I think the House would like to be informed we have already begun active preparation of another, a third, building in case anything should happen to the one in which we are today," the Prime Minister added.

He declared: "Members may be assured the work of our institutions will not be affected in any way by enemy action."

In New Quarters

The House settled into its new home today without shedding a whit of its ancient dignity.

In the age-old ceremony, the speaker, preceded by the mace, rescued from Saturday night's devastation, led the procession to prayers, then mounted a reproduction of the chair destroyed by fire.

The new chamber has less sombre shadows than the old house but has the rows of benches and other appurtenances in keeping with the old house.

The dispatch boxes from which Gladstone and Disraeli drew their papers have gone forever and have been replaced by modern counterparts.

Churchill Promises Parliament Further Statement on Hess' Flight

London, May 13 (CP)—Prime Minister Churchill announced in the House of Commons today that a further statement would be made shortly about the flight of Rudolf Hess to Scotland.

Replying to H. B. Lees-Smith's request for a statement on Hess, Mr. Churchill replied:-

"I have nothing to add at present to the statement issued last night by His Majesty's government but obviously a further statement will be made in the near future regarding the flight to this country of this very high and important Nazi leader."

Sir Henry Morris-Jones, Liberal National, asked "will the news be handled with skill and imagination?"

"I was with the Minister of Information until a very late hour last night," Mr. Churchill replied. "I think this is one of those cases in which the imagination is somewhat baffled by the facts as they present themselves."

The House laughed heartily.

Flooded With Questions

John Lawson, Labor, asked that "in view of German propaganda statements on the wireless that Hess was suffering from mental instability, has Mr. Churchill any information upon that point, is that particular disease limited to the chief of German propagandists?"

Mr. Churchill replied: "Obviously I have no information at the moment but if further examination is made—."

The rest of the sentence was lost by members jumping up to put supplementary questions.

Vyvyan Jones, Conservative asked if Mr. Churchill would bear in mind "this gentleman's record of devotion to the vile genius of Europe." The Prime Minister did not reply.

Capt. Alec Cunningham-Reid, Conservative, asked:-

Does the Prime Minister consider it prudent to announce that Hess is in a Glasgow hospital. Is that not rather unfair to the people of Glasgow, who possibly may expect raid bombs?"

"Hess won't always be in Glasgow," Mr. Churchill responded.

The month's total previously was included in an announcement Saturday which placed losses in the year since the Nazi invasion of the low countries at 1,098 ships totalling 4,734,407 tons.

Lima May 13 (AP)—Peru accepted today with qualifications the offer by the United States, Argentina and Brazil of their good offices to help settle an 110-year-old dispute between Peru and Ecuador over a rich expanse of land near the headwaters of the Amazon River. Ecuador already had accepted the offer.

R. HESS CLOSELY ASSOCIATED WITH GERMAN LEADER

Took Part in Every Political Plan and Action of Hitler

MET IN GREAT WAR

(By The Canadian Press)

In Hitler's climb to power, probably no single individual was longer or more closely associated with his every political plan and action than Rudolf Hess.

They met on the battlefields of France in the First Great War. After the war Hess threw in his lot with Hitler and for two decades they worked in apparent harmony before his dramatic flight.

As recently as nine days ago, Hess and Hitler sat side by side at a meeting of the Reichstag.

When Hitler celebrated his 52nd birthday anniversary April 20, Hess was with him at his military headquarters on the Balkan front and greeted him: "Your spirit and your will brought a new people and a new soldier to protect them.... Trust in you is unlimited. God protect our Fuehrer."

Since 1933 Hess had acted as Hitler's personal representative in all matters concerning the National Socialist Party.

When war broke out in 1939, Hitler announced that in the event of his death he had arranged for his successors—first, Goering, and second, Hess.

Exerted Powerful Influence

Tall, shaggy-browed Hess was less in the public eye than Goering, but it was recognized he exerted a powerful influence over Hitler. One of his declarations was that Hitler was "a heroic personality, verily a real Fuehrer, because he is the executor of a higher will."

When Nazi Party underlings gave evidence of assuming self-import-

BRITISH TROOPS BEAT BACK AXIS. FORCE AT SALUM

Five Small Advancing Columns Out On Reconnaissance Turned Back

AIR FORCE ACTIVE

Cairo, Egypt, May 13 (AP) — British mechanized troops have beaten back five small advancing columns of Axis troops in the Salum area of the Egyptian frontier, British headquarters for the Middle East announced today.

The war bulletin said the Axis forces were carrying out reconnaissance "in force" and advancing eastward when they were met by the British mechanized advance elements to the west and south.

The Germans and Italians turned back, it said, adding that "our air forces have been afforded particularly good targets by the withdrawing enemy."

At Tobruk, 80 miles to the west, where the Axis forces have been trying for weeks to break through the British fortifications, the communique said there was no change in the situation.

Imperial forces fighting through steaming jungles drenched by summer rains were reported to be continuing their advance in all sectors, while at Amba Alaji, to the northwest, an additional 200 Fascist prisoners were declared captured.

R. C. A. F. Lists 11 Men Killed

Ottawa, May 13. — (CP) — The Royal Canadian Air Force, in its 43rd casualty list of the war, today reported 11 men dead and one missing, bringing total dead and missing listed by the R.C.A.F. since the war started to 251.

The list contained one man killed in an air raid overseas, another killed in an overseas flying accident and a third missing overseas as result of an operational flight.

Eight were listed as killed in flying accidents in Canada, and one died in Canada from natural causes.

In addition the list showed two men seriously ill overseas, and in Canada one dangerously injured in a fall, one seriously injured in motor accident and one seriously ill.

SEIZE OPIUM SHIPMENT

New York May [illegible] (CP)—Seizure by United States Treasury Department agents of more than $100,000 worth of opium on the American-South African passenger steamship City of New York was announced Monday. The raid was made May 3 when the vessel reached here from Capetown. A Chinese laundry worker on the vessel was arrested. Agents said the opium was placed aboard the vessel at Mombassa, British East Africa.

EARL OF SUFFOLK KILLED

London, May 13. — (CP)— The Earl of Suffolk, 35, and his secretary were killed recently by a bomb explosion, it was announced today.

'You Need Not Worry I Have No Bombs In My Plane' Said Hess On Landing

Glasgow, May 13 (CP)—Rudolf Hess said on landing in Scotland last Saturday night that "I have no bombs in my plane, so you needn't worry."

The Nazi leader talked for ten minutes to Home-Guardsmen Robert Gibson and Jack Patterson who were on duty at an airport near where Hess parachuted down.

"When we took him into our hut he was limping," Gibson said. "Obviously he had injured his ankle while landing by parachute."

After their talk, Hess was taken to a military hospital.

Gibson said that Hess volunteered this statement:—

"I have no bombs in my plane so you needn't worry. I've been in the air for four hours.

"I left Germany, in a Messerschmitt 110 destroyer (airplane). Although I am a skilled pilot, I am really a German army officer."

Hess, said Patterson, was "immaculately dressed."

"His uniform was made of the finest material and he wore very fine leather top boots.

"He appeared to be a little excited, but was perfectly sane and carried on a long conversation with us. He spoke English fluently.

"We offered him cigarettes, but he told us he didn't smoke. So when we asked him if he wanted a glass of milk he said 'Have you got milk?' as if surprised that we had any.

"He drank half a glass and then asked if he could stretch his legs. He said: 'I feel a bit cramped. My legs are stiff from being in the plane so long. My ankle is a bit painful'."

Bonds of $50, $100, $500, $1,000 Will Be Available

May Be Purchased Outright Or Upon Easy Terms Of Payment Says Finance Minister

ON SALE JUNE 2nd

Ottawa, May 13— (CP)—Finance Minister Ilsley today announced Canada's forthcoming Victory Loan will be for $600,000,000.

The new issue will be the third and the largest war loan in Canada since current hostilities opened. Subscription books will be opened June 2.

Bonds of this Victory Loan will be available in denominations of $50, $100, $500 and $1,000 and may be purchased outright or upon easy terms of payment, the Minister said.

The instalment plan will enable any purchaser to pay for bonds over a period of six months and, the Minister added, "these arrangements will enable every Canadian to give the greatest possible support to this loan".

No Interest Rate Announced

Mr. Ilsley's statement did not give the interest rate of the loan nor its term and a source closely concerned with the Minister's statement said it could be expected that this information would be made known before the bonds go on sale.

The Minister's statement had been eagerly awaited, and up until noon today when it was handed to the Press in the office of the Deputy Finance Minister, there had been no official word as to the amount of the loan.

Mr. Ilsley's statement:

"Canada will ask her citizens, nominally, for $600,000,000 in the forthcoming Victory Loan, with the full hope and expectation that subscriptions from coast to coast will be considerably in excess of that amount.

"To provide for such response and to insure that all Canadians may be given an opportunity to take part in this important phase of our war effort, the Minister of Finance will reserve the right to accept all or any part of the over-subscription. The degree of co-operation which has been offered by people everywhere in Canada gives every ground for confidence.

Available to Every Canadian

"The bonds of this Victory Loan will be available in denominations of $50, $100, $500 and $1,000 and may be purchased outright or upon easy terms of payment. The instalment plan which has been worked out will enable any purchaser to pay for bonds over a period of six months. These arrangements will enable every Canadian to give the greatest possible support to this loan.

"In November of this year there will mature an issue of $140,000,000 Dominion of Canada five per cent bonds; holders of these bonds will be given the privilege of turning them in, at an attractive price, in exchange for bonds of the Victory Loan, 1941.

Hess' Plane Bullet-Marked

London, May 13 (CP)—Photographs of the Messerschmitt fighter plane from which Rudolf Hess bailed out show the tail punctured by a number of machine-gun bullets.

British sources took this as an indication that pursuers—either German or British—tried to bring down the plane. The Messerschmitt is a wreck.

Parts of the plane were scattered over the Scottish moor, the engine half buried in the ground and the three-bladed propeller smashed. But the tail part was intact and showed at least 10 closely-spaced bullet holes.

(The possibility remained, however, that those holes might have been put in the plane before Hess' flight, when it might have been in the hands of a fighting airman.)

HEPBURN CALLS CABINET TOGETHER

To Resume Discussions on Ottawa Request That Provinces Vacate Corporation and Income Tax Fields

Toronto, May 13 (CP)—Premier Hepburn has called the Ontario cabinet into session tomorrow to resume discussions on the Dominion government's request that the provinces vacate the corporation and income tax fields for duration of the war, it was announced today.

Mr. Hepburn said at a previous session that he, as provincial treasurer, is directed by the Legislature to collect both taxes for the province. Without further instructions from the Legislature he could take no other action.

The point as to whether the Legislature may have to be called into special session to consider this matter is being studied and a ruling is expected at tomorrow's cabinet conference.

After determination of this procedure, it is probable that the Premier will announce whether he intends to accept the Dominion government's invitation to go to Ottawa and discuss the proposal of Dominion authorities to take over the two taxation fields.

CITY AND DISTRICT NEWS

PICKEREL FISHING TO OPEN THURSDAY

District anglers are anxiously awaiting the opening of the pickerel season in this section of the province on May 15. Game Inspector Herb McCabe announced today that the pickerel season would be ushered in on Thursday of this week.

"This season the Department of Game and Fisheries has placed certain restrictions on the number and size of pickerel to be taken from Ontario waters. The minimum length of such fish shall not be less than 13 inches and one day's limit is eight fish," revealed Inspector McCabe today.

U.S. BORN SERVING IN CANADIAN ARMY GIVEN PRIVILEGES

Inspector Herb McCabe, of the Ontario Game and Fisheries Department, announced today that American-born men now serving in the Canadian Navy, Army, Air Force or any other part of the Canadian Active Service Force are to be offered the same angling privileges as any native of Canada under the Fish and Game Department Act. Such Americans need no special licence as is the case with the conventional American tourist visiting Canada, the fact they are in the King's uniform being sufficient to warrant them gratis angling privileges in Ontario.

YOUTH CONFESSES TO THEFT OF MONEY

George Baptiste, 16, of Shannonville, was committed to the Bowmanville Boys' Training School by Magistrate E. J. Butler K.C., on Monday afternoon after confessing to the theft of ten dollars taken from the cash register at Vivian's garage last Saturday. Young Baptiste was arrested by Provincial Constable Hendren following the report received from Mr. Ken Vivian, proprietor of the garage, regarding money having been pilfered from his cash register. After being committed to the Bowmanville School, Baptiste was given into the custody of Inspector T. D. Ruston, of the Children's Aid Society, who escorted the lad to that institution late Monday.

TRIPLE DANDELION FOUND ON LAWN

One of nature's freaks was found by Robert Bedford, on the farm of his parents near Rednersville early today, in the form of a triple dandelion blossom. The stems and blossoms were perfectly formed, but had grown together into one large stem and a blossom, the bloom being fully two inches in diameter. The freak of nature was on display at the Bedford market stand on the market square this morning.

TIRES DEFLATED, IGNITION DAMAGED

A rather mean and contemptible trick was investigated by police late Monday night when Malcolm Bird, R.R. No. 3 Belleville, reported that some person had apparently let the air out of three tires on his parked automobile and also tampered with the ignition wires of the vehicle leaving it in an unfit mechanical condition.

Bird told P.C. Taylor he had parked his automobile at the upper end of the main street in Belleville, while attending a nearby theatre. During Bird's absence some person, who apparently wished anything but good motoring fortune to the owner, had purposely let the air from out the two front tires and the right rear tire. The ignition wires were pulled from their proper fittings, leaving the vehicle unfit for operation until repaired.

Mr. Bird informed Constable Taylor it was definitely the efforts of a man who held petty jealousies against him. The matter is being further investigated by police.

Many Visitors Inspect Hospital At Open House

About two hundred citizens availed themselves of the opportunity afforded by open house at Belleville General Hospital on Hospital Day Monday, to pay a visit of inspection to that institution and take part in a tour of many of the interesting departments. Members of the alumnae and about eighteen of the Hospital nursing staff acted as guides, conveying the visitors in groups about the building.

The first item of interest was the newly-completed Isolation Hospital in charge of Miss Carter and Miss Maybee and after a visit there the guests were taken to the third floor for an inspection of the nursery, a department of which the Hospital is justly proud, it being one of the most advanced in the province. The maternity department is closed to the public, visiting being curtailed so that only the husbands of patients, their mothers or mothers-in-law or those with special passes are allowed here. The nursery is closed not only to visitors but to all nurses excepting the two in charge. In this way every protection is given to the babies and to the mothers to avoid any danger of infection. This exceptional care is a great factor in the high standard of efficiency for which this department is becoming known throughout the district. Three babies were born on Hospital Day.

Nurse Johnson spoke to visitors about the nursery, which is divided into three parts, one for normal healthy babies, an isolation department for babies who might have some skin infection needing to be cleared up and accommodations for premature babies with its two incubators. The nursery and delivery room are sound proofed, acoustic tile being used in the roofing to help achieve this effect.

Operating Rooms Displayed

Visitors were shown the private, de-luxe private and semi-private rooms throughout the building. They visited the operating rooms on the second floor. Nurse Meeks, second in charge, explained all arrangements for an operation and the instruments used. Nurse Collyer, in charge in the operating room, had prepared an exhibit showing the administering of gas anaesthetic and Miss Donnelly explained the other forms used.

From the operating rooms the parties proceeded to the first floor to visit the private rooms and then to the basement. They were shown the new ambulance entrance, the outside phone. Inside, they saw first the emergency operating room and the detention room for mental patients. In the physio-therapy department Nurse McIntosh demonstrated the oxygen tent and also gave a short talk, with a demonstration, on the fever cabinet. The X-ray department had an exceptionally busy day, Dr. Pearce, senior interne, assisted Mr. Williams in explaining the films and showing the operation of the X-ray machine.

The pathology laboratory was next visited and Dr. Mackay explained to each group the methods of examining tissues, etc., which can now be done in the institution. In the central supply room, Nurse Plumton was in charge and with her assistants was making dressings and sterilizing instruments and rubber goods all afternoon.

In the maintenance department, Mr. Kolver demonstrated the new paint machine used for spraying paint both inside and out. Mr. A. Boyd, formerly of Geen's and now in charge of the pharmacy had an interesting display and spoke on the three types of sugar, lactose from milk, sucrose from cane and beet sugar and dextrose from grapes. He also had a timely display on vitamins, the recently discovered ones and those which are made up in small pellets.

Kitchen Attracts Many

The dietary department, of which Miss Shantz is now the head, stressed in its display vitamin foods arranged under the headings of A, B, C and D vitamins. Typical trays for various patients were shown, ready to be served and were most attractive. The hospital kitchen was inspected by the visitors who were most interested in seeing how this very important department functions so efficiently.

In the chapel on the main floor, Rev. C. V. Freeman, president of the Ministerial Association which co-operated so splendidly with the hospital in furnishing the chapel, and making such a room possible, spoke to the visitors.

The last visit was made to the administration offices, the office of the superintendent of nurses and the business offices Mr. Broad, in charge of the business office, showed how accounts of patients are prepared and are presented to the patients just before leaving the hospital.

The enthusiasm and interest of the visitors made Hospital Day most successful and Mr. Gordon Barclay, administrator, and the hospital staff received high commendation for their gracious entertainment of those attending.

Large Barn Near Sulphide Destroyed By Fire On Sunday

Believed to have originated in a corner of a hay mow, fire completely destroyed the large barn owned by Mrs. Mary A. Quinn, of Tweed, on her farm situated one and one-quarter miles east of Sulphide on Sunday afternoon. Quantities of hay and grain, and a valuable horse were destroyed, but a number of farm implements were salvaged from the flames.

The farm was tenanted by Mr. Charles Moore, who stated he was at a loss to understand the origin of the blaze. When first noticed dense clouds of smoke and flame were issuing from a corner of the structure in the vicinity of the mow.

Neighbors rushed to the scene, and although the flames had made such headway that saving of the building was impossible, succeeded in bringing out valuable implements from the blazing building. No insurance was carried on the contents of the barn although the building itself was insured.

PARKING BY-LAW HELD OVER BY CITY COUNCIL

May 26th Set as Public Holiday and to be Known as Empire Day

OTHER BUSINESS

Despite the fact that the City Council defeated a by-law respecting the changing of the parking regulations in the downtown area, the members supporting the change put through a motion, that no streets be marked until the matter is finally settled, at the regular meeting of the City Council held on Monday night. The members also favored the holding of May 24th which falls on Saturday this year on May 26th, and the Mayor was authorized to issue a proclamation setting Monday, May 26th as the public holiday in this city and will be known as Empire Day.

A by-law incorporating the recommendation passed at a recent meeting of the council respecting the parking of cars on Front and Bridge Streets was tabled on Monday night but some members were of the opinion, that the by-law did not incorporate all details of the recommendation and therefore voted against the passing of the second reading. The supporters of the by-law called for the yeas and nays on the question, which resulted as Yeas Thompson, Allin, Clapp, Jeffery and Pringle, Nays Armstrong, Clarke, Kennedy, Marshall, Rollins and Wotten. Aldermen Harvey and Butler were not present, when the vote was taken. Under the headings of motions, it was adopted that no markings of the streets take place until further notice by the council and also that a new by-law be prepared specifically setting out the details of the recommendation passed recently. This recommendation called for parallel parking on one side of Front Street and angle parking on the other for this year with the converse arrangement during the next year.

Large Delegation Heard

A large delegation from the King George School sector appeared before the Council asking for relief against the dangerous condition created by children having to cross the road on North Front Street owing to the lack of sidewalk on the west side of North Front Street from the overhead bridge to King George School. This matter has been before the Council on repeated occasions but each time the Board of Railway Commissioners and the Municipal Board has refused the application of the Board of Education and the City to complete such a project.

A number of speakers stressed the dangerous crossing at this point and showed that twice children have been injured in that vicinity by passing cars, Thelma Brockhurst sustaining a fractured skull and Marilyn Carr an injured leg. "We don't have to wait until someone is killed before we take action," said one member of delegation. Mr. Kells, Principal of King George School led the delegation, and stated that it should be in the interest of the City Council to provide adequate safety for the children attending this school and he believed the point in question was a dangerous one and children should not be subjected to this danger when the condition could be easily remedied. He explained that since the addition of 60 pupils from Queen Mary School had been sent to King George School that 64 per cent of the pupils had to cross the road to get to the school. Mayor Thompson explained that the council was alive to the situation but their hands were tied by action of the Municipal and Railway Boards. "We did everything in our power to get a walk on the west side of North Front Street," said Mayor Thompson. Ald. Clarke read from the records the reasons why the board had refused permission for the walk claiming it was necessary to build a new bridge at a cost of approximately $50,000.

Ald. Offers Suggestion

Ald. Allin, who was chairman of the Board of Education when the matter was first broached in the Board stated that he believed the Railway was quite willing to built the walk across the bridge and he thought that the City Council could at least furnish a cinder walk from the bridge to the school. The Mayor and members offered co-operation in this respect and the matter will be fully considered in the immediate future by the City Council In respect to the recent recommendation of the Council respecting the sale of the Gas Plant by the Public Utilities, Mayor Thompson stated that if a buyer was secured, it would be necessary to have the people ratify the sale and that is why the recommendation was passed. "If we get a buyer" said the Mayor, "We will have something concrete to place before the people before the vote is cast."

Wallace Patrick Webber, a veteran of the First Great War was chosen as caretaker of the Tourist Camp at a salary of $13 per week, according to a recommendation by Ald. Harvey chairman of Tourist and Publicity. The clerk was authorized to have a deed prepared for a lot sold to G. Wade for $30.

E. T. Bunnett was the successful tendered for the garbage collection for the city this year at an amount of $5,000 and the Comptroller was authorized to prepare an agreement between Mr. Bunnett and the city to cover this contract. Letters were received from the Orange Lodge and the I.O.D.E. thanking the council for past favors. The Council approved a resolution by Peterborough asking the government to remove the sales tax on building materials used in the construction of residential property. The Public Utilities requested by letter the council to provide the organization with $13,000 immediately to rehabilitate the gas plant. This request was referred to the committee for further consideration. A number of bonds in the Sinking Fund were sold to W. C. Pittfield and Company. The auditorium of the City Hall was granted free of charge to a farmer's organization for a meeting soon to be held.

By by-law the Mayor and Treasurer with the chairman of Finance was authorized to borrow $50,000 and other by-laws dealt with deeds for property sold to residents as building lots. Near the close of the meeting a vote of confidence was moved in the Special Property Committee the members believing that the work was being handled in an excellent way and fine progress was being made. Two members voiced their disapproval of selling a lot for $1 but otherwise the work of the committee was approved.

48 Hogs Destroyed Near Foxboro Due To Hog Cholera

No Further Outbreak Reported by Department Inspector Who is Keeping Close Check on Conditions

No further outbreaks, thus far, have been reported of the presence of the dread hog cholera which resulted in the destruction of approximately 48 grown hogs on the farms of Foxboro hog-raisers a few days ago.

When the symptoms were first discovered, Dr. O. J. Reid, Department of Agriculture veterinary inspector, was called and following examination ordered 26 hogs averaging 175 pounds in weight, and the property of a farmer named Cook, destroyed. Later more in the vicinity became affected and were ordered destroyed.

Dr. Reid, assisted by Dr. Anderson, Peterborough veterinary, is keeping a close check on conditions in the district, while farmers and hog-raisers are urged to report any symptoms of the disease.

REG. HINCHEY RECEIVES REQUEST FOR HIS SONG ARRANGEMENT

The stirring music of the Royal Canadian Air Force Band of the central zone, will have a distinct Belleville flavour when it greets President Franklin D. Roosevelt on the occasion of his visit to Canada.

Mr. Reg. Hinchey, who has rapidly forged to the fore in Canadian musical circles during the past two years as a composer-arranger, has been requested to forward his arrangement of the now famous war song, "There'll Always be an England" to Ottawa where it will be played for the President of the United States.

Earlier in the year, the well-known American conductor, Goldman, requested the arrangement to be played by his band in New York City.

Colored Pictures Of Belleville District Fishing Grounds Shown

The greatest inducement which Canada, and more particularly Ontario, has to offer to the potential American tourist is the irresistible appeal of lakes and rivers teeming with maskinonge and speckled trout, said Mr. William Lang, of Toronto, photographer, sportsman and lecturer, as he showed a program of colored moving pictures of Ontario's lakes and streams, as well as action pictures to delight the Izaak Waltons and the game hunters, at Bridge Street United Church auditorium on Monday evening.

"If I had my way, Ontario would not spend one nickel in literature or in advertising this province as a tourist resort," stated Mr. Lang. "I would suggest that the $300,000 which was spent in advertising last year be used to build more fish hatcheries and in restocking the lakes and rivers. The prominence which Ontario would then receive as a sportsman's paradise would be appeal enough," he said.

Striking a highlight among the pictures which were shown by Mr. Lang were beautiful color pictures of the Trent River spawning beds, showing government fish hatchery employees in action assisting in the propagation of maskinonge and demonstrating new angles and ideas on how and when to catch them. The picture also included shots of Moira Lake and the Belleville Boys' Camp, where last summer Mr. Lang spent considerable time. These pictures were shown by Mr. Lang on a recent American tour, thus bringing Belleville and Hastings County before thousands of American tourists.

Pays Tribute to J. Shortt

Mr. Lang paid tribute to Mr. J. Shortt, secretary of the Y.M.C.A., in the work which he has been doing in connection with the Belleville Boys' Camp. "You are indeed fortunate in having a man like Mr. Shortt to take such an interest in getting the boys into the great outdoors during the holidays," assured Mr. Lang as he urged greater co-operation on the part of local citizens in regard to this camp. "If one could only visualize the thousands of underprivileged children in the huge cities of New York and Chicago who never have the opportunity to enjoy camp life, the importance of Mr. Shortt's work could be realized," he said.

The first picture shown by Mr. Lang was entitled "Speckled Trout of Algonquin Park," depicting the photographer flying to inaccessible spots in this beautiful park for the piscatorial aristocrats which delight the heart and which are a rare treat for lovers of the speckled beauties from rapids, lakes and streams "A Motor Camping Trip Through Quebec," taken in Kodachrome color, depicts the charm of French Canada, with scenes of Indian and habitant life from Quebec City to Lake St. John and North America's oldest settlement at Tadoussac. The picture is a joy to the lover of scenic beauty as well as to the fisherman.

Thousands of Game Birds

Shown for the first time in Belleville was "Canadian Game Birds," showing English ring neck pheasants at their best at Pelee Island in Ontario, and Great Snow Geese by the thousands in the St. Lawrence River. Taken in color, the picture shows the Earl of Athlone and ex-premier Taschereau of Quebec in picturesque hunting togs.

Mr. Lang, a Past President of the Toronto Anglers' Association, is an expert in the use of the fly and rod and throughout his series of pictures either himself or his son is shown displaying the art of casting and the many battles with maskinonge, speckled trout and black bass are a delight as well as envy to fishermen.

Mr. Lang staged the entertainment for the benefit of the Belleville Boys' Camp with the entire proceeds of the evening going for the maintenance of this popular camp. Mr. J. Shortt expressed the appreciation of the patrons to Mr. Lang for his generosity in showing the pictures.

Community Gathering Held At Sidney Home For War Victims

3rd Sidney—Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Saylor opened their home on Friday evening for a community gathering when donations were received for the Evening Telegram War Victims' Fund.

The Pastor, Rev. L. W. Scott presided over the short musical program which opened with the singing of the National Anthem.

"I am a Canadian" was sung by little Miss Audrey Scott with her mother Mrs. L. W. Scott as piano accompanist.

A piano solo "The Empire is Marching" was rendered by Mrs. Lee Grills. Readings were given by Mrs. Cyril McMullen and Mrs. E. Hubble.

"Embarrassing Moments" came for Mr. Everett Hubble when the chairman called for the singing of "Happy Birthday to You," it being the anniversary of his natal day.

A quizz contest, prepared by Mrs. Sam McMullen and in her absence, conducted by Mrs. Stanley Spafford, proved very interesting.

Contestants were then given slips of paper and asked to write a ten-word telegram, the words beginning with the letters W. A. R. V. I. C. T. I. M. S. These were read and created a great deal of merriment with Mr. Lee Grills carrying off the honours for the best telegram.

Sandwiches, cake and coffee were served by the hostess and her assistants. Appreciation was expressed by Wm. Wheeler to Mr. and Mrs. Saylor for their kind hospitality in opening their home for such a worthy cause.

Donations amounted to thirty-two dollars with contributions still coming in.

The Mother's Day Service at Aiken's Church on Sunday afternoon was in charge of the Sunday Shcool Superintendent, Mr. Stanley Spafford.

The regular order of service was followed with "Christian Homes" as the theme.

Scripture lessons were read by Mrs. Perry Hamilton and Burton Hubble. A story "The Quest" was told by Miss Ruth Spafford. Other stories were given "David Livingstone" by Mrs. W. H. Kells; Frances Willard by Mrs. Selburn Westover; Sir Wilfred Grenfell by Donald Hubble and Florence Nightingale by Mrs. E. Hubble. A short drama was presented by Miss Phyllis Davis, Miss Barbara Hamilton and Master Keith Kells, "My Mother's Prayer" was the anthem sung by the choir.

The offering was taken by Mr. Frank Hamilton and Mr. Douglas McPherson and dedicated by the minister.

An appropriate address was delivered by Rev. Scott who stressed the need of Christian homes where the influence of good mothers and fathers is a power for good.

During the service three babies were baptized by Rev. Scott. Margaret Luella, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Brickman; Ronald Franklin, son of Mr. and Mrs. Beryl Hamilton and Betty Jane, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lee Grills.

Flowers and plants were in profusion at the church, including lilies sent from Bermuda by Mr. Garnet Grills in memory of his mother Mrs. Frank Grills.

Mr. Seburn Westover, treasurer of Aiken's United Church accompanied the minister, Rev. L. W. Scott to Wellington on Tuesday where they attended the Presbytery meeting.

The condition of Mrs. Chas. Moon who is critically ill at her home, 2nd line, remains unchanged.

Mr. and Mrs. John Dyck of Frankford spent Mother's Day with the former's parents Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Dyck.

Lance Corporal Charlie Saylor, Mrs. Saylor and family of Trenton accompanied by an aviator friend of Mr. Saylor's from British Columbia who is now in training at the Trenton Airport, spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Saylor.

Mrs. Allan McDonald, Shannonville, Mrs. Coyle of Colborne and daughters Marion and Jean, students at Albert College, Belleville, and Miss Irene Grills were guests on Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lee Grills and attended service at Aken's Church.

Mrs. Wm. Coulby, Miss Margaret and Mr. Billy Coulby and Mrs. Holway and daughter of Belleville spent Sunday, Mother's Day, with the former's mother Mrs. John Orr and Mr. Orr.

Mrs. Harley Hubble and her guest, Mrs. A. H. Finkle of Belleville, Mrs. Selburn Westover and Mrs. Everett Hubble spent Friday with Mrs. George Bonter at her home, Chatterton.

Mr. Frank Jeffrey was unfortunate in having his foot crushed on Thursday last.

In making preparations for spraying his orchard, Mr. Jeffrey had filled the spray tank with water, when the horses stepped ahead, a wheel running over the toes of his foot.

While not completely laid up, Mr. Jeffrey is suffering from the effects of this painful accident.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Denyes of Avondale attended the social evening held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Saylor on Friday evening. The community was well represented at this gathering when donations were brought in to be sent to the British War Victims' Fund, amounting to thirty-two dollars and seventy-six cents.

All out FOR VICTORY

MORE CANADIANS ARE NOW AT WORK THAN EVER BEFORE!

FROM the Atlantic to the Pacific, factories hum day and night producing the guns, shells, trucks, tanks, planes and other equipment essential to the winning of the war. Shipyards bristle with activity . . . echo the ceaseless chatter of compressed air riveters as dozens of Corvettes are rushed to completion to patrol the Atlantic . . . escort merchant ships . . . ensure a steady flow of vital supplies to Britain. Over draughting boards and around the conference table, men toil far into the night . . . planning new plants, new tools . . . methodically and efficiently organizing the mighty production power of our great nation . . . a power that is growing stronger day by day.

Yes, indeed, Canada is all out! In throbbing cities . . . in towns . . . on farms . . . Canadians have responded to the call of the Navy, Air Force and Army . . . to the demand for workers in every branch of industry . . . to the need for help in financing the weapons of war.

The next six months will be critical ones for the British Empire. We Canadians must meet this challenge with ever-greater sacrifice . . . must labour in the factories, and toil on the farms with ever-increasing energy . . . and be prepared to bear our share of the stern price of freedom.

HESS' FLIGHT TO BRITAIN

What is the significance of the action of Rudolf Hess in flying from Germany in disobedience it is believed, to Nazi orders? He was the second in line for the honors of Fuehrer in the event of Hitler's death. Did he know something of contemplated events- Did he feel his life insecure from some cause in the Nazi Germany he helped to create as the henchman of Adolf Hitler? Does the flight signify difference of opinion in the Reich which has gone so far as to be a real split?

The relationship of the escape to Hitler whatever it is shown to be will be a revelation, for Hitler and he were bosom friends and Hess helped to write "Mein Kampf."

It is one of the strangest events in war history, this flight of a leader in Nazi counsels. It is said that Nazis were of the opinion that Hess did not deserve the honors that Hitler showed him.

The Germans seem to have tried to interpret in advance whatever might have been the result of his escape for they spoke of "hallucinations."

One thing was certain, a London dispatch said today, and that was that he did not bring peace terms.

He will be a prisoner of war.

BRITISH SHRINES

The character of the Huns is clearly marked in all their actions. Their air raids on the homes of the people, poor and rich, their machine-gunning of civilians in the streets, their attacks on the religious shrines and the churches of the British people, their attempts to obliterate landmarks of civilization other than their own, have been prominent in this war and in the struggle of 25 years ago. Particularly because of British resistance and doggedness against the aggressor, the Huns have taken especial pleasure in attempting to ruin the marks of British civilization.

A long story of destruction of churches by wanton acts of bombing without the slightest excuse has been told. The enemy cannot say that these are near military targets. The real reason is that they are so near to the British people's heart that the Hun thinks he can deal a stabbing blow at Britons by wrecking the things they hold dear.

They have damaged St. Paul's cathedral, a monument of the British people's faith and the work of a great architect and builder, Christopher Wren. They hit churches sacred to the names of Milton and other British poets, they slightly damaged the Abbey of Westminster some months ago. Now again the destroying Huns have rained explosives and incendiaries on Westminster, the centre of the whole British Empire and the most famous shrines of democracy and history in the world. Here grew up the principles of British liberty and the British ideal of justice.

In this area are the Houses of Parliament, Westminster Hall, famous throughout the world for its beauty of architecture and its vast roof. Here is the famous Abbey of Westminster, the shrine of the great dead, rulers and leaders who have served the cause of parliamentary institutions and democracy, and the sanctuary where with a time-honored ritual symbolic of the British conception of the Throne and Parliament, her kings and queens are crowned and enthroned. Here stands out prominently the solid foundation of faith and honor which are marks of the British people.

The knowledge that the British have shrines which are dear as the apple of their eye is sufficient incentive to the enemy to wreak deliberate damage. The same can be said of the attempts on the British Museum and Big Ben—those bombs were aimed at something of the historic importance in London City.

But the Huns little know the people of Britain who pass through trials and are resolute. If the enemy thinks he can quell the British hearts of oak by destroying their sacred and precious structures and by killing civilians the foe is mistaken. Britain will never yield to the vandal or the Hun, wanton criminals delighting in fire and ravage. The British shrines are great because they are the symbols of the spirit of a great people but in spite of bombs and damage to shrines of the national life, the spirit and the courage remain.

OURSELVES AND OTHERS...

BY

To his many friends and fellow officers in the Royal Air Force and the Royal Canadian Air Force he is known as plain "Sandy."

But on Savile Row or Bond Street, in the swank clubs of London and Edinburgh and the former British embassies in Bucharest Belgrade and other centres in the Balkan powder-keg, he is listed as Sir Alexander Seton.

The baronet-airman whose ancestors wore the kilts when Charles II was cavorting around the hielands 'o Bonnie Scotland in the sixteenth century, is in the Canadian vernacular a "regular guy." Tall, fair and handsome, he is everything a Scottish baronet is pictured as being. He does not, as many titled Britishers are won't to do, look upon Canadians as "colonials." He has been in Canada a scant month and is already acclimatized. He has a delightful manner of making strangers feel perfectly at home when they meet him. A delightful conversationalist, "Sandy" is as interesting as he is attractive. He had been in Picton where he is the senior administration officer for that Royal Air Force base but a few days before his fine qualities asserted themselves.

Yesterday he addressed the Rotary Club here, and by his clean cut manner, sincerity of purpose and distinguished appearance, immediately won the hearts of the clubmen. He is one of the few men in the world to wear the famous "Order of Nova Scotia" a decoration given by the lamented Charles II to a group of faithful Scottish henchmen who rallied to his side when the Scottish and English were mixing matters away back in the sixteenth century. "While we helped Charles financially," the baronet smiled, "we never got our money back. But the family was given the Order."

The ancestral seat of the Seton family is, or to quote the squadron leader, was, Seton Palace near Edinburgh. That, however, was taken from the family in the 17th century when some of the Scottish clans defied English authority. However, while Sir Alexander is too much of the Scottish gentleman to bemoan any losses incurred through enemy activity, a close friend of the baronet revealed that Nazi raiders have reduced the fine Scottish home of the Setons, a loss estimated at one-half million dollars.

Son of the late Sir Bruce Seton, British diplomat, Sir Alexander was born in India. He remained there for a period of 10 years, then returned to Scotland where his education was finished. He chose the army as a career and became associated with that famous Scottish line regiment, the Royal Scots. A keen brain, ability, and a marked aptitude for his job, was later responsible for his transfer to the British Diplomatic Corps. He was sent to the Balkans, for years seething with international intrigue, remaining there for five years.

Returning to Scotland he was attached to the Royal Air Force at the outbreak of war. His administrative ability was soon evident and he became part of the R.A.F.'s contribution to the scores of instructors and other officers sent to Canada to assist in the Empire Training Scheme.

Sir Alexander Seton, squadron leader of the Royal Air Force, will do. He typifies the invincible spirit of the British people; the unconquerable race which will never bow the knee to the scourge of Europe. His gay camaraderie, hail-fellow-well-met air, breezy amiable disposition, all etched against the background of a fine British gentleman, has gained for him a well-deserved popularity, not only with his colleagues and men in the services here, but will all civilians with whom he has come in contact.

The Scottish squadron leader, during a recent visit to this city, showed his ability with the bag-pipes when he played several stirring pibrochs on his national instrument. He has witnessed many incidents since the battle of Britain started, but one that was outstanding, he said, occurred when seven Hun bombers became tangled up in the balloon barrage in London. "It was rather delightful, y'know," was his only comment.

"GLAD I DID!"

"Wish I hadn't!" and "Glad I did!"
Just like sunny and rainy weather,
Right and wrong, and sigh and song,
Blunders and good works lumped together.

"Wish I hadn't!" how oft the cry
Follows the pang of the moment heedless!
The good friend hurt by a greeting curt
And the thoughtless jibe .. and it all so needless.

But now and then there's a "Glad I did."
A touch of pride through the spirit surging.
A gracious deed in a time of need,
In response to a vague, subconscious urging.

"Wish I hadn't!" is vain regret,
A sense of shame for our blunders voicing,
But it happens, too, what is right, we do
"And "Glad I did!" is the heart rejoicing.

Night Air Fighting As the Pilot Sees It

The Pilot of a British Night Fighter Writes in the London Daily Telegraph.

"I could have hit it with a stone", the woman was saying. She was sitting behind me on the 'bus and, not being able to see her face, I wondered if there would be any scorn in it. She was describing how a Heinkel had been circling her house the previous night, apparently with such outrageous impunity that she had been obliged to ask herself bitterly, "Where are our fighters?"

Well, for a start, we are not allowed to say where they are. But they were not there, over her house; that was the point, and she certainly had a right to an explanation of some sort. Here it is.

The difficulties of night interception are almost solely due to the fact that man cannot, like a cat, see in the dark. Were it possible to inject him with a vitamin that would ensure him daytime vision, his troubles, and ours, would be over. That does not mean that he cannot see at all in the dark; he can, but with a limiting range of a few hundred yards.

Why, then, even with this limited vision, can he not see to shoot at the most obvious moonlit Heinkel over our rooftops?

The answer is that, as we look aloft from our back gardens, our eyes are directed towards the machine by the drone of its motors, whilst the fighter pilot, deafened by the 2,000 horse-power of his own, hears nothing.

Why does he not switch off his own motors and listen? Alas, that is no better. He hears nothing then but the rush of air over his machine, which, unlike his motorcar, he is unable to stop.

Therefore, until other means of detection are developed, he is left with his eyes as the sole means of seeking out the enemy. He is, at the same time, directed by the Observer Corps' intelligence transmitted to him by radio.

Might we say, then, that the position as regards interception has improved since the last war? No, this is not true, for the following fundamental reasons.

In the last war the pilot was flying in an open machine with a speed of about 100 miles an hour, while his quarry crossed the coast at about 80. If the two airplanes were approaching each other head-on (the worst case for interception) the maximum relative speed would be about 180. Today the maximum relative speed is to the order of 630 miles an hour. Since the enemy can fly in at 30,000 feet, we can see that the volume of search has assumed immense proportions.

Consider who has the best chance of spotting the raider — the pilot in his open cockpit, or the modern fighter encased in rather frosted glass at twice the height?

Think, too, of the power of evasion, the chances of escape of the bomber. Those who remember seeing a Gotha at night in the last war say he used to "hang like a kite" in the sky. Whether he turned, or stalled or dived, he still retained the aspect of lofty dignity. Now, at a gentle pressure on his control-wheel, the searchlight-scared Nazi pilot can accelerate from 100 to 500 miles on hour and dive from 30,000 to 50,000 feet!

These are not the only difficulties that confront the nightfighter. In order to maintain his equilibrium on a dark night, at least half his attention is focussed on his instruments, inside the machine. That is to say, that, owing to the high efficiency of the modern blackout, a cloudy, moonless night allows the pilot no horizon, or floor, as he calls it, by which he can orientate himself.

While the lightly loaded machine of the last war was inherently stable, the modern one, designed for four times the speed is by no means so. In fact, unless constant attention is paid to its condition, it will become uncontrollable and fall to earth.

What awaits the night fighter when he finishes his patrol? Here he has the satisfaction of knowing that his efficiently working radio will direct him swiftly to his base, whatever the weather. The Camels and Bristol Fighters had no such luck. But when he gets home he has none of the friendly half-petrol-tin paraffin flares as remembered in '17. He lands beside lights that are almost extinguished, like dying torch-bulbs. And with what a speed! The old-time S.E.4 was condemned for its landing speed of 52 M.P.H. Now we land at night at nearly twice that speed. The penalties of faulty instrument flying near the ground are swift and terrible.

For all this, a steady record of success is being maintained, and it is true to predict a progressive rise in the percentage of raiders destroyed. This is based to a large extent on the improvement by experience in the skill of pilot and observer, but mainly it is due to systems of detection devised by our scientists.

Remember one last cheering fact. Science does not flourish under a tyrannous regime. The Nazis have lost their most brilliant men. Ours are being made now.

Hit Nazidom At Its Heart!

A Letter to the Editor of the London Daily Telegraph

Sir:—So long as men like Churchill, Sinclair and Portal are in charge, the public will be satisfied that, given at last a sufficiency of material, the very spirit of the offensive will inspire our bombing policy.

But your own air correspondent has, I think, rightly sensed the growing impatience and even resentment about the "piecemeal" character of our present onslaughts, as well as about the scrupulous orthodoxy which seeks to limit our attacks to "military objectives."

Everything that helps to hamper or disrupt the enemy's war machine is certainly helpful. But are the dividends we are getting from our efforts now really adequate? May we not be overlooking that, with the war remaining in a static condition, the German machine is no longer feverishly turning to meet the urgent day-to-day needs of its armies, but that it is now producing well in excess of any immediate requirements?

The Germans, in other words, are now accumulating vast reserves of material, some substantial part of which they could afford to see wrecked without dismay, and even with some satisfaction if thereby they are deluding us to leave their really vulnerable spots untouched.

In this war, and especially at this stage of the war, the real military objective is that intangible element known as morale, and here, at all events, the enemy's reserves are not at all formidable. He himself is attacking our morale by attempting to destroy our ports, but being no less satisfied if he can destroy the homes and break the will of those who live in these ports. In this German strategy is probably sound. It is German psychology that is faulty.

"The British can take it," we know. But surely the answer to that out-worn cliche should now be "Why should they?" In any case, they would like to hear that the German people were saying —though in truth they never will —"we Germans can take it, too."

Many of us hold that a ruthless and sustained attack on Berlin should now take priority of all these routine visitations to refineries and invasion ports and similar "military objectives." Such a view springs from cold calculation and in no sense from revenge. Nazidom needs to be hit hard and often at its heart. Only in this way can its prestige—and it is the unmasked prestige of the ruthless brute that has been the cause of most of its successes to date, and the very key -pin of its survival—be brought crashing. And brought crashing early.

The news that Berlin had been really badly mauled would do more than anything to relight the beacon of hope throughout oppressed Europe.

EDGAR WILBERFORCE.

Signs of Spring

Old Gaffer Muggins, who was as deaf as an owl met the vicar as he was strolling down the village street.

"Ah, Muggins," boomed the vicar, "there's spring in the air."

"What's that you say?" asked Muggins.

"I said spring in the air," thundered the vicar.

"Why should I?" snapped the old man.

Unkind Cut

Officer's haughty voice from within car: "Where does this road go to, my good man?"

Yokel: "It don't go nowhere: we keeps it here."

Voice (even more haughtily): "Well, am I right for the barracks?"

Yokel, unabashed by the officer's officiousness, replied with a grin: "You must belong to that there Italian army, 'cause you're running away from the blooming place."

Almost all of the tobacco produced in Palestine is used by local cigarette manufacturers.

Hitler's Birthday

It is no answer to Hitler to say that he is a paranoiac though he may be just that. If he is that, then paranoia represents the frustration, confusion and deep disillusion of the people of Europe. Their ideals have been betrayed. The leaders who represent those ideals after the World War, when the world was supposed to be set up to defend the dramatic way of life, were incompetent when they were not dishonest. In many cases they were both.

So government in Europe denied justice to the citizens and a vast scum of cynicism, doubt and deep unfaith in democracy creamed and mantled over Europe, to hide a standing, a stagnant cesspool. The spirit of tyranny walked on this scum and Europe turned from democracy.

All except the few countries in the western fringe of Europe—Belgium, Holland and Scandinavia—surrendered when democracy was challenged. They were honorably defeated.

So Hitler came, the mad, neurotic figure that dramatized the bewilderment and disgust of Europe. He mastered Europe. Stalin is a pioneer in his Soviets. Mussolini is little better than a tyrant clown. The French are cringing vassals. Franco of Spain is a monkey on Hitler's string.

So they celebrated Hitler's birthday and well may broken-hearted Europe exalt him, well may Germany adore him! Until sanity returns and men begin to live by reason rather than by the domination of sheer force, Hitler is, indeed, the apotheosis of despair, the brazen serpent in the wilderness of man's lost hope.—Emporia, Kansas, Gazette.

Petain, Enigma

George Glasgow in the Contemporary Review (London)

Seven months after the surrender of France Marshal Petain, who had led the country in that historic act had become a figure as enigmatic and as potentially important as any figure on the world's stage.

To us in Great Britain there is something still obscure and slightly odd in Marshal Petain's purpose and achievement. The enormously interesting thing is that he has surprised and intrigued many other people as well. It seems now to be proved on the cumulative evidence of several months, that Herr Hitler is among those who are bewildered by the obstinate unexpectedness of this aged pious soldier. Those Frenchmen of an ungodly temper exemplified by M. Laval are clearly no less bewildered.

Marshal Petain will live in history. His effect upon the catastrophic times in which we live is not yet worked out nor can it be foreseen. But even at this time, there is evidence enough to suggest that he stands for something entirely unlike anything that is being done by any other political leader in the world.

Why is it that Herr Hitler's armed power has broken, so far, and spent itself ineffectively, as an angry wave, upon the rock of Marshal Petain's simple piety? The facts — for the outstanding facts can be seen and apprecated, though the underlying details be buried in the mass of lies that constitute the sum total of he world's diplomacy in wartime—are such as to force the most rash of worldly pundits to pause in their prophecies.

A plant that will make cattle fodder and pulp to be used in the local manufacture of paper as well as concentrated orange juice will be established in the Brazilian state of Sao Paulo, which produced 4,475,000 boxes of oranges last year.

LAUGHING HYENA

A farmer in South Africa recently shot a hyena that is believed to have killed hundreds of cattle, horses, donkeys, sheep and goats during the last three years.

The hyena does not have a particular enviable reputation.

"Hyena" is derived from a Greek word meaning hog.

Ordinarily the hyena lives chiefly on carrion offal and the remnants of animals left by beasts of prey.

The animal is able even to crush the bones of large animals with its powerful jaws and sharp cutting teeth.

Although repulsive in appearance and disgusting in habits, the hyena performs an important function in parts of Africa and Asia as the scavenger of the wilderness.

Unfortunately, however, the hyena, when other food is scarce, occasionally becomes a killer and attacks livestock.

The shuffling, slinking scavenger is too cowardly to attack cattle, sheep and other domestic animals directly.

It therefore sneaks up on them, startles them into stampede, and then attacks and kills them in pursuit.

Hyenas have been known to snatch babies from the arms of their mothers.

One of their favorite tricks is to rob newly made graves.

The spotted hyena of South Africa is known as the Laughing Hyena because it utters a weird cry suggesting the hysterical, mirthless laugh of a maniac.

When a hyena lies down it rests on its stomach with its hind legs extended behind and its front paws bent sharply backward at the wrists.

The ancient Egyptians venerated the hyena and believed that the animal carried in its head a stone which would impart the gift of prophecy to a person who placed the stone under his tongue.

It used to be widely believed that the hyena changes its sex every year.

This strange belief probably arose from the fact that the male and female are very similar in general appearance.

In the "General Epistle of Barnabas," one of the apocryphal books of the New Testament is this interesting passage:

"Neither shalt thou eat of the hyena; that is, again, be not an adulteror, nor a corruptor of others; neither be like to such. And wherefore so?—Because that creature every year changes its kind, and is sometimes male and sometimes female."

Sir Alexander Seton Addresses Rotary On How Britain Carries On Under Conditions of Modern Warfare

Senior Administration Officer of R.A.F. Base at Picton Says British Nation United Now as Never Before

WARNS CANADIANS OF APATHY

"The Germans have bombed indiscriminately, killing women and children. They have done a little damage to our war production, but they have done no damage to our spirit. We have not cried out in pain, but instead we, as a nation are knitted together closer than ever," Squadron Leader Sir Alexander Seton, senior administrator of the Royal Air Force base at Picton told members of the Belleville Rotary Club at their weekly luncheon on Monday.

The airman baronet, scion of a noble Scottish line, whose ancestors fought with Scottish kings in the 16th century, categorized Hitler and Mussolini as "an evil man and a jackal, who had very nearly succeeded in killing the world. But Britain fighting alone, deserted by traitors, war weary, will see that the world will step out in its convalescence and say 'I am fit.'"

Will Rid World of Nazism

"Britain will rid the world of the foul disease of Nazism, cauterize the wounds caused by it, clean out the dirt and make sure that our children and our children's children will never know what it is to be bombed. The Empire is not beaten nor will it ever be. And when victory comes we can say we were put on the earth to do one thing and that thing is a damned good job," he said.

"The horrible growth Hitler has nurtured and fed which has become a serious menace to our lives, must be cauterized to such an extent that it will never grow again, he said. "This is being done but the task is hard and weary and we need help. You are giving material help, but at times your people become apathetic. This, however, is no fault of your own. It is caused by lack of knowledge of the horrors of modern warfare."

"Canada is passing through the first phase of such warfare such as Britain passed through from September 1939 to May 1940. There was little activity and no air raids. Suddenly the horrors of hell were loosed upon us. Denmark, Belgium, France capitulated and Britain was left desperately badly off, poorly equipped but fighting to the death."

Strength of Empire Demonstrated

"The wonderful strength of the Empire came to Britain's aid in greater ways than was expected" he said. "Canada, New Zealand, Australia came to the rescue with arms and men. With the help of these the British forces will be able to rid the world of its two prime murderers."

The civilians in Britain are taking it now in this war, he said, while the country itself is taking some hard knocks. "But while we are being hammered hard, we are giving it back two-fold. We are doing it in a clean way, as clean as modern warfare can be, but are inflicting incredible damage. Some civilians are being killed but ninety-nine per cent of the appalling damage being done by Britain's air-fighters and bombers is in the industrial centres of enemy country."

"Coventry, and other bombed cities of England, are sorely wounded," Squadron Leader Seton said, "but they are not crying in pain. They are hoping that the Hun will set foot in England. I know what will happen to the Nazis if they do."

Taxis Available During Raids

The speaker categorized the 100 air raids in which he had taken part, as being "a bit of a mess". He illustrated the fine spirit of the British people with stories of humor. "You can hail a taxi after the raids," he smiled, "in fact you can get one while the raid is on. It may cost you a bit more because of detours which have to be taken because of damage and the driver will have plenty to say about Hitler.

Bomb disposal squads, which received seven shillings a day "danger money," remove the time-bombs, and by afternoon the bombed areas are back to normal. The only thing is the shops close at 4 p.m."

The blackouts were at first treated as more or less as a joke, Squadron Leader Seton pointed out, but some cities in the island paid for their levity and apathy later on. Driving one's automobile was at first difficult, he said, due to the fact that the only light allowed came from a small hole about the size of a 50c piece in the car headlight, over which was placed three layers of tissue paper. The light threw a small beam about 10 feet ahead of the car. "Yet," he said, "city buses are always on time."

Fine Rationing System

He paid tribute to the rationing of food system now in vogue in England. "While we are short of butter, meat and eggs, nowhere in Great Britain has anyone gone hungry. The worth of the civilian population has been proved in this respect for they have given up one-half of their rations in order that the fighting forces can be fed. The soldier now receives four ounces of meat, 2 of tea and 1 1-2 ounces of butter per day. There are plenty of potatoes and vegetables available, he pointed out.

Reminding the clubmen of the forthcoming Victory Loan, Squadron Leader Seton, stated that "I know this will be one of Canada's greatest successes; one that will show Germany what Canada means to do over and above the magnificent help she is giving. It is our bounden duty to see this loan through and see that it becomes a historical fact that Canada, taxed as she is, can turn to the world and say. 'The War Wants Finances; well, here it is—take it.'"

Set Example

"Spread this news among your friends" the speaker urged in conclusion "and you, yourselves, set examples of giving. In this way we can purge the world of this rebel and ensure that at the end of this struggle she will have a long convalescence and recover from the foul disease that has been pumped into her veins by an equally foul man."

The distinguished speaker was born in Indian in 1904 and received his education in Scotland. His ancestral home, which has since been destroyed, was Seton Palace near Edinburgh. Prior to being transferred to the R.A.F. he saw service in the Royal Scots Regiment, and was five years with the diplomatic corps in the Balkans. He is a son of the late Sir Bruce Seton, and Lady Seton, and is married to Lady Flavia Forbes, sister-in-law of the present British Secretary of State for Air, Archibald Sinclair.

The speaker was introduced by George H. Carver and club appreciation was expressed by Jamieson Bone.

Increase Rolling Stock By 16 P. C.

Chicago, May 13—(AP) — Members of the Association of American Railroad accepted yesterday a recommendation of their officials for a net increase of 270,000 freight cars at an approximate cost of $730,000,000 for the two years from October, 1941, to October, 1943.

This would be a net increase of 16 per cent in freight rolling stock.

The increase would be 120,000 new cars in the first year and 150,000 in the second. Fosty railroad presidents and representatives of 34 other roads also attacked the problem of apportioning the additional cars among the carriers.

The members agreed that in order to facilitate mass production of new cars, present designs would be "frozen" and no new ones would be introduced.

Mother's Day Service At Tweed United Church

Tweed—A large congregation was present at Tweed United Church on Sunday morning in honor of Mothers' Day. The church was decorated with apple-blossoms, lilies and other spring flowers. A baptismal service was held in conjunction with the morning service. The infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Elwood was baptized. The choir sang "Seek Ye The Lord" Miss Ruth Foster singing the solo and obligato most beautifully.

In his address, Rev. H. L. Morrison found cause for regret that so many parents think their responsibility for their children ceases when they have provided for their physical welfare. They do not interest themselves in their spiritual or moral training, by requiring their attendance at Sunday School and by setting their children an example of church attendance by themselves attending.

The Young People's Union sponsored a very successful cooking sale in Wagar's vacant store on Saturday afternoon.

Mrs. W. E. Tummon and Frank Tummon of Foxboro spent Sunday in Tweed.

Nelson, England (CP) — John McGovern, fiery M.P. for Glasgow-Shettleston, told the Independent Labor Party annual conference here he had refused to do fire-watching at the House of Commons.

McGovern said the sergeant-at-arms told him and James Maxton, another I.L.P. member, they must do a few hours' fire-watching on the roof of the House. McGovern declared he would "see the government in hell" before he would go on to a government building.

With knitted headpiece covering her, Mrs. Sarah Mason, 66, sits as the heroine of the story. She rescued her four grandchildren seen with her in the picture when Nazi bombers made Liverpool one of their main bombing objectives. Mrs. Mason holds four-months-old Dorothy May in her arms. It is believed that the Nazis concentrated on Liverpool because it was one of the ports in which U.S. aid to Britain would be received.

Torch Day Pledge Reaffirms Loyalty To King And Country

"I hereby declare my belief in Almighty God and reaffirm my loyalty and allegiance to His Majesty, the King, and further declare my support of British institutions.

"I pledge myself and my all to hold the torch on high and to march shoulder to shoulder with the Motherland and the Empire in our righteous cause through victory and enduring peace."

Hundreds of local citizens will make the above pledge on the occasion of a Torch Day Program which is planned in connection with the forthcoming Victory Loan.

One of the features of the publicity campaign in connection with the War Loan will be the delivery of a metal torch, bearing the inscription — "Part of the Tools—Canada's Victory Loan, 1941," to Prime Minister Winston Churchill of Great Britain. The torch, with an escort consisting of a representative of the navy, army and air force will be flown by a huge four-motored bomber from Victoria, B.C., across Canada and then across the Atlantic to Great Britain. The presentation to Prime Minister Churchill will be made on July 1, Dominion Day.

The trip across Canada will be by stages, the bomber stopping at every major city where there is an airport large enough. Each stop will be the occasion of a local ceremony, enabling the mayor of each city to pass it along to the next and each provincial premier to pass it along to the neighbouring province on the east.

The torch will make its first public appearance at a dedication ceremony in Victoria, B.C., on Victoria Day, May 24. The bomber carrying it is scheduled to arrive at Belleville on June 9th and plans are already under way for the local ceremony. Along with the torch there will be a beautiful scroll which will be signed by the Lieut.-Governor and Premier in the various provincial capitals and by the mayor and various officials in other cities.

L. F. Winchell and W. J. Stewart are joint chairmen of the National Torch Committee while A. Harrison Gilmour is chairman for Ontario.

Mother-Daughter Banquet Is Held At St. Andrew's

The "Good Companions" of St. Andrew's Church were hostesses to their mothers at a delightful Mother and Daughter banquet at six-thirty last evening. About forty were present at the event which was held in the Ladies' Parlor of the Church. Red, white and blue decorations were used, with red tulips and red, white and blue tapers carrying out the patriotic color scheme.

Marion Diamond, president of the "Good Companions" was in the chair and following supper there was a toast to the King, to which all responded with the singing of the National Anthem. The toast to the mothers was proposed by Helen MacLean and very ably responded to by Mrs. J. Diamond. Sings songs between the various items on the program added to the enjoyment of the guests. A reading was given by Aileen Cameron, a piano solo by Joyce Bell and a reading by Elizabeth Taylor. A chorus was sung by the girls.

Messages of greetings from the Superintendent of the Sunday School and from the W.M.S. were read. Mrs. Ward brought personal greetings from the Ladies' Guild.

The most interesting features of the meeting was a very educational and witty address by Mrs. Layton who spoke of peasant life in France telling of her experiences while living there some years ago. Mrs. Layton who had been introduced by Mrs. W. J. Walker was presented with a basket of tulips by Isabel Ford who expressed the appreciation of the guests for her wonderful address. The banquet came to a close with the singing of "O Canada".

The Stars Say

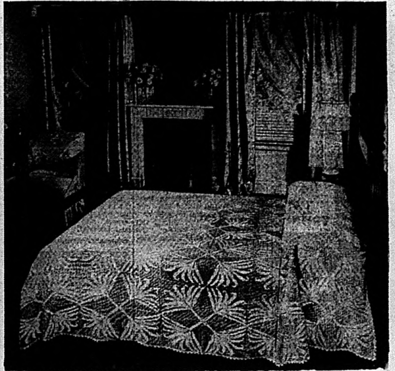
For Wednesday May 14

ALTHOUGH there may be splendid opportunities for the achievement of some form of public good, perhaps with transportation, communications writings or speechmaking, yet there are several angles for defeat, opposition or crafty undermining from superiors elders, friends as well as inimical interests. This may be provoked by impetuous words or acts, inspired by a sarcastic or caustic frame of mind. Such unhappy attitude may enter the domestic or social relations to the detriment of fond hopes and wishes.

Those whose birthday it is may be on the brink of a year of excellent opportunity for growth, expansion success and happiness even though there are signs of enmity and antagonism coming from employers, superiors, elders, even friends and relatives. Benefits come from decisive self-control in speech, acts and writings, and not from impetuosity and bitterness. And the accent for progress is placed on public relations, group and community welfare.

A child born on this day should have splendid abilities, with much versatility and energy, but may provoke opposition because of its caustic tongue or impetuous nature.

CROCHET BRINGS BEAUTY TO YOUR HOME



Today's needlewoman commands, through her own skill, the luxurious appointments that make a home charming. At the expenditure of little money and time, her bedroom can be transformed from the commonplace to the distinctive with a crocheted bedspread — a spread that not only she but her children's children, too, will prize. This one, The Palm Leaf, time-old decorative motif, is excellent pick-up work. Shown here on a lovely Colonial bed, it is done entirely in filet crochet squares joined together. It is Alice Brooks Pattern 6961 which may be ordered in the same manner as all of our needlework patterns. For directions for ordering turn to today's Household Arts feature.

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

So, You're Going to be Married?

You have set the date for your wedding? You have decided on the kind of wedding you are to have?

Now, you must decide where and at what hour the ceremony is to take place. The bride, usually with her mother, then goes to see the minister who is to perform the ceremony, to determine if the day and hour chosen are convenient for his schedule and if the church is available for the time. Follow the same procedure to engage any other place chosen for the ceremony. You should decide, at least tentatively, on the floral decorations, the music and the foods. Get estimates for these, to adapt to your budget. You invite your attendants; your groom-to-be invites his best man and ushers.

Start, as soon as possible, to prepare your guest list, and ask your fiance and his family to prepare theirs. These lists take time and extreme care; to decide who is to be invited to the ceremony and who to the reception; to choose the form and type of invitation; to have them engraved.

Your invitations must be mailed at least three weeks before the wedding day, and you should allow two or three weeks for the engraver to fill the order. When you have figured out the approximate number of invitations, add a few extra to this number for friends you may have overlooked. Have the envelopes sent at once, so that they can be addressed and stamped, ready to receive the invitations when they arrive.

Now you consult with your dressmaker about your wedding dress; plan and shop for your personal trousseau and your household trousseau; decide on your color scheme and plan the costumes of your maid of honor and bridesmaids; buy the gifts for your attendants. You must decide definitely about flowers, music and catering; arrange to be photographed after the final fitting of your wedding costume; plan the seating arrangements at the church, at the bride's table, at the parents' table; plan and schedule the cars for the family, the bridesmaids, the minister, and so forth.

In the meantime keep a careful record of gifts as they arrive, and write a gracious thank-you note for each gift, on the day of its arrival, if possible.

And, within the time limit set by your state, go with your fiance to get the marriage license!

Best Form For Addressing

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My daughter is to be married in June, and we have received several samples for the wedding invitations. One very well-known stationer told us to address the outer envelope to the matron of the family, and write the Mr. and Mrs. and the names of the children on the inner envelope. I have never received an invitation with this form used.

Another stationer told us to address the outer envelope to Mr. and Mrs. and then include the names of the children on the inner envelope.

Which form is correct or is it optional? C. R.

The best form is to write on the inner envelope Mr. and Mrs. James Sumner, and to address the outer envelope to:

Mr. and Mrs. James Sumner
123 Forest Avenue,
Sweet Home,
New York.

If separate invitations are not sent to the children, their names are written under the Mr. and Mrs., on both envelopes.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Honeymoons Preferred, Says Fairfax

My morning's mail brings a letter from a mother which is as timely as today's headlines. The letter follows:

"Dear Miss Fairfax:

"My reckless romantic daughter is about to become a bride, and she and her infatuated fiance, who is soon to leave for camp, are determined to have a two weeks' honeymoon, although I know that they cannot afford it.

"They are very young, haven't much money, and their little one-room, kitchenette and bath apartment isn't even furnished yet. My husband and I are unable to give them any assistance. Instead of saving every cent, they want to spend all the precious money they can get hold of to go on a honeymoon away from everybody. They do need the influence of someone like you, Miss Fairfax. Won't you please advise them? My daughter has been assured she may keep her job.

"A Mother."

My dear, worrying mother, in this case I must disappoint you. The truth of the matter is that I'm all for the honeymoon, draftee or not.

Of course we all know thrift is a necessary virtue. Family life goes on the rocks if economy isn't practised. There's no greater mistake than that of spending money one hasn't got. Surely we must all agree about these things.

And yet my belief is that even in the most conscientious and industrious lives, there are times when the eternal duty to save and scrimp has to give way a little. The beginning of married life is one of those times.

If it is ever justifiable to forget one's job and neglect one's housekeeping, to spend just a little more than one can well afford, to be foolish and impetuous and carelessly happy, to be divinely young, it is during those first weeks of married love.

If I were to worry over a young bride, it would be in the case of one who would be willing to march straight from the wedding ceremony into her own neat, new kitchen, and to tackle a shiny saucepan in preparation of the next day's dinner, without a single romantic flutter, without any desire for at least a brief period of uninterrupted solitude with the One Man in the World.

Marriage must begin with a few raptures, at least, and those raptures demand a time and place.

How can a young couple really get acquainted with one another and learn how to live happily and sensibly together, if neighbors, and friends or in-laws are free to drop in for visits all day long, maybe stay to dinner and to spend the evening?

Friends and families are welcome later, but not until the newlyweds have had their one important romantic adventure, their honeymoon journey.

As for the expense, even though I have suggested that this love-journey is so important with reference to future happiness that it deserves to be the solitary extravagance of a life-time, the extravagance can be of a very mild sort.

Happiness costs nothing. Love itself costs not a penny. In the present stage of the world's madness, don't you think it's well for young people to snatch at any straws of happiness that may come their way? There never has been anything safe or sane about love since the beginning of time.

In the case of a young man and the girl he's about to marry, let's realize that love is the most important thing in the world.

DR. DAFOE'S COLUMN on the Quintuplets and the Care of Your Children

Left-Handedness Still Unfortunately Surrounded by Old Superstitions

No one comes in contact with more superstitions and odd beliefs than a country doctor, and he is likely at any time to come up against one that goes all the way back to the day when a popular way of treating sickness was to hire a witch to drive the devil out of the patient's body.

Curiously, the most enduring and persistent superstitions are those concerning pregnancy and birth. There is, for example, the belief that it is possible for a mother to "mark" her child before birth by being frightened. Studies and experiments provide convincing evidence there is no such prenatal influence. There is no direct nerve connection between the mother and her unborn child through which the influences could be transmitted.

Similarly, it is believed by many that a birthmark, or skin blemish, has an unfortunate and even a similar significance. Birthmarks, which may occur on almost any part of the body, are caused by injuries or lesions of the tissues of the developing embryo, by excessive development of bloods vessels or by injuries in birth. Some of them may be removed by surgical treatment.

There is sub-superstition that if a birthmark is rubbed with a piece of the placenta within two or three days of birth, the mark will vanish. The truth is that skin blemishes present at birth often do disappear in a few days, whether the aforementioned example of witchcraft is employed or not.

None of the Quintuplets had birthmarks. Marie had what appeared to be one. But as she grew older, we discovered that the mark on her thigh was a tumor. It was removed with radium. Two of the Quints were, however, born with cauls, and this places them in a charmed group, according to one superstition which holds that those born with cauls will never be drowned and never be hanged, and will have the power to look into the future.

One of the ancient superstitions still strongly entrenched is that left-handedness is an unfortunate defect, and something needful of being changed in childhood if its possibly can be. Very few laymen, apparently, realize its relation to eye dominance, imitativeness of the infant, and habits and instruction tendancies of the parents.

Dr. Ira S. Wile, who made a monumental study of right and left handedness in humans, concluded: "The history of man reveals no special traits, either pleasant or unpleasant, associated with sinistrals (left-handers), save perhaps their increased power of embidexterity. Yet, for reasons probably related to the solar myths and other religious beginnings, left-handedness has had sinister connotatious during all ages and among many types of people. Possibly it is another instance of the majority disdaining the minority who question their rights to dominance or superiority."

Among doctors, it has long been regarded as dangerous to try to force children to change from left-hand to right-hand dominance, but recent research suggests that the conversion may be made in some cases without harmful effects if the training begins at the age of three or before speech and other habits are definitely formed. However, there is still plenty of evidence that the shift to right-hand is hazardous to the nervous systems of many left-handers, and parents should not undertake the change without the advice of a doctor.

HUNS OVER-RUN LAND OF PEACE LAND OF MIRTH

Ancient Arcadia With Traditions of Pastoral Simplicity Feels Again the Weight of Invading Hordes

By The Canadian Press

German occupation of the Peloponnesus will shock the ancient pastoral traditions of Arcadia, immortalized in Grecian mythology.

Arcadia is the central plateau of this Greek peninsula south of the Gulf of Corinth. It is surrounded by mountains and even in modern times the population remains sparse owing to the lack of consistent moisture.

The ancient inhabitants were an independent nation of shepherds and huntsmen worshipping Pan, Hermis and Artemis, primitive deities. The popular idea of the life perfect happiness and the absence of everything mundane. "Simple life and an absolute ignorance of immorality aid this idyllic conception of the Arcadians," says one writer.

Often Battleground

However, in the centuries between the ancients and the present sweep of the mechanized armies of the Hun, the traditional peace of Arcadia has been shattered many times. Despite their traditions they had many sanguinary feuds among themselves. With the rest of Greece they fell a prey to Rome. Then the country was occupied by the Spartans and Macedonians.

There was an influx of Slavs in the 8th century, followed by many centuries of Turkish rule. The Arcadians played an heroic part in the Greek Wars of Independence early in the 19th century and owing to strategic position of their plateau it was a centre of many battles.

Ambient's Arcadians

Elderly and middle-aged theatre goers, says The Canadian Press, will recall Mark Ambient's delightful musical play "The Arcadians," which ran for two years at the Shaftesbury in London about 1910, appeared in Canadian and United States theatres, and had a revival in 1915. Alexander M. Thompson collaborated with Ambient in writing the play.

One of the lyrics thus depicted the immemorial attributes of Arcadia:

Land of love and land of mirth,
Land where peace and joy had birth,
Land where birds have ever sung,
Arcady is ever young.

RECORD BUDGET GIVEN APPROVAL BY THE COMMONS

Without Recorded Vote Commons Rejects Two Amendments Advanced

CONSCRIPTION ISSUE

By FRANK FLAHERTY

Canadian Press Staff Writer.

Ottawa, May 13 (CP)—Finance Minister Ilsley's record taxation budget has the approval of the House of Commons today. Without a recorded vote the House last night rejected two amendments sponsored by the New Democracy and C.C.F. groups and voted to go into committee of Ways and Means to consider in detail the various measures by which the government hopes to raise its revenues by $300,000,000.

The closing day of the budget debate was enlivened by a brief exchange over conscription which drew from Defence Minister Ralston the statement that nothing was to be gained by talking about a different system of obtaining men for the army when a recruiting campaign was under way.

He expressed confidence the 32,000 men he is seeking will be obtained if members of parliament and others "put their back into it." The Minister made a broadcast address Sunday night opening the campaign.

"I do appeal to people who glibly and perhaps without adequate thought advocate a change of system when no need for a change has been established to help in this campaign," he said.

"I do deprecate in public men and in others that attitude of advocating something different for which no need has been established because I believe that it interferes with our war effort and particuarly because it affects the call which has just gone out to the young men of Canada."

Bruce Advocates Conscription

The minister was replying to Dr. Herbert Bruce (Con. Toronto Parkdale) who said he spoke only for himself but thought the system of voluntary enlistment was "slow, cumbersome and wasteful" and that the session should not end until a system of compulsory selective service was established.

"We should have the compulsory selective service which was visualized by the sweeping powers of the National Resources Mobilization Act, passed last June, without the hamstringing clause that prevents men training under that act being used wherever the need is urgent," said Dr. Bruce.

Col. Ralston said Canada entered the war a united nation and appealed to members to keep it so.

"I say to my friend (Dr. Bruce) that I cannot understand why at this time, just after I have launched a recruiting campaign, he should inject this discordant note into our national unity," said the minister.

Blow at Unity is Claim

"I know that he is sincere in his remarks but I say to him it is nothing less than a blow at our national unity and, whether he intends it or not, an attempt to undermine it."

There were 3,000,000 more people in Canada now than in 1917 and fewer men so far in the armed forces than at that time.

Consequently there was no shortage of manpower. The Government did not compel people to lend their money; it asked them to do it freely and they did so. It was following with the same procedure with enlistments.

Amendments Lost

The new Democracy amendment to Mr. Ilsley's motion to go into committee of ways and means on the Budget was moved by Victor Quelch (N.D. Acadia). It urged the Government to meet "by funds from the Bank of Canada, without fear of inflation" the amount by which the proceeds from "reasonable taxation" and sales of interest-free War Savings Certificates fails to meet Government expenditures.

The C.C.F. sub-amendment, also defeated, was moved by Angus MacInnis (C.C.F. Vancouver East) and urged the "nationalization of the financial system and its use as an instrument of public policy."

Asks for Chance to Help

Walter Tucker (Lib. Rosthern) said he thought the Government was not making enough use of members of Parliament. They should be working on committees, reviewing the monetary and fiscal policy of the Bank of Canada, the wheat problem and other matters.

"We are not sent here—God forbid—in this time of crisis merely to sit in this House and debate, without getting our teeth into some of these problems and helping the government to carry on", said Mr. Tucker.

"As a loyal supporter, as one who always has had and still has every confidence in their leadership, I ask the government to give the Members of this House a chance to help them carry the burdens which they are carrying today.

"If they do so they will find a greater satisfaction, not only among the Members of this House, but throughtout the length and breadth of the country".

Both Mr. Tucker and A. H. Bence (Con. Saskatoon) suggested the government should consider returning to people of low incomes part of the money taken in taxation after the war. The British Government was doing this, they said.

Wants War Industries

Mr. Bence urged definite and early steps to divert a large part of the manpower of Western Canada into channels other than agriculture. This could be done by establishing war industries there. The cost might be a little high but it was better to bonus essential production than non-essential as was now done in the case of wheat, which was not needed.

Fear of financial collapse and bankruptcy after the war is retarding the war effort, said Norman Jaques (N.D. Wetaskiwin). He said this fear could be removed by appropriate financial measures, including proper use of the credit of the bank of Canada in financing war expenditures.

Mr. Quelch denounced the "union now" movement, which, he said, was at work in Canada. It was a movement for the surrender of the sovereignty of Canada and the British Empire.

"I believe it is the most subversive movement in the country today", he said. "It is based on the idea of the concentration of power not in any one country, but a world concentration of power, the very thing we are fighting against. That is just what Hitler wants and what he will have if he can get it".

Urges Health Insurance

P. E. Wright (C.C.F. Melfort) urged some form of health insurance for soldiers' wives and dependents. He said health insurance should be provided for the population as a whole but was not prepared to say whether it should be done federally, provincially or municipally.

If the Federal Government would establish a scheme for soldiers' dependents, however, valuable data and experience could be obtained which would serve as a basis for a wider plan.

Mrs. Dorise Nielsen (Unity North Battleford) urged social legislation of a progressive character now and not after the war. The people, she said, are entitled to some assurance that they will not be allowed to "rot on a human scrap heap" in another depression after the war.

The debate ended with John Blackmore, new Democracy leader, entering a vigorous defence of the Alberta Government against criticism directed at it earlier in the debate by J. M. Dechene (Lib. Athabasca).

He charged Mr. Dechene with misrepresentation in his allegation that Premier Aberhart was not pulling his weight in the war and cited cases of buildinag placed at disposal of the Federal Government by the Alberta Government had offered nothing.

Dr. S. W. Gershaw (Lib. Medicine Hat) said Mr. Dechene had not meant to say the Alberta Government had offered no buildings but that it had offered nothing except buildings.

'DECLARED' PRICES KEEP AUSTRALIA'S COSTS IN CHECK

Co-operation Between Control Board and Responsible Commercial Bodies Also Big Factor

Sydney, N.S.W. (CP)— Wartime profiteering as a whole has been successfully checked in Australia, abuses under consideration, the office of the Canadian Trade Commissioner has reported.

It said price increases have apparently been successfully restricted to those that were "unavoidable," and retail prices have increased by only approximately five per cent. Chief reason for these results, it said, has been "close and cordial co-operation between the Price Control Board and responsible commercial bodies.

"As compared with the limited sphere of price-fixing during the First World War, the establishment of price-fixing machinery in Australia in the present war has been extremely rapid," a report from the office said. "At the commencement of 1940 the Commonwealth Prices Commissioner had fully organized for this important phase of wartime control, with the result that price increases were checked throughout the Commonwealth before they had developed any momentum or become uncontrollable."

Declaring Prices

The Australian government did not try to impose a rigid control to tie down prices to the levels prevailing before the war. However increases were permitted only insofar as they were needed to meet higher production costs.

Several methods had been used by the commissioner to control prices the "most important" being that of "declaring" prices of particular commodities. The prices fixed might be either maximum or minimum, but in actual practice a maximum price has been the rule.

Declared prices have been established for such commodities as bread, butter coal, refrigerators, tea and other domestic requirements, building materials, tin, and copper. The power to set prices also extends to all services; for example, an increase of 12 1-2 per cent has been permitted in shipping freights between Australia and its territories, the amount being designed to compensate for increased war-risk insurance, seamen's awards and maintenance costs.

Co-operation

The prices commission has full power to co-operate with established organizations controlling prices, and to inspect and investigate all classes of goods and public services.

"Owing to its possession of these powers, it is believed, that traders as a whole have conformed to the principles of price control without the inconvenience and expense of direct government action, and, in the opinion of responsible bodies, price control in Australia was definitely successful during 1940," the trade commissioner's office said.

Situation in Canada

(Shortly after the outbreak of war, a Wartime Prices and Trade Board was established in Canada, with power to fix maximum prices, but the power has been seldom used. Rents have been fixed in a number of communities, however, and temporary maximum prices were established on bread, flour and butter, but now have been removed.

(Officials said the situation in Canada so far had been "most fortunate," with few shortages occurring which might cause a major price rise).

Reds, Yanks In Fourth Place In Their Respective Leagues And No Signs Of Advancement

Cards Riding Along on Swell Pitching From Whole Mound Corps

GROVE WINS ONE

By JUDSON BAILEY

(Associated Press Sport Writer)

The heaviest pressure in the Major Leagues today is not on the first-place clubs. It is on the World Champion Cincinnati Reds and the once invincible New York Yankees, both of whom are in fourth place in their respective leagues and virtually at the cross roads of the pennant trail.

Their predicaments are strangely similar. Each has lost five of its last seven games. Each has had trouble rounding out its pitching staff. Each has been in a batting slump. Each will be at home today and tomorrow for a two-game series with the league leaders—Brooklyn Dodgers at Cincinnati and Cleveland Indians at New York.

The Reds' plight is the worst. They were humiliated 12-1 by Chicago Cubs yesterday and left staggering on the fringe of the second division in a fourth-place tie with Boston Braves.

Monte Pearson, the former American League ace who has been tenderly nursing his pitching arm all spring, was unveiled in yesterday's tussle and lasted only 1 1-3 innings as the Cubs scored two in the first and five in the second.

Cards Conquer Pirates

St. Louis Cardinals conquered Pittsburgh again yesterday 6-2 with a 13-hit attack and the smooth, seven-hit pitching of Lon Warneke. It was the fourth victory without defeat for the veteran righthander.

The Yankees were whipped 8-4 by Boston Red Sox with old Lefty Grove spacing ten hits over the whole route for the 296th triumph of his career and his second of the season. Jimmie Foxx hit a homer with two on in the first inning to help make Grove's coasting easier.

The only Yankee victories in their last seven games were two surprise conquests at Cleveland last week, when the Indians still had their heads in the clouds from an 11-game winning streak. Bob Feller is to try to avenge one of those defeats today.

Washington Senators subdued Philadelphia Athletics 5-1 in yesterday's only other major league game. Dutch Leonard pitched six hit ball for his third straight triumph.

MONTREAL BOY K. O'S BAGNATO

Harry Hurst Scores Knockout With Blow None of the Fans Saw

Toronto, May 13 (CP)—Harry Hurst of Montreal battered Toronto's Joey Bagnato to the canvas for a knockout in the fourth round of their lightweight fight here last night with a punch nobody saw.

Hurst claimed after it was a right hand blow. Bagnato, still groggy, said in his dressing room Hurst butted him with his head. But whatever the cause, Bagnato went down like a felled log at 2.07 of the fourth round and the sharp-punching Hurst had built another extension on his rapidly-growing ring reputation.

Hurst shaded Bagnato by 1 1-2 pounds at 136 in the scheduled 10-round fight, and carried what little action there was before the fourth-round blowup. The end for Bagnato began when Hurst slugged home a left to the midle. Then he followed Bagnato into a corner and let go with his mystery punch. Right, left, or two-handed, it had the desired effect.

Nels Broadhead of Hamilton upset Eddie Petrin of Montreal in the semi-final with a technical knockout at 1.20 in the eighth. Petrin, Canadian bantam champion ,was not risking his title in the bout. Broadhead weighed 119 1-2, Petrin 119 3-4.

MAJOR CLUBS CAST ADRIFT MANY PLAYERS

Baseball's Longest and Most Colorful Voyages Are About at an End

MAY 15 DEADLINE

(By Hugh S. Fullerton, Jr.)

(Associated Press Sport Writer)

New York, May 13.— (AP)—Some of baseball's longest and most colorful voyages are about to go on the rocks of May 15.

That is a barrier Major League Clubs can't pass with more than 25 active players, and to get down to the limit managers have cast adrift such once-great players as Paul Waner, Dick Bartell, Wes Ferrell, Van Mungo, Tex Carleton and Earl Averill. It's also the date set for Jimmy Dykes' official retirement as a player, but the fiery White Sox manager hasn't done any playing to speak of since 1938

Latest to go are Waner, Bartell and Mungo, whose combined term of Major League service up to this season totals 39 years. The first two drew their outright releases from Brooklyn and Detroit Sunday. At the same time Mungo was taken off the Dodgers' active list with indications that he soon will join Carleton at Montreal. Carleton was shipped down to the Brooklyn "Farm" a couple of weeks ago, just about a year after he had pitched a no-hit game against the champion Cincinnati Reds.

Ferrell and Averill To Go

Boston Bees cast off Ferrell and Averill within te last week or two after taking them from American League clubs at the start of the season.

A few years back these players would have been enough to win a championship for almost any ball club and probably enough to turn the manager's hair white at the same time. Waner and Averill did most of their talking with their bats, of course, and kept out of trouble but "Rowdy Dick" Bartell, the temperamental Ferrell and the even more erratic Mungo could create disturbances for the lot.

Ferrell's big league career probably set a record of some sort for ups and downs. At his best, he was one of the American League's greatest right handers. At his worst, he was the kind of fellow a manager fines $1,000 instead of $100. He drew one such fine for refusing to leave a game and another for walking off the mound when the manager wanted him to stay.

Mungo's outbursts, temperamental and otherwise, his quarrels with the management and his desertions of the club, his ailing arm, his fireball and his fiery temper, all contributed to the lore of the daffy Dodgers.

MONTREAL WINS SIXTH STRAIGHT FROM THE ORIOLES

Score 4-0 Win and Birds Drop Into Virtual Tie With the Leafs

ONLY GAME PLAYED

(By the Associated Press)

There's a familiar picture these days down at the Baltimore Ball Park, where everything was going to be different this year.

Ever since their great days of seven consecutive International League pennants, from 1919 to 1925 the Orioles have been trying to build a winning ball club around the outlines of their pint-sized field. They neglected pitching and defence in favor of sluggers. That didn't work, although the Birds finish in fourth place last season and reached the finals of the Governor's Cup playoffs.

So this season, operating independently of Major League connections, the Orioles planned to take a new course. They wanted some good pitching for a change and didn't intend to emphasize clouting so much. But with the season only four weeks old, the figures show that Baltimore is first in home runs with 25 and last in the league standing. Only ten starting pitchers in 25 games have finished.

The Orioles haven't been able to win consistently from any team but Toronto and they've had their worst record against the high-flying Montreal Royals, who beat them for the sixth straight time yesterday, 4-0. As a result of that game, Baltimore dropped a half-game behind the Toronto Maple Leafs, although the percentages worked out in the Orioles' favor, .320 to Toronto's .318 and Montreal cut Newark's margin at the top of the standing to a half game. It was the only game played yesterday.

UNDISTURBED IS PICKED AS WINNER OF KING'S PLATE

Harry Gidding's Charge Shows Well in His Early Trials

12 MAY START

By SCOTT YOUNG
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, May 13—(CP) — Harry Gidding's Undisturbed is the "big" horse of the $8,000-added King's Plate this year, a general choice backed by the almost insurmountable logic that the Oakville horse wins more races than he loses.

The black gelded son of Stand Pat out of Calm started eight times as a two-year-old and six times he pounded home in front. Once he ran second, another time third and as the cream of Ontario-born three-year-olds trains for Saturday's 82nd running of the plate these brisk mornings at Woodbine Park their main ray of hope seems to be the problematical deduction that Undisturbed can be beaten if extended early.

In both of his defeats last year, a fast early pace left him with nothing for the stretch. Scotch Grass burned him out for Depositor and Andsan in the Coronation Stakes and Budpath performed a similar chore in Mrs. Orpen's Cup and Saucer, with Warrigan coming at the finish to win.

Thoroughbreds considered most likely to challenge Undisturbed are Warrigan, by Osiris 2nd out of War Vixen and owned by R. S. McLaughlin's Parkwood Stables of Oshawa; and Budpath, by Buddy Bauer of Luress and owned by Harry Hatch of Toronto.

There also will be support for such solid performers as Depositor, owned by Medway Stables of London, Ont., Passa Grille, owned by George M. Hendrie of Hamilton, Parkwood Stables' Skyliner and Taffrail, of the J. Frowde Seagram Stable of Waterloo. About 10 or 12 horses are expected to start of 38 nominated April 10.

In addition to the major share of the Ontario Jockey Club's $8,000-added purse, the winner will receive 50 guineas traditionally donated by the King.

Heavyweight champion Joe Louis isn't the only fighter in the family. In Columbus, Ohio, champion Joe has a first cousin, Jack (Buddy) Walker, who is a pretty fair country heavyweight in his own right. As a matter of fact Buddy Walker is the heavyweight champion of Ohio State and has only lost two bouts in 38 as a professional. "I guess cousin Joe and I just about have this heavyweight championship business all tied up and in the bag," Walker told newsboys recently. "Joe may be champion of the world, but he better not include Ohio in that "world picture" until he sees me about it," cautioned cousin Buddy Walker. In the meantime Louis is touring around the country preparing for his next "bum-a-month" bout with the sport experts crying "he is slipping." Actually this would seem like so much wishful thinking, that is unless champion Joe meets up with cousin Buddy and literally hands the title over, which doesn't seem to be in the cards as long as Joe can be spppiled with the present crop of "push-overs", even if his financial take is far below that of the average champion.

Another baseball stronghold passed out of existence in the Central Ontario zone over the week end when it was announced that the Lake Shore (intermediate) Baseball League would not function in 1941 and perhaps would remain inactive for the duration of the war. The passing of the Lake Shore league terminates the exodus of baseball from Toronto to Napanee, with the possible exception of the North Hastings League, that may function later in the season, Secretary Al Brown of the Lake Shore loop, announced that no entries had been received to encourage the continuance of the Lake Shore League, thus he and President Roy Dodge had no alternative than to abandon any thoughts of operation. Port Hope signified intentions of sponsoring an intermediate league even after Cobourg and Bowmanville tossed in the sponge. Oshawa and Peterboro were both contacted relative to entering the league, but failed to respond. Had the two larger cities rallied around President Dodge and given him some support, there is little doubt but that a summer's sport in baseball might have been saved. But they didn't.

The trend of sporting activities in different communities is interesting to follow, especially the fluctuation. Take in Kingston for instance — a few years ago softball all but put baseball out of business. Today baseball is back as the chief reigning summer team sport, while the softballers are finding their road rather rough, which can be determined through the reports of Scribe Bill Walshe. In reporting a recent softball meeting in Kingston, Scribe Bill says: "Efforts were made to organize the major series of the Kingston Softball Association last night but with only two entries it was impossible to make any progress until it was decided that the association will form a team. Models and Motors and the association team will form a three-club circuit, which does not sound so interesting, although a good season may result if the clubs are well matched. The softballers will play their games on Tuesday and Thursday nights at Victoria Park, a change from their usual nights.

For years softball provided the main summer team sport in Kingston, often attracting thousands to games, but with the veterans dropping out of the game and no replacements the league gradually ran out of talent and teams. It may take a year or so to rebuild the game but plans have been made to operate minor leagues this summer to produce players for the future."

All of the teams in the City Softball League will appear in natty new softball uniforms this season. For instance the Reliance nine will trot out in new-fangled silken shirts, Corbys are sticking to the old green and scarlet, while S. A. Co. and the Esquire Juniors have adopted blue and white, but with different designs, the Esquire kids' sweaters being designed in a diagonal pattern. Plans to have civic dignitaries participate in the opening of the softball season on Wednesday are being arranged by President Clem Bowler, when the city loop gets away to its earliest start since inception. No official announcement as to the starting batteries for the league's opener has been suggested from either camp, but it is expected that Archie Major will start on the mound for the Reliance with Alfie Rowbotham on the receiving end, while elongated Ralph Campbell and Bradden will be the logical choice for the Esquire juniors battery pair. Such hockey celebrities as Johnnie Hamilton, Bill Hastie, Tabby Gow and Carl Hewitt are also included on the Reliance roster.

Holding their first stockholders' meeting recently, the new owners of the Boston National League club retained Bob Quinn as president and decided to abandon the nickname of Bees, returning to the name of Braves.

The decision for the readoption of the old nickname was gratifying to Quinn, although in January, 1936, shortly after becoming president, he asked the public to select a new moniker to replace that of Braves. More than 12,000 fans suggested 1,327 names, and Quinn appealed [illegible] Boston baseball writers to serve [illegible] selective committee. They [illegible] Bees.

In moving pictures taken by himself. Bill Lang gave a demonstration of the finer art of angling that proved both educational and instructive to those paramountly interested in the art of casting. Mr. Lang came to Belleville at the request of Joe Shortt, President of the Belleville Angler's Club and staged a complete show of angling and nature study pictures with all receipts going to the Belleville Boys' Camp at Moira Lake, a gesture that should not go without commendation. Bill Lang is accepted as the best fly casting expert in Ontario, yes perhaps in the whole Dominion, and his lectures are eagerly received by anglers all up and down the continent.

School Board Hears Delegations Urging P. C. MacLaurin Be Retained As Principal of Belleville Collegiate

Delegations representing teachers of the Belleville Collegiate and Vocational School and the Kiwanis Club on Monday evening waited upon the Board of Education at a special session held to permit these bodies to make what representations they might on the recent action of the Board in declaring the principalship of the Belleville Collegiate vacant at the close of the school year in June. The spokesmen for these organizations made an appeal to the Board to reconsider the matter and urged the retention of Principal MacLaurin as principal. Up to recently Mr. MacLaurin has also been teaching on the staff and the Board had reached the conclusion that the two positions should not be held by one person.

Teachers Present Statement

The teachers, through Mr. K. S. Hill, presented a statement on the school situation, and also a letter signed by teachers which was intended for the Board but which officially did not reach the Board for some reason until last night when it was embodied in the teachers' statement. Other teachers took part in the discussion with members of the Board. Rev. A. B. Payne, chairman of the School Management Committee, and Rev. W. J. Walker detailed events which had led up to the recent action of the Board. Members of the Kiwanis Club through Alderman O. Butler made an appeal for reconsideration in order to have the services of Mr. MacLaurin retained in the principalship. High tribute was paid to Mr. MacLaurin in the two capacities of teacher and principal.

Meeting Lasts 3 Hours

The meeting lasted for about three hours and after the hearing of delegations, the Board adjourned.

The entire Board was present, Chairman H. B. Fetterly, Rev. W. J. Walker, Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne, Percy McGuire, C. Crosby, Col. E. A. Geen, B. C. Sisler, W. Harrison, F. Cushing and J. H. Legate. Teachers present were K. S. Hill, R. Davidson, D. Bews, L. A. Shiels and A. D. Archibald. Members of the Kiwanis Club delegation were J. Barclay, president, O. Butler, Bruce Lattimer, Frank Domenico, J. W. Imlah, H. Fox, Bruce Bottum, Harold Carruthers, Frank Follwell, E. I. Shapiro.

Suggests Misunderstanding as Cause

"A situation has arisen, due, we think to a misunderstanding," said Mr. Kenneth S. Hill who first spoke for the teachers of the school. "We are here to discuss this situation in a conciliatory manner with the members of the Board."

He pointed out that "everyone is living today under more or less tension. We may think we are acting as in normal peace time, but the strain is there...We feel frustrated in not being able to take an active part in this war as a number of us did in the last war. We are likely to say and do things on the spur of the moment, which in calm consideration we regret. If any teachers have made hasty and inconsiderate remarks under emotional strain during the past two weeks we wish them to be considered as not having been said."

Problems From Past

Mr. Hill then turned to the issue: "We are old members of the staff and have an intimate knowledge of the internal management of a school. In our judgment this situation has developed as a result of problems that should have been dealt with and settled in the past.

The reports from the Inspectors of the Department of Education gave the Collegiate Institute an excellent rating. The report on the Vocational School contained a statement to the effect that the Shop Director, Mr. Ferguson had been hampered in his efforts by lack of co-operation on the part of the Principal, Mr. MacLaurin. We, as teachers, recognizing by close observation that at last the trouble tending to undermine the discipline of the school had come to the attention of the Board and realizing that, as teachers of the school, it was our duty to see that the blame was placed where it belonged, held a meeting and unanimously decided that the Board be informed of the teachers' reaction to the report.

Letter Signed by Teachers

"A letter was drawn up and signed by the members of the staff who were aware of the situation, and sent to the Board on November 27, 1940. The teachers received no acknowledgment of this letter, nor any encouragement to believe that their protest was considered. The letter is as follows:

"To the Chairman of the Board of Education:

We, the undersigned teachers on the staff of the Belleville Collegiate Institute and Vocational School, having been informed of the Vocational Inspectors' report, respectfully request the privilege of commenting on one section thereof.

It has been said that the Shop Director has been hampered in his efforts by lack of co-operation on the part of the Principal.

We feel that in arriving at this conclusion the Inspectors have failed to acquaint themselves with the facts, and feel that it is our duty as employees of the Board of Education to bring these facts to the notice of the Board.

Contrary to the assertion of failing to co-operate with the Shop Director it is the observation of the undersigned, that the Principal has, in the face of many irritating circumstances, accorded the Shop Director all the courtesies, and honours, both social and professional, due him in his position of Shop Director, and instead of hampering the Shop Director, has assisted sympathetically in the promotion of shopwork in the school.

We feel that in accepting the unsupported criticism of the Principal, the Inspectors have acted hastily and unfairly.

Belleville, November 27, 1940".

Mr. Hill said: "Possibly, as has been suggested, the teachers, as employees of the Board of Education, were remiss in their duty in not having pressed further by insisting on an interview with the Board to bring information before the Board, which, at the time, we felt would have been beneficial to the internal management of the school and would have helped to prevent the present situation arising. However, let the responsibility rest where it may, we are of the opinion that this matter should be cleared up now. Furthermore, we think that the action of the Department in splitting the authority in the school has aggravated what was already an untenable situation.

"According to the statement of the Board in the press, Mr. MacLaurin was dismissed as Principal because he failed to comply with the order of the Board to stop teaching at Easter. It is within our certain knowledge that Mr. MacLaurin had every intention of complying with the Board's request. We feel he would have been unfair to his senior pupils had he not reviewed the examination papers, which Mr. MacLaurin told the Board he had been doing.

Ready to Discuss Facts

"We feel that this issue is of minor importance compared with the divided administration of authority in the school. We are prepared to discuss with you facts which we honestly believe should be openly dealt with, and we trust that you will feel free to ask us any questions having a bearing on the welfare of the school. We hope that your conclusion from an open discussion will result in the reinstatement of Mr. MacLaurin".

Letter Did Not Reach Board

Rev. W. J. Walker said he was not a member of the Board last year and that older members claimed that this letter had never got to the Board. This point should be cleared up, he remarked.

Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne stated "I was a member of the Board last year. There are times when letters are retarded. This letter of Nov. 12th., 1940, has reached the Board of Education on the twelfth of May 1941 for the first time. This is the first intimation we have heard except for the fact that I made it my business to inquire about this letter". Mr. Payne went on to say that everyone has the privilege of approaching the board and the teaching staff had this privilege. "Whatever means they employed of sending it did not function. What happened to your letter after you wrote it?" he asked Mr. Hill.

The latter replied that to his knowledge the letter was addressed to the Chairman of the Board.

Mr. Payne asked if it passed through His Majesty's Mail.

Mr. Hill said he knew of two copies, one to the chairman and one to the committee chairman. "I would not say how it was sent".

Mr. Payne: "The secretary of the Board never received that letter". He said that certain members of the Board recalled the Principal coming in with a letter to the vocational board meeting and referring to it. But the letter was never turned over to the chairman and secretary. "So you gentlemen may understand I was much surprised when I heard of it".

Mr. Douglas W. Bews, of the B.C.I. and V.S. staff declared "we had five copies made. Mr. MacLaurin was given a copy".

Mr. Payne: "A two cent stamp would have cleared up the whole of this".

Chairman Fetterly: "I was a member of the Board last year. This Board had no knowledge of such a letter".

Mr. Payne: "It is a very grave pity it did not reach the Board".

Mr. Walker turned to the report and criticism from the inspector on the school and of the Board's letter in reply to F. S. Rutherford of the Department of Education. The board's letter was approved by Mr. MacLaurin.

Mr. Bews said that Mr. MacLaurin was a man of peace and "took an awful lot."

Mr. Walker read the reply from the department dated March 6th to the board's letter sent February 17, 1941. In the department's reply there was mention made of the criticism of condition of corridors and of boys smoking on the steps of the school and that these boys were not the adult pupils referred to in the board's letter.

Mr. Bews referred to another letter which he said, seemed to hinge on the case. Is it not strange that such key letters should not reach their destination? he asked. He said he knew Mr. MacLaurin was prepared not to teach after Easter and that he was expecting a letter from the board which he never received in answer to Mr. MacLaurin's letter.

Mr. Payne said that unfortunately the lost key letters seemed to hinge about one point. The letter of the teaching staff never reached the board. That addressed to Mr. MacLaurin was a reply to his request for permission to continue teaching classes up to Easter, telling that his request had been granted on the understanding that after that he was to devote his attention to administration. This letter had been directed to Mr. MacLaurin and Mr. MacLaurin did not receive it. Mr. Payne stated that Mr. MacLaurin had searched his office and been unable to find the letter.

Mr. Bews said that he thought Mr. MacLaurin was justified in requesting a letter. He added: "We think that Mr. MacLaurin would has been very remiss in his duty if he had not taken up the examination papers. That is the purpose of examinations."

Mr. Payne referred to a letter from Mr. MacLaurin asking for recommendations in writing as to his duties as administrator or principal. "In our talks it was agreed that the two jobs of teacher and principal must be separated," Mr. Payne said.

Reference was made to an inspector's report of 1931 wherein it was contended that the work of teaching left no time for supervision of the teaching staff and that the conditions of the dual office here were unparalleled for a school of the size.

A departmental report in 1939 referring to the number of teaching periods Mr. MacLaurin had stated that his experience could be made very valuable to members of his staff.

Academic Record of School

Mr. Payne stated that the Board had been blamed by the Department of Education for the fact that the principal was teaching. Mr. Payne said that the academic record of the school is second to none, it is excellent. Mr. MacLaurin likes teaching and is looked upon as one of the best.

Mr. Payne went on, "I have defended Mr. MacLaurin but it is a fact that he has been asked again and again to give up teaching and assume the task of administration. Mr. Walker and I went to Mr. MacLaurin and gave him his choice—at the same salary—of teaching or the principalship."

It was decided to have Mr. MacLaurin carry on as principal. Then Mr. MacLaurin asked if he could carry on classes to the end of the teaching year. Mr. Payne said: "No, you must end teaching at Easter." Mr. MacLaurin, he said, asked if the Board had any definite plan for administration and Mr. Payne said, No, that he would not tell him what to do? That was his job.

Mr. Frank Cushing asked if any definite instructions had been given to the Principal to give up teaching. The question, he remarked, had arisen casually and not until this year did the board have a collective opinion in following out the inspectors' recommendations.

Mr. William Harrison stated in 1934 or 1935 the Board instructed Mr. MacLaurin to quit teaching. He did but after a while he asked to be allowed to take a period or so a day and was granted permission.

Mr. Payne asked if any definite instructions were given the Principal.

Col. E. A. Geen said "Yes."

Rev. Mr. Walker said he was chairman of the committee to meet with Mr. MacLaurin and Mr. Ferguson. Mr. Walker read from the report on conditions which had been complained of

Question of Discipline

The point was raised that there was a lack of discipline and that this could be remedied if Mr. MacLaurin took up the principalship alone. The committee told Mr. McLaurin it had received information or certain complaints from citizens. These complaints were that students in fair weather were found on Front Street in school hours lazying around the grounds of St. Thomas' Church, that some went into pool rooms and ice cream parlors in school hours, that some students did not show proper respect for teachers.

It was pointed out at this meeting that there was a suggestion that some teachers waste too much pupils' time in classes.

In reference to visiting class rooms, Mr. Walker said that Mr. MacLaurin shot back "I am not going to spy on my teachers." Mr. Walker told him it would not be spying to drop in a class and that it might be of invaluable aid to some teachers particularly young teachers to have such visits made.

The committee at this meeting with the principal brought up the complaints that some pupils wrote notes for others.

Mr. Walker stated that the Principal remarked the Board was listening to a lot of children's stories.

Mr. Walker said Mr. MacLaurin stated that it was not fair to the class for him to drop the teaching and he asked if he could teach up to Easter and it was pointed out to the Principal that the Board attitude was, no teaching at the end of Easter vacation.

Mr. Bews stated that he did not think it fair that Mr. MacLaurin should take all the blame. Mr. Bews said that he himself had taken cigarettes out of the mouths of boys on the school steps.

Mr. Walker stated as his opinion that Mr. MacLaurin seemed to have a feeling of resentment about the board.

The Board Praised by Mr. Payne

Mr. Payne said: "This Board of Education ever since I have known it has as a body exhibited no political color, neither has it revealed any church or religious color. Personally I am not acquainted with the religious attitudes of the members of the staff. This board has reached its conclusions in an unbiased way. There has been no personal element, no political attitude, no religious element."

Chairman Fetterly: "I think the members have placed the situation in a very clear light and I think our conclusions are absolutely justified. There is no politics entering into what we do. Neither is there a religious basis. The Board is determined to have efficiency. I think everyone on the Board will agree that this is the case.

Mr. Bews: "We quite agree. But I think with the new evidence and a great deal more than we can bring. I think the Board will see that there is a peaceful conclusion of this trouble."

Kiwanis Appeal

President J. Barclay of the Kiwanis Club represented by a large number of members called on Kiwanian O. Butler to address the board on behalf of the delegation. Ald. Butler said that "we feel Mr. MacLaurin should be given some consideration, not that he has not been given any.

"It appears to me that there is a wealth of confusion about these two letters. We have a pretty good impression that the teachers favor Mr. MacLaurin being retained as Principal. I understand that Mr. MacLaurin is willing to not teach any more. The board, I take it, has agreed that Mr. MacLaurin is qualified for either, teacher or principal."

Ald. Butler referred to what appeared to be the reason for the board's action and the present situation and Rev. Mr. Walker said that Mr. MacLaurin said he was teaching after Easter and that he was going over examinations. Mr. Walker stated that Mr. MacLaurin had been informed of the attitude of the board on four separate occasions.

Ald. Butler suggested that this was the first time the board had taken initiative in the situation once and for all about the two positions.

Mr. Walker interjected to say that Mr. MacLaurin stated that he had been "fired" by the board before.

Mr. Payne stated that it was not the first time the board had taken action.

Notes Past Incidents

Ald. Butler: "The board had let it go in the past." If he did take up examination paper and specified it as teaching the speaker thought he should be given credit for that. Mr. Butler asked if the principal was not justified in asking for specific instructions.

Mr. Butler closed by saying, "In the light of his record as a citizen, he should be given his opportunity for carrying out the duties of principal. Mr. MacLaurin's qualifications are not a bit in the wanting. The Kiwanis Club appreciates what the board has done in hearing the case."

Mr. Walker asked in face of the fact that some years ago Principal MacLaurin stopped teaching and took it up again, who would guarantee if the matter were reconsidered that Mr. MacLaurin would devote his energy to administrative duties alone?

He added that there was an opinion that Mr. MacLaurin will retire in four years and said there is no need of his retiring as long as the Board wants him.

Teachers Address Board

Mr. A. D. Archibald of the B.C.I. and V.S. staff appealed to the Board to reconsider the decision. "We as teachers will back Mr. MacLaurin and back you. If you get a new principal you will have to go back farther. You will never have undivided authority."

Mr. R. Davidson of the teaching staff backed up the plea for a reconsideration. "We only ask, he said, "if you will reconsider your decision and give Mr. MacLaurin and us the opportunity of carrying out the work you suggest."

Mr. L. Shiels of the B.C.I. and V.S. teaching staff also spoke to the Board on matters concerning school organization.

Mr. E. Shapiro, of the Kiwanis Club, said he thought any board could reconsider a problem when it found public opinion and sentiment was strong. He appealed to the board to reconsider its action and retain Mr. MacLaurin as principal.

Rev. Mr. Payne after the delegations had been heard, noted "the Board has been ready and it is always ready to give out information to any responsible body or individuals when they come to the proper source.

"In the body of the report of a meeting organized by the student body the Board was criticized when we did not appear at that meeting.

"The Board has always been given full information. I am sure the press will appreciate why we did not go into the meeting. There is nothing held back."

Mr. Payne said he and Col. Geen were in Kingston attending the Synod at the time.

The chairman, Mr. Fetterly, said "The Student Council is an organization I never heard of previous to a week ago. I quite agree with Mr. Payne in respect to the students' meeting. Members of the board were out of town at that time," he declared.

Mediterranean Battle Fleet Repels Most Determined Nazi Torpedo Attacks Of The War

By LARRY ALLEN
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Aboard the Flagship Warspite with the Mediterranean Fleet, May 13 (AP)—Britain's Mediterranean battle fleet, escorting a large war convoy, arrived back at its Egyptian base today after having repelled one of the most determined Nazi night torpedo bombing attacks of the war.

The entire fleet, undamaged despite Italian radio claims to the contrary, splashed leisurely to anchorage with its personnel satisfied that some of Hermann Goering's German aces had seen more fire than ever before.

Six times Saturday night Nazi planes tried to penetrate one of the heaviest anti-aircraft barrages ever fired from ships. Each time they were turned back by the bursts of flame and metal.

Score after score of shells from six-inch, 4.5 and four-inch guns and pom-pom batteries whizzed over the water, aimed at the low-flying targets that were manoeuvring desperately to get close enough to shove torpedoes into the battleships, cruisers and destroyers escorting the convoy.

Aboard this flagship, I saw one of the greatest fireworks display ever belched from naval guns during the 75-minute attack. It made the light of a brilliant moon look like a glimmering star, finally forcing the German squadron to speed to its Sicilian or Libyan bases, dropping torpedoes and bombs harmlessly into the sea.

Scout Planes Shadow Fleet

Scout planes began shadowing the fleet as it moved quietly through the moonlit waters between the Island of Crete and the Libyan coast near dusk Saturday evening. Suddenly there appeared a formation of 12 aircraft, clinging to the clouds and awaiting an opportune moment to pounce.

The Nazis received the surprise they had planned for the British ships.

Swiftly, as darkness settled and the silvery moon silhouetted the ships of the convoy, the Nazis dropped out of the skies and skimmed over the sea, heading for the first ships in the line.

Instantaneously, six-inch and four-inch shells from cruisers and destroyers on the starboard side of the flagship split the night with a wall of fire that forced the Nazis to climb swiftly from range and withhold their torpedoes.

Changing their tactics, the Germans flew head-on into the line of battleships, again swooping low. This flagship opened fire with all her six-inch guns and smaller armament. Huge, jagged flashes made her look as if she were afire from stern to bow. "Flaming onions," resembling multi-colored popcorn balls, streaked into the pathway of the torpedo-bombers.

This thunderous barrage caused the Nazis to shift their attentions to the battleships Barham and Valiant. Fire then gushed from their guns as thousands of shells peppered the raiders, bursting above like Roman candles. The Warspite's guns continued to roar deafeningly.

Turned For Home

Finally giving up their hope of getting within torpedo range, the fliers dropped their torpedoes and bombs in the vicinity of a group of destroyers and turned for home to re-load and re-fuel.

After midnight they came back, hopping over the battle fleet this time in an effort to get at the convoyed ships. But they met another terrific barrage and fled again without inflicting any damage.

This was but one operation during a week in which the fleet steadily escorted convoys eastward through the Mediterranean. In that period fighters of the fleet air arm shot down a half-dozen Axis planes, including both German and Italian. Several others were damaged as they sought to approach convoys.

The fleet's destroyers dropped several depth charges on submarines operating near convoys, but results were not known.

Change In Nazi Strategy Shows Br. Raids Hurt

(By KIRKE L. SIMPSON)

Washington, May 13 —(AP)—Bomb-blasted Britons can find solace in two developments.

One is the reported rising toll of Nazi planes brought down by Royal Air Force night fighters. The other is a virtual admission from Berlin that sustained British bombing of such targets as Hamburg and Bremen has forced at least a temporary shift in German aerial tactics.

This admission is implicit in the stress laid in Berlin on its claim that on Sunday night a score of British bomber fields in Eastern and Central England were blasted.

The German pounding of London the previous night was obviously pure retaliation. It was in line with Hitler's often repeated boast that he would return British bomb attacks on German population centres with four-fold interest or more. But unless it could break British morale it had no great military significance and both that raid and the subsequent German blasting of British bomber air fields represented a significant departure in Nazi air strategy.

Counter-Attack Effective.

Increasingly through April and May German night raids have been focussed on ports and shipbuilding targets in the West of England. The purpose has been plain. It has been to supplement the Nazi sea attack in the Atlantic by preventing the landing of war supplies from the United States and by crippling British shipbuilding and ship repair plants.

Censorship hides the effectiveness of that Nazi campaign, and of the British bombing of Hamburg, Bremen and other Nazi ports which are submarine and ship-construction centres.

It seems certain however, that Nazi concentration on British air fields means that the Royal Air Force counter-attack is proving effective. If that were not so, the Germans surely would take advantage of the special opportunity these moonlight nights afford to press home the progressive blasting of west coast targets.

For it seems clear that, unsupplemented by the air offensive against English ports and ship yards, the German blockade in the Atlantic will not bring early strangulation of Britain's war effort.

Inroads in U-Boat Strength

Of nearly 500,000 tons of British-used shipping lost in April, according to Admiralty figures, 187,000 tons were sunk in the Mediterranean incident to the Balkan war, and some 300,000 in other waters, including the Atlantic.

That 300,000 represents a slight but not critical rise in the previous average weekly ship losses of the war, set at around 68,000 tons.

Furthermore, there have been hints from the British Admiralty recently that important inroads were being made at sea on Nazi U-boat strength, though no information as to the number sunk has been forthcoming. Nor can any accurate estimate be made of how effective British bombing has been in putting U-boats out of commission at refuelling and rest bases on the invasion coast of the continent.

There seems little doubt, however that the stepped-up British counter-bombing has compelled some revision of Nazi tactics. The concentrated attack on British bomber bases indicates that. It also indicates that Nazi night-fighter equipment and technique is not adequate to cope with the British air offensive. Even by Berlin figures, the Nazis are unable to match the British feat of bringing down 10 per cent of enemy bombers making night raids.

Churchill Outlines Beaverbrook's Duties

London, May 13.— (CP)— Prime Minister Churchill today described to the House of Commons the new duties of Lord Beaverbrook, recently named Minister of State.

In reply to a question he said:—

"The Minister of State will discharge general cabinet duties and special duties assigned to a member of the Defence Committee of the War Cabinet.

"The Defence Committee works in two sections: Defence Committee operations and Defence Committee Supply. In the future the Lord Privy Seal (Clement Attlee) will act as deputy chairman of the former, and the Minister of State as Deputy Chairman of the latter.

AT THE BELLE

"You're The One"

Introducing the famous radio combination of Bonnie Baker and Orrin Tucker and his orchestra to screen audiences for the first time, Paramount's newest comedy musical, "You're the One," is now on the Belle screen. It is easily one of the funniest and most entertaining pictures of this season's new crop.

Bonnie, with her little girl's voice that lilts provocatively, and bandleader Tucker prove to be a charming screen pair. Aided by a highly amusing story, and a first-rate cast, including Jerry Colonna, Lillian Cornell, Albert Dekker, Edward Horton and Teddy Hart the film goes into high gear and stays there throughout.

The story is about Bonnie's efforts to sing with Albert Dekker's orchestra. Dekker, whose tastes run to blondes goes to Colonna's weight-reducing sanitarium, to shrink his girth in order to get a radio spot sponsored by the maker of a non-fattening food product. Dyeing her hair from brunette to blonde, Bonnie and her agent, Edward Everett Horton, pursue Dekker to the screwy sanitarium, which is run like a night club by Colonna and his lovely nurse, Lillian Cornell, who sings and dances.

There, she meets Tucker, who is in charge of entertainment. Bonnie had managed to get a short engagement at Dr. Colonna's sanitarium. Tucker recognizes Bonnie, now a glamour girl, as the sweet little girl he once loved. He resents the change in her. Still in love with him, Bonnie finally explains the glamour-girl act to his satisfaction.

Some of the catchy melodies presented in the delightful picture are "Strawberry Lane," "I Could Kiss You For That," "You're the One" and "Gee, I wish I'd Listened to My Mother."

Charlie Chan, Mystery

Charlie Chan tangles with deadly spies in the case of the sabotaged stratosphere bomber!

That's the situation in the latest picture from 20th Century-Fox, "Murder Over New York" the added gripping mystery feature attraction.

Chan, ably played again by Sidney Toler, matches wits with the deadliest gang of international spies he has ever faced, and for many a moment there is doubt that even Chan can solve the murders.

Highlighting the superlative story is the outstanding cast which includes such outstanding screen names as Marjorie Weaver, Robert Lowery, Ricardo Cortez and many others.

The thrilling climax is superlatively staged in a speeding bomber miles up in the air over New York, and Chan matches his will power with the master saboteur in a sequence audiences won't soon forget.

Also featured in the supporting cast are Donald MacBride, Melville Cooper, Joan Valerie, Kane Richmond and Sen Yung. "Murder Over New York" was based on the character "Charlie Chan," created by Earl Derr Biggers.

The Belle news of the day will also be exhibited.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Vivacious Lady"

The troubles that beset a young college professor and his night-club bride on returning to his staid home town and mid-Victorian parents, form the basis of "Vivacious Lady", in which Ginger Rogers and James Stewart, Academy Award winners, are co-starred and the picture that is now appearing at Capitol.

Stewart is cast as a botany instructor in a small university who visits New York in quest of his playboy cousin, James Ellison. The latter is on his semi-annual big-city spree, and this time he is engaged in a sit-down strike at a night-club for the purpose of winning the attention of Ginger Rogers, featured entertainer.

Stewart finds his pleasure-bent cousin, but in so doing he falls desperately in love with the beautiful dancer and singer, who, amazingly enough, is similarly attracted to this serious-thinking young professor. A dizzy, whirlwind courtship of several hours is climaxed with their sudden marriage.

When the trio returns to the sedate college town, a unique problem confronts them. Stewart is afraid to tell his puritanical father, who is president of the university, that he has married a night-club entertainer, so Ginger Rogers masquerades as Ellison's friend. Ellison likewise being in love with her, hilarious complications arise, with Stewart's former fiancee, Frances Mercer, doing her part to further entangle the affair. When the secret marriage becomes known and Stewart's stern parents convinces the young lady that she will ruin his son's career, a dramatic as well as amusing climax is reached, with everyone involved ending up in a mad celebration in New York!

Charles Coburn, Beulah Bondi, Phyllis Kennedy and Alec Craig are also seen in prominent supporting roles in "Vivacious Lady", an RKO Radio production directed by George Stevens.

On the same progam is a fast moving action drama, "A Fugitive From Justice", featuring Roger Pryor and Lucile Fairbanks, a niece of Douglas Fairbanks. For thrills and a story that is highly original and different from the usual run of pictures, see "A Fugitive From Justice"". The latest edition of the popular new series "Information Please" completes the bill.

BENGASI HARBOR PEPPERED BY TONS OF SHELLS

Cruiser-Destroyer Squadron Led by Ajax Shells Ships Anchored at Docks

2 SHIPS SUNK

By LARRY ALLEN
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Aboard a flagship with the British Mediterranean Fleet, May 13 —(AP)— A cruiser - destroyer squadron swept into mine-strewn Bengasi harbor, Libya, and hurled perhaps 100 tons of high explosive shells into that Axis base last Wednesday night.

Striking this new blow at Nazi-Fascist attempts to reinforce their lines in Cirenaica, Eastern Libya, the cruiser Ajax, one of the vanquishers of the Admiral Graf Spee, led four destroyers in a shelling of ships anchored alongside the Bengasi mole.

Illuminating the targets with starshells, the squadron scored direct hits, setting ablaze two merchantmen, and then peppered the entire harbor area.

The Ajax, which helped to drive the Admiral Graf Spee to her destruction by scuttling in Montevideo harbor on Dec. 17, 1939, and the four accompanying destroyers turned away from Bengasi after drawing fire from shore batteries.

On the way out they intercepted two heavily-laden merchantmen approaching the harbor and guns of the five British craft barked simultaneously.

Ammunition Ship Explodes

One of the Axis ships, a 6,000-tonner loaded with ammunition, blew up with a thunderous explosion when shells penetrated to her main magazine. Bits of the blasted vessel were hurled over a wide expanse of the sea and the area for miles around was lighted by a sheet of flame.

Then the British warships turned on the second Axis vessel, pouring 100 shells into her and started a series of explosions that hurled tanks, trucks and other vehicles into the air from her decks. The fiercely burning vessel then ran aground.

None of the British ships were hit.

Standing aboard this flagship I saw the squadron detached for the Bengasi attack during a Mediterranean swing and it joined the main fleet the following day, signalling to the Commander in Chief the success of its foray.

The "Cinc" messaged the destroyer: "Did you have an amusing time?"

The reply was flashed back: "Yes, a whole lorry passed overhead."

J. G. Gardiner, Agriculture Minister.

The order setting minimum prices was issued by the Dairy Products Board and will be effective immediately.

Under the order, the minimum price of butter increase to a top, reached in October of 32 cents a pound for British Columbia and Eastern Provinces, 30 cents in Albert and Manitoba and 29 cents in Saskatchewan.

News Of Hess' Flight Likely To Shake Morale Of Prisoners

Toronto May 13 (CP)—Col. H. R. Stethem, Director of interment operations in Canada, said today "we shall be very much interested" in seeing the reaction of German war prisoners and civilian internees to the news that Rudolf Hess had flown to Scotland.

"It will be a terrific blow to their constantly-repeated belief that England will be captured in July," Col. Stethem said. "For if Rudolf Hess felt that England would be captured, he would hardly have fled there—he would have gone to almost any neutral country, where his departure would have not been so unmistakably a desertion."

Col. Stethem said the prisoners and internees would see the papers next Monday or Tuesday because they are held up several days before being distributed among the camps.

BANCROFT

Bancroft, May 13 (Special)—Mrs. E. Hagerman and daughter Dorothy motored to Madoc Tuesday to attend the funeral of the late Miss Merle Groves.

Mr. G. H. Brown of town motored to Toronto Tuesday on a business trip.

Mrs. Clarence Marston left for Toronto Tuesday where she will spend a few days in the city visiting with relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilmot Hamilton and son Arthur of Victoria Lake, near Madawaska, arrived in town Tuesday spending over night at the home of their daughter, Mrs. Harold Skuce.

FORMER NO. 2 HEIR,

Hess did a fine job of flying for one accused of hallucinations. He reached Scotland from Augsburg, Bavaria, under cover of darkness, hunted for a place to set down his fast Messerschmitt-110 and, failing that, bailed out while the plane crashed in a streak of flying wreckage.

First Break Says Cooper

A farmer, armed with a pitchfork, found him beside the folds of his parachute, with an injured leg and took him in.

The Minister of Information, Alfred Duff Cooper, told a luncheon meeting today, that "I can only say that his arrival here shows the first breach in the Nazi party that has occurred since Hitler murdered a huge bloc of his own followers on June 10, 1934."

This was a reference to the "blood purge" in which Hess helped execute Hitler's orders as one of the oldest and most faithful of Nazi followers. Hess was Hitler's amanuensis in the writing of Mein Kampf in Landsberg Prison. He rose to become his personal representative for party affairs, minister without portfolio in Hitler's inner circle. Hitler named him at the outset of the war as his second choice for succession to the Nazi leadership, after Marshal Hermann Goering, in the event of Hitler's death.

May Use Propaganda

Germany indicated she expected Britain to make full propaganda use of Hess. The Germans would know how to handle a similar situation if it fell to him.

Foremost in the rumors linked with Hess' dramatic advent was that he had said he brought important information about the German Air Force.

This seemed counter to the declaration of one informed source that Hess came in defiance of the Nazi regime and had no special mission.

By No Means Unwelcome

Mr. Duff Cooper said that whatever Hess' "qualities may be," his "rather unexpected arrival in this country as a guest" is "by no means unwelcome."

The Information Minister said Hess was an intimate of Hitler and "a man who obviously is in possession of his faculties" since he preferred "to leave that unhappy and miserable country and fly at tremendous risk to himself in order to land in what is still a country of the free."

Discussing the question of why Hess wanted to escape from Germany, one British source presumed that his decision resulted from disagreement with other prominent Nazis and what the British spokesman called "the unbearable revulsion at associating with other members of the gang."

This informant added that Hess knew that if he had gone to a neutral country instead of parachuting on to a Scottish Moor, as he did last Saturday night while his Messerschmitt crashed, he would have been in imminent danger of being "bumped off" by Nazi agents.

Hess has been seen by doctors who found him sane and healthy, this source said. Hess was identified by Ivone Kirkpatrick, former British Charge D'Affaires in Berlin.

The former No. 2 heir apparent to Hitler is being treated as a prisoner of war.

Rumors Flood Glasgow

Despite the official statement in London that Hess brought no special message, the rumor flood at Glasgow included one that Hess said he possessed certain important information about the Nazi Air force which he wanted to communicate to British officials.

Authoritative sources here said this was not true. At the same time it was emphasized that Hess is sane.

Lord Beaverbrook's Evening Standard said that if Hitler had wanted to use a peace ruse to divide the British people he scarcely would adopt "so clumsy a device" as parachuting Hess down on British soil.

A rift in Nazidom's inner council, which may have vital bearing on the outcome of the war, was envisioned as the government sought the reason behind Hess' fantastic flight.

Suffered Leg Injury

It was stated that Hess was in his right mind and in good health, except for the leg injury he suffered in jumping from his plane, and had not lost his memory.

The information made public today was based on a preliminary report from Kirkpatrick.

Kirkpatrick was in Berlin from 1933 to 1938. He is a close acquaintance of the Nazi leader.

Reporters and photographers were not allowed to see Hess.

Discussing the question of why Hess wanted to escape, London sources said they presumed it resulted from disagreement with other prominent Nazis and 'the unbearable revulsion at associating with other members of the Nazi gang'.

Standard Comments

The Evening Standard declared that "Hitler fed his people on illusions; but illusions, like lies, do not live forever".

"Millions of Germans were deluded to regard the Fuehrer as a great regenerator of a new and noble Germany", the newspaper added, "and no better man could have been selected than the much-beloved Vice-Fuehrer to reveal Hitler for what he is —the enemy of Germany as he is the enemy of all men.

"The terrible myth is stripped bare. The awful legend is killed. It has been stabbed by its first disciple".

Core of Germany Rotten

This, it declared, showed that "the core of Germany is rotten".

Hess was in uniform. So far as was known officially, he made the flight of some 800 miles alone.

A questioner who inquired whether the flight might be a Nazi trick got this reply: "If it is a trick, it is a very strange one".

Hess was said to have bailed out apparently when he ran short of gasoline. It was presumed he chose Scotland because there was less chance of encountering British planes there.

It was recalled that Hess had made one of the principal speeches at Hitler's birthday celebration April 20, aboard the flower-festooned special railway train somewhere behind the Balkan front.

Occupied Peculiar Place

The Standard went on to say that "Herr Hess occupied a peculiar position in the Nazi party".

"He was handicapped neither by the physical idosyncracies of Field Marshal Goering, nor by the mental blemishes of Dr. Goebbels", it said.

"He was in one sense the original Nazi. More than any other of the party leaders, he was the embodiment of the Nazi faith.

"He was supposed to provide a clean, wholesome veneer which covered the intrinsic filth and foulness of Nazism.

"Can it be after all these years that he has seen the light which reveals himself as a great dupe in the greatest tragedy of all time? Has he come to Britain to make amends?"

Speculation in this astonished nation ran riot over the action of the erstwhile Nazi Deputy party leader and member of Hitler's inner cabinet, who floated down on British soil by parachute after a lone-wolf airplane flight from Germany.

Whereabout Kept Secret

It was announced today that Hess had been removed from the Glasgow Hospital where he was treated for a fractured ankle suffered in the leap, but his whereabouts were kept secret.

The government—apparently as puzzled as the man in the street by the riddle dropped so suddenly from the skies—maintained a discreet silence after announcing that a Foreign Office official who had known Hess in Berlin had flown to Glasgow to interview him.

Whatever the motive behind Hess' flight, there was general agreement here that the astounding event would be of aid to the British war effort.

Informed sources expressed belief that the most important aftermath of Hess' action would be its effect on the morale of the German people.

"The defection of a leader whom the German nation was taught to respect and honor will be almost impossible to explain to the German people," one commentator declared.

Expresses Doubt

He expressed doubt that the German public would accept at its face value a Nazi claim hinting that Hess was suffering from a mental disorder.

The explanation advanced by some sections of the Press — and generally regarded here as the most logical—was that Hess had fallen from favor with Hitler and had fled in fear he might be the victim of another purge.

Details of Hess' arrival in Scotland were disclosed late last night in a communique issued to newspaper correspondents at the Ministry of Information.

Statement Issued

The facts outlined in the special statement were simple:—

On Saturday night, British patrols reported that a Messerschmitt 110 fighter plane had crossed the coast of Scotland headed toward Glasgow. A short time later a plane of the same type crashed near Glasgow. A Nazi officer, who had bailed out was found by a farmer in a nearby field, suffering from a broken ankle. Guns in the wrecked plane contained no ammunition.

"The officer was taken to a hospital in Glasgow where he at first gave his name as Horn but later on declared he was Rudolf Hess," the communique said.

Three Observations

The Ministry of Information announced later it had established "beyond all possible doubt" that the officer actually was Hess.

The Ministry did not say specifically that Hess had deserted, but it made three observations of seeming significance:—

1. That Hess, to establish his identity, had brought photographs taken of himself at various times.

2. That he had arrived in a plane which could not possibly carry sufficient fuel for a return trip to Germany.

3. That the Messerschmitt's guns were unloaded.

These facts all seemed to British sources to tell a story of hasty flight, which the German version of Hess' departure did nothing to break down.

Scoff at Intimation

Commentators scoffed at the German intimation that Hess was not in his right mind.

"Propaganda Minister Goebbels may shriek that Hess has delusions, he may try to suggest that Hess is insane," declared the Daily Express. "But this is not like a madman—it is like a resolute man who was prepared to face any hazard, even the Royal Air Force, to reach this country."

Other quarters recalled that Hess has been active in an official capacity recently—which would tend to cast doubt on German reflections on his mental state.

On May 4, Hess appeared in the front rank of Nazi leaders in the Reichstag to hear the latest address by Hitler, sitting next to Foreign Minister Ribbentrop.

Three days before that, in his official capacity as Deputy Party Leader, Hess addressed German workers in the Messerschmitt factory at Augsburg—the point where he began his flight—and congratulated them on their contribution to the war effort.

No Mistake in Identity

It was pointed out here that there are too many men in Britain who knew Hess personally to permit of any mistake concerning the identity of the aviator now lying in a hospital in the Glasgow region.

It was understood that the Foreign Office official who was sent to interview Hess was Ivone Kirkpatrick, First Secretary in the British Embassy in Berlin from 1933 to 1938.

British commentators, casting about for reasons for a rift between Hitler and his chief deputy, said he might have proved too moderate in his views to suit Hitler.

(A London broadcast, heard in New York, referred to Hess as "the only idealist in the Nazi hierarchy.")

Just what disposition will be made of Hess still was uncertain today. It was suggested, however, that he might be interned in Canada with other Nazi prisoners.

NAZI SPOKESMEN

Say Hess Lured Into Trap

"It, however, also is imaginable that in the last analysis Hess intentionally was lured into a trap by the British.

"The entire manner of his procedure confirms in any case the previously stated fact that he suffered from hallucinations. He knew of numerous peace proposals of the Fuehrer which came from deep in his heart better than any one else.

"Apparently he held the idea that he could forestall through personal sacrifice a development which to his mind, would end only with complete destruction of the British Empire.

"Hess, whose field of duty lay exclusively within the party, has not had any clear conception about the execution or even about the consequences of his action as far as is discernible from his notes.

"The National Socialist Party regrets that his idealism fell victim to such fateful delusion. This will not interfere with the continuation of the war against England forced upon the German people.

"It will be carried on until—as the Fuehrer declared in his last speech—the British rulers are overthrown or are ready for peace."

Questions Manner of Flight

A Nazi spokesman asserted the manner of Hess' flight in itself was evidence of mental instability.

"If he were merely running off to England a mentally competent man would have landed as soon as he reached the British coast," the spokesman said.

"Instead of that he flew many miles across British territory in a Messerschmitt 110, which every child in England recognizes as a hostile machine.

"Then he landed at Glasgow, which is a remote city and not a logical objective for a man who was seeking asylum.

"The German attitude must be that it is a clear case of deviation from normal mentality.

"In this connection his intimate acquaintances recall the superstitions to which he was prey. They cannot reconcile with a normal attitude his interest in astrology, palmistry and exotic forms of medical treatment.

"The assumption that his curious conduct, which is a deep personal tragedy, was due to mental disorder is the most charitable view to be taken, and that view will be held in view of present knowledge.

He said Hess' wife, his son and other relatives are free and not involved in his action. However, six adjutants supposed to have had knowledge that Hess had taken up flying contrary to instructions from Hitler, were held.

"There is bound to be a presumption that these adjutants knew he was using a plane," the spokesman went on.

"If they knew that, they were duty-bound to report the fact in view of the Hitler order forbidding him to fly.

"It requires unusual courage on the part of a man in subordinate position to report improper conduct on the part of his chief, but duty nevertheless required that they report the circumstances.

"There's just a chance that some of these adjutants did not know of the Hitler order forbidding Hess to fly, in which event, of course, they are relieved of responsibility."

Whether the incident would be closed with Hitler's assumption of Hess' party functions, as announced today, "depends on what Hess does or what use British propaganda makes of the circumstances," the spokesman said.

Disagree with British Interpretation

German propagandists took issue with the British interpretation of events, which challenged the soundness of Hitler's action in designating a man pronounced mentally incompetent as successor to the party leadership after Goering.

"What happened 18 months ago was that Hess was not promoted to third ranking Nazi," a spokesman said, "but was demoted from second place."

"As deputy to Hitler he would normally have succeeded the Fuehrer. But in view of the abilities and temperaments of the available men, Hitler by formal act chose Goering as his immediate successor.

"From the De Jure point of view this was an incongruous arrangement, but one now shown to have been fully justified. The fact is that Hess was removed from the position which could have made him immediate successor to the Fuehrer."

Spokesmen insisted repeatedly that Hess' spectacular adventure was not a surface indication of something wrong deeper down in the party.

"Intimations abroad that there is to be, some shakeup or purge are idiotic," said a spokesman. "There was no persecution complex involved in Hess' conduct and the Gestapo isn't on the scent of anything."

"He was not troubled by any notion the Gestapo or anyone else was pursuing him," one Nazi spokesman said. "Nothing like a purge of the party or government either was feared by Hess or is in the offing."

Meanwhile, Hitler took over personal direction of the National Socialist Party which Hess had led as Hitler's deputy. Hitler changed the designation of the office, formerly known as the "Office of the Deputy of the Fuehrer," to the "Party Chancellery." Martin Bormann, who has been director of that office, remained in charge.

Remains Unexplained

The disappearance of Hess, Hitler-designated second heir to leadership of the Nazi State, in a forbidden flight remained unexplained in Germany.

Government spokesmen shrugged their shoulders at British announcements he had landed in Scotland by parachute from a Nazi warplane and surrendered.

Newspaper correspondents inquiring about the British announcement were referred to a Nazi party announcement that the party deputy was missing and had left behind a letter interpreted as indicating he was "a victim of hallucinations."

The party statement was printed on the front pages of all Berlin newspapers under identical headlines which said "Rudolf Hess Met With An Accident."

The 47-year-old party deputy, named by Hitler at the start of the war as his heir after Goering, was said to have disappeared after taking off by plane about 6 p.m. last Saturday from Augsburg, Bavaria.

Details Not Given Out

The Nationalist Socialist Party statement last night gave these details:

"Party fellow member Hess, who because of his failing health for years has been strictly forbidden by the Fuehrer to be active in aviation, was able, contrary to these instructions, to acquire an airplane again recently.

"On Saturday, May 10, about 6 p.m., party fellow-member Hess started on a flight at Augsburg from which he has not returned to this day.

"A letter left behind unfortunately shows in its confusion the traces of mental disorder which led to fears that party fellow member Hess was a victim of hallucinations.

"The Fuehrer immediately ordered the arrest of the adjutants of party fellow member Hess who alone knew about those flights, and did not hinder them, and did not report them in spite of the instructions known by them to have been given by the Fuehrer.

"Under those circumstances the National Socialist movement unfortunately must assume that the party fellow member has crashed somewhere on his flight or had (some other) accident."

SHIPPING LOSSES

The sharply-reduced sinkings in the Atlantic, authoritative quarters said, indicated the effectiveness of counter-measures against Hitler's air, surface and undersea weapons.

"There are no signs that the results of the great efforts the enemy is making will enable him to attain the quick victory he needs," one highly-placed informant said.

The losses in the Battle of the Atlantic, plus 187,054 tons of ships lost in the removal of troops from Greece and in other areas of the Mediterranean, made up the April total.

All Included in Figures

British, Allied and neutral vessels in British service were included in the figures.

Since the war's start the Admiralty announced that losses were 1,508 British, Allied and neutral ships totalling 6,127,673 tons for a monthly average of 306,354 tons.

Before the April figures were announced, the previous month's low total was in January, when Britain announced 306,002 tons were lost.

Asked whether Britain could stand these losses for another year, an authoritative source said: "We are facing the situation with anxiety, tempered with confidence."

MARINES CALLED

Among those wounded was Madame Ho Sze-Tao, wife of the police chief of the Japanese-sponsored Nanking administration, and two of her bodyguards.

The shooting began when Madame Ho's car was stopped by International Settlement police for a routine inspection at barbed-wire barricades dividing the Settlement from the adjacent "badlands" area.

Madame Ho's bodyguards were said to have fired the first shots and the Settlement police returned the fire.

VISCOUNT HALIFAX TO MEET MENZIES

Will be Important Conference but Nature is Not Disclosed

Kansas City, May 13 (CP) — Viscount Halifax, British ambassador to the United States, and Prime Minister R. G. Menzies, of Australia, will meet in Chicago, on Thursday for "an important conference," nature of which was not disclosed.

Announcement of the conference was made last night by aides of Lord Halifax, who addressed a public meeting here last night.

The ambassador will conclude a three-day visit here tomorrow night and fly to Chicago. Mr. Menzies is on his way to Australia from conferences with government leaders in London. He conferred with President Roosevelt in Washington yesterday and last week held discussions with Prime Minister Mackenzie King in Ottawa.

Lord Halifax departed from his prepared text several times last night and brought laughter from his audience with comment on the lone-wolf landing of Rudolph Hess, high-ranking Nazi official, who parachuted from a Nazi war plane in which he was flying alone and surrendered to a farmer near Glasgow.

"Perhaps Herr Hess acted as he did because he saw the handwriting on the wall," Lord Halifax said in part.

Vichy Bans Dispatches Of Correspondent For Ten Days Because Of Comments

Vichy, France, May 13 — (AP) — The Petain Government banned John Elliott, New York Herald Tribune correspondent, today from sending out dispatches for the next 10 days for "his comments on the government of which he is a guest and for having been gravely lacking in that courtesy which it is his place to observe."

(In a dispatch yesterday dealing with the observance of Joan of Arc Day, Elliott wrote, in part:—

("The national day of Joan of Arc, Maid of Orleans, who won an immortal niche in history by her refusal to collaborate with the occupying authorities of her country, was celebrated with exceptional fervor in both occupied and 'Free' France today, owing to the similarity between the circumstances of her time and those of the present . . .

("As the English of the 15th century (then the occupying authorities) had their Dukes of Burgundy and their cauchons to do their dirty work for them, so today the Germans have their Marcel Deats and Pierre Lavals.

("Only the Joan of the 20th century has yet to loom on the horizon. It is this national savior that France today is impatiently awaiting.")

The government said it objected to the article on the ground that it was an attack on the person of Marshal Philippe Petain.

Elliott, who took his case up with the United States embassy, said he had been warned that if there was a repetition of the offence his punishment would be more severe. The censors objected to the phrasing of his article, but he insisted and was allowed to send it on his own responsibility.

Lincoln And Welland Regiment To Complete Training In B. C.

Vancouver, May 13—(CP)—Nine hundred officers and men of the First Battalion, Lincoln and Welland Regiment, sailed yesterday on a special steamer for military camp of Nanaimo, B.C., shortly after their arrival here from eastern Canada. Men in the regiment are chiefly from the Niagara Peninsula of Ontario.

They will complete their training at the Vancouver Island camp, taking the place of a coast regiment recently moved.

A drizzling rain met the troops as they left their trains to march through the city to the pier where they embarked for the boat trip, the first such experience for many of them.

Col. C. A. Muir a veteran of the old 4th Battalion (C.E.F.) which distinguished itself at the second battle of Ypres in April, 1915, was in charge of the regiment.

On their arrival at Nanaimo the troops were met by the band of the Irish Fusiliers, a regiment already encamped near the city. They marched through Nanaimo streets to camp behind their combined brass bugle and pipe band.

Toronto, May 13 (C.P.)—Royal Canadian Air Force headquarters here issued a statement last night that the newly-organized medical branch of the R.C.A.F. has openings for a limited number of nursing orderlies in Ontario.

Age limits were listed as from 18 to 50, preferably 18 to 45, with high school entrance the minimum educational requirement.

PURPLE CROSS SERVICE

Canberra (CP)—Despite mechanization, there are still horses and mules in the Australian Imperial forces in the Middle East and units of the "Purple Cross" services operate throughout Australia to send them "first aid."

Scottish Farmer, Armed With Fork, Captures Hess After Parachute Lands

Glasgow, May 13—(CP)—A polite parachutist who surrendered cheerfully to a Scottish farmer armed with a pitchfork turned out to be Rudolph Hess, No. 3 Nazi and now Britain's No. 1 prisoner.

He landed unarmed, chatted for an hour with the farmer, declined tea with his captor's family, then went along with officials for treatment for an ankle fracture suffered in landing.

A Glasgow physician who examined the valuable prisoner—Deputy Leader of the Nazi party and member of Hitler's secret war council—said Hess had with him a stimulant "which he said he was in the habit of carrying when making flights in case he had a heart attack or had to make a parachute landing."

The physician described his preliminary examination as superficial adding that no ailments were disclosed.

The German announcement of Hess' disappearance said Hitler had forbidden him to make flights "because of his failing health."

David McLean, the farmer, said his "pitchfork prisoner" seemed a "man of culture" but "we thought he was just another German airman."

He said he heard a plane roaring overhead, ran from his farm house and saw the plane burst into flames 200 yards away.

"I was amazed and a bit frightened," McLean said, "when I saw the parachute coming slowly downward. I could see a man swinging from the harness. I concluded it was a German airman bailing out and ran back to my house for help. They were all asleep. I looked around for a weapon but found nothing except a hay fork."

Finds Prisoner Docile

Taking that, he dashed into the field, and found his prisoner docile and smiling.

"I helped him to his feet," the farmer recalled. "He thanked me but I could see he'd injured his foot in some way. I helped him into the house. By this time my mother and sister were out of bed and made tea. He declined the tea and smiled when I told him we were very fond of it. He asked for a glass of water.

"We sent word to the authorities and in the meantime he chatted freely to us and showed pictures of his little boy, of whom he spoke very proudly."

McLean said Hess told him his flight from Germany had taken about four hours.

"I could see from the way he spoke that he was a man of culture," McLean said. "His English although it had a foreign accent, was very clear, and he understood every word we said to him.

"He was a very striking-looking man, wearing a magnificent flying suit. His watch and identity bracelet were of gold.

"He wouldn't discuss his journey. He was most anxious about the parachute, which he said he'd like to keep because it saved his life. He wouldn't tell us who he was."

The Day in Parliament

(By The Canadian Press)

TODAY

The House will consider the budget taxation resolutions in committee of Ways and Means and take up the main estimates.

The Senate will meet for the first time since the Easter recess.

YESTERDAY

The House approved Finance Minister Ilsley's resolution to go into committee on the budget; defeated a New Democracy amendment urging use of Bank of Canada credit to help finance the war effort and a C.C.F. sub-amendment calling for nationalization of financial institutions; heard Dr. H. A. Bruce (Con. Toronto-Parkdale) say Canada should have "selective, compulsory enlistment" for overseas and Defence Minister Ralston's reply that Dr. Bruce should try to help preserve Canadian unity and not "attempt to drive a wedge of disunion into the war effort of which I think Canada ought to be proud."

The Senate did not sit.

ON THE LIBYAN FRONT

A Libyan soldier is shown kissing the hand of Sayed As Senoussi, Moslem religious leader. The Libyan troops are refugees from the Italian colony. They formed a battalion under command of British officers. In view of the current Axis attempts to stir up a jihad (holy war) in Africa and Asia, the presence of such holy men as Sayed As Senoussi on the British side of the fence is significant.

NAZI INDUSTRIAL CENTRES POUNDED

London, May 13 (CP)—The Royal Air Force, continuing its nightly pounding of Nazi war supply centres, smashed at Mannheim, western German industrial city, last night and started several fires. Attacks also were made on Cologne and Coblenz, and in German-occupied territory to the west docks at Ostend and Dunkirk were bombed.

Sunday night R.A.F. bombers struck at Hamburg and Bremen, two of Germany's greatest shipbuilding centres, and left them much smashed. It was the third time in four nights these centres had been attacked. The Air Ministry said also that shipbuilding yards which line the river Elbe on both sides for nine miles at Hamburg were "threatened and crossed with fire."

The Sunday night operations also included attacks on Emden and The Netherlands seaplane and shipping depots of Rotterdam, Ijmuiden and Texel.

Hess Impresses Canadian As 'Human Sort Of Fellow'

Lakefield, Ont., May 13—(CP)—Birnie Hodgetts, who once went to Rudolph Hess with a protest against the strict military discipline enforced on a group of young Canadians in a German youth camp, said last night Hess had impressed him as a 'very human sort of fellow." Commenting on the British official announcement that Hess had landed by parachute in Scotland Saturday, Mr Hodgetts said: "He was of a type—I don't know, he may have got fed up or something."

Now a master at Grove School in this village near Peterborough, Ont. Mr. Hodgetts spoke with Hess in the summer of 1936 while in charge of a group of Canadian boys attending with youths from several other countries a German youth camp in Berlin at the invitation of the German government. Hodgetts had protested to the head of the camp that the Canadians in his group had not been advised of the strictly military nature of the camp and had been told there could be no change in the rigorous discipline without higher authority. So Mr Hodgetts saw the highest authority available—Hess.

"He seemed a very fine fellow," Mr. Hodgetts said. "After I explained that the group in my charge had no desire to adhere to the strict military discipline of the camp, he gave orders which allowed us to stay in the camp and skip the military angle. The camp itself was just a dictator's military camp. No individual movement was allowed. Everyone moved as part of a unit."

POLICE BLOTTER

Kenneth Baker, 40½ James St., reported the loss of a bicycle to the police on Monday. Baker informed the police the bike had been loaned to a friend of the family, whose name was given at Ken Deline of Toronto. Deline failed to return the bike, Baker complained.

Two inebriates, one an old offender in local police circles, were found in an alleged intoxicated condition on Monday night and placed under arrest. Today the pair was arraigned before H. B. Wilson, local justice of the peace, and remanded in custody until Friday.

To Patrol Sideroads

District Inspector Frank Gardner, Ontario Provincial Police headquarters here, announced today that a night patrol had been established to patrol the county and side roads throughout the district. The patrol was made necessary owing to complaints of district suburban residents who objected to the increasing parking of motor vehicles upon side roads at night, Inspector Gardner revealed.

CHURCHILL LAUDS ATLANTIC HEROES

Prime Minister Winston Churchill is shown addressing a gathering of British merchant seamen during his visit to shipping areas of Lancashire recently. These men, coming from the far-flung corners of the empire, are the heroes of the Battle of the Atlantic. It is to them that Britain looks to get supplies through minefields, submarine traps and bomber territory.

Top-Grade Eggs And Butter Prices Ease

Toronto, May 13.—Continued cautious buying and the seasonal increase in fresh receipts weakened butter prices slightly on Toronto open produce market yesterday. Prices to shipper on grade A-large and A-medium eggs also were easier.

Sales were not being forced on the butter market, although sellers appeared anxious to keep current supplies moving in view of increasing production. Buyers were hesitant at taking on more than their daily requirements, with minimum prices still a question mark, and there was the belief that if this situation prevails some accumulation in fresh receipts will result. No. 1 grade Ontario creamery solids traded quietly yesterday at 29c a pound against 29 1-4 Saturday.

The egg market closed steady after an easy opening, with volume of arrivals adequate to fill all local needs. Grades A-large and A-medium slipped 1-2c a dozen in the graded section of trading, but other prices held unchanged from previous levels.

Montreal Produce

Montreal, May 13 (CP)—Produce market prices here as reported by the Dominion Department of Agriculture, follow:

Butter — First-grade creamery prints, jobbing price, 31c; first-grade solids, jobbing price, 30 1-2c.

Eggs—Graded shipments in used free cases, selling at A-large 21 1-2c A-medium 20c to 20 1-2c; B grade, 19 1-2c to 20c; C grade, 18c. Receipts: 3,557 cases.

WALL STREET

New York, May 13—(AP)—Stocks were bid up moderately in today's market without attracting any real buying stampede.

Scattered rails, steels, motors, aircrafts and specialties edged forward after a hesitant start and, in quiet dealings, gains of fractions to a point or so were fairly well distributed near the fourth hour.

Strength of agricultural commodities was helpful for securities. Bonds were irregularly higher.

Among supported stocks were Great Northern, Atlantic Coast Line, U.S. Steel, Bethlehem, General Motors, Chrysler, Douglas Aircraft, Du Pont, Westinghouse, Western Union, J. I. Case and North American.

Canadian issues were quiet and mixed. Dome lost 1-8 and Distillers Seagram gained 3-8. In the bond market Canada 4s were 1-4 higher.

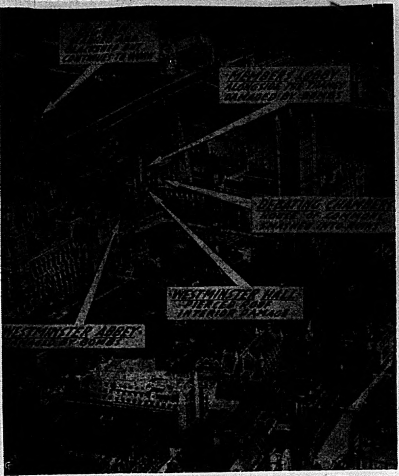
LONDON SUBJECTED TO ONE OF WAR'S MOST VICIOUS RAIDS



Staging one of the war's most savage raids, German raiders showered high-explosives and incendiary bombs on the empire capital. Famous Big Ben, charred and blackened, still chimed on despite the efforts of the Nazis. The roof of Westminster Abbey was torn open, but the building can be repaired. Westminster Hall and the House of Commons were also damaged by the vicious raid.

'Fantastic' And 'Incredible' Terms Used By N. Y. Times To Describe Hess' Flight

New York, May 13 (CP)—"Fantastic," "incredible," were adjectives used freely today by New York's leading morning newspapers in discussing editorially the landing by parachute in Scotland of Rudolf Hess, Germanys No. 3 Nazi.

Saying that Hess' flight "has all the marks of an escape," The Times said the incident will have "enormous repercussions" in Germany and "may affect the whole progress of the war."

Said The Herald Tribune:

"One can do little more than exclaim at the exactness with which this astonishing episode fits the whole pattern of nightmare fantasy of unbelievably bad melodrama, of second-rate stage horrors turned into reality, in which the civilized world has been engulfed ever since the rise of Hitler and Hitlerism to power in Germany."

Biggest Story of War

London, May 13 (CP)—London's morning newspapers played the Hess story as one of the biggest stories of the war.

His calculated flight, they said, was evidence of his complete sanity.

The Daily Express used five columns in a tight four-page paper under a double six-column line which read: "Deputy Fuehrer Gives Himself Up."

The austere Times' biggest two-column head, reserved for tremendous stories only, read: "Hitler's Deputy Escapes to Britain", and gave the story two columns.

Reveals a Split

Editorials were scant because the news broke late, but The Daily Express said:

"It reveals a split of serious dimensions among the Nazi bosses . . Goebbels may shriek that Hess has delusions. He may try to suggest Hess is insane. But this is not like a madman . . . it is like a resolute man who is prepared to face any hazard, even the Royal Air Force, to reach this country."

The Daily Sketch said: "Has there been some bitter quarrel between him and Hitler? Are Nazi leaders falling out and Hess had to fly for his life? Mystery there undoubtedly is and perhaps some first class scandal is in the Nazi heirarchy."

Announcement Ignored

Berlin, May 13 (CP)—Berlin morning newspapers handled the story of Rudolf Hess' disappearance in uniform fashion.

Each paper carried the headline:

"Hess has met with an accident."

Then the paper printed only the Nazi statement issued yesterday that Hess had been suffering from "hallucinations."

The London announcement of his arrival in Scotland was ignored.

Former Nazi Leader Believes That Hess Fled For His Life

Otto Strasser Thinks Flight Indicates Army and Goering Seek to Overthrow Nazi Party

UNREST IN REICH

Montreal, May 13 (CP)—The Montreal Herald quoted Otto Strasser, leader of the anti-Nazi Black Front, in a copyright interview today as saying the escape of Rudolf Hess seems to indicate the German army chiefs and Hermann Goering seek to overthrow the Nazi party.

"Within one hour of the accession of Goering to power Goebbels and Himmler would be shot dead," Strasser, a founder of the National Socialist Party, was quoted as saying "That is why Hess, in my opinion, fled for his life. As a leader of the Nazi party his life is not worth a moment's purchase."

Goering said Strasser, is closer to the Prussian army and the great industrialists than anyone in Germany. Hess, on the other hand, has always been Hitler's closest and most trusted friend and a party leader with Hitler and Himmler.

Jealousy Among Leaders

Strasser, who fled Germany in 1931 after a break with Hitler said among Hess, Goebbels and Himmler "the most intense jeolousy is evident."

"This is not a new story. It is an old story to those who have known Rudolf Hess—and I have known him for 20 years. He was born in Alexandria, Egypt, and therefore speaks English fluently. He was Hitler's private Secretary. Hitler trusted him more than anyone in the world.

"The background of this schism between Goering and the army group and Hitler, Hess and Himmler—the three H's we call them in Germany—is the same background today.

"All is not so well in Germany as people would think. Within that country there is unrest. And this sudden and spectacular escape of one of Hitler's most trusted lieutenants is an indication of that unrest."

Hitler Given His Choice

"When Hitler was ordered to Reichspresident Von Hindenburg on June 21, 1934, he found that Goering had gone over to the army and was thus ranged against him. Goering and Blumberg gave Hitler his choice: Power—by consent and with the aid of the army group—or death alongside Roehm and Gregor Strasser, my brother, who were committed to the National Socialist Revolution. Hitler chose the army—and war.

"Roehm, my brother Gregor and many others were murdered. So, also, will the leaders of the Nazi Party be murdered if the plan I have suggested, the plan to raise Goering to supreme political authority in Germany, is carried out. There will be a blood purge beside which Hitler's will be nothing."

The escape of Hess, added Strasser, bears out his contention that the Nazi system must meet destruction because of the internal conditions in Germany.

Denounces His Leader

Strasser left Germany in 1931 when he claimed that Hitler was accepting financial subsidies from the "big business" interests and was ready to jettison the Socialist features of the Nazi Party. He is said to have denounced Hitler to his face as a traitor to their cause and broke with him.

Strasser's brother, Gregor, decided, however, to continue the fight against Hitler from inside the Party, with the result that he eventually was murdered.

From Praue, Otto organized his Black Front organization, which sent a steady stream of anti-Nazi propaganda through Germany by underground channels. He continued his operations from various parts of Europe until the fall of France when he escaped to this continent.

Last year, Strasser received permission to live in Canada for the duration of the war.

HEAVY FROSTS SET BACK EARLY GROWTH IN SOME AREAS

Strawberry blossoms and early vegetables received a setback Monday night when thermometers in the Belleville area dropped below the freezing point with early risers reporting a heavy coating of white frost covering fence rails and buildings. Even after the sun was well advanced evidence of the frost still remained in shaded places, while in some instances it was reported that ice was seen, so severe was the frost.

Residents of Prince Edward were not so sure that damage would result because of the frost however, and although it was quite noticeable across the bay, one market vendor from that district stated she did not think it was severe enough to cause damage.

Department of Agriculture officials stated this morning they had not received any word from the country of tomato plants now in hot beds being touched with the frost, warning having been given to farmers to be on the look-out for the cold snap. Official temperature recorded at the Belleville Purification Plant showed only .8 degrees of frost, the thermometer reading 31.2 degrees.

R. HESS

Hess frequently administered the oath to new Party members—"I swear to Adolf Hitler an unbreakable fealty and unquestioned obedience."

Then he would add the grim warning, which he chose to flout: "Woe to any one breaking this oath for he shall be cast out from society."

Born in Egypt

Born April 26, 1894, in Alexandria, Egypt, Hess was educated in Germany. He abandoned plans for a business career to volunteer with the Bavarian Infantry in the First Great War.

He was with Hitler in the abortive beer hall Putsch at Munich in 1923. They fled and were captured and imprisoned in Landsberg fortress.

Here Hitler dictated while Hess wrote and edited "Mein Kampf," his autobiography and pattern for a new Germany.

Hess was one of the first members of the Nazi Party and among the first of the storm troopers. In the stormy years that followed, Hess always was near his leader. He stood by Hitler through the blood purge of 1934, though some of his close friends were among the purged.

Hitler's Personal Deputy.

As Hitler's personal deputy and minister without portfolio, Hess carried out his master's orders ruthlessly, house-cleaning the party, crushing opposition to Nazi policies and enforcing measures against Jews.

When war broke out in 1939 Hess became one of six members of Hitler's Secret War Cabinet with an important voice in the conduct of the war.

In June, 1940, he was with Hitler in the railway car in Compiegne Forest when the French were issued Armistice terms.

Hess was married and the father of a three-year-old son. His wife and child are in Germany.

ance, he rebuked them by saying, "There is only one Fuehrer, Adolf Hitler."

BONDS OF $50,

"The success of a war loan is not measured merely reaching or passing an objective; it is measured also in the numbers of individual subscribers. If, as is fully expected, large numbers of Canadians in all walks of life buy Victory Bonds, it will speak the will and determination of this nation emphatically.

"The dollars of the man or woman of modest means are just as important in this war as those of the wealthier individual or of the large corporation. We believe that Canadians generally will rally to this loan in a manner that will help our own defence, give heart to our Allies and raise the admiration and consolidate the support of our friends across the border."

The first loan of the war was for $200,000,000 in January, 1940. It was oversubscribed by 60 per cent with cash subscriptions reaching a total of $321,276,850 when the books were closed.

The second war loan, last September, was for $300,000,000 and it went beyond that objective to a total of $342,248,300 when the subscription books were closed.

THE WAR TODAY

(By Don Gilbert

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

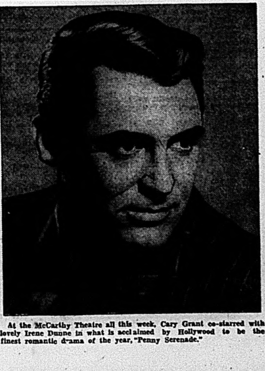
Amidst the excitement of Rudolf Hess' melodramatic flight from Germany, the important meeting between Hitler and the No. 2 man of Vichy, Admiral Darlan, has gone scarcely noticed. The encounter cannot fail to have vital bearing on Nazi war plans.

The Darlan-Hitler meeting comes at an hour when German action must be expected. It is two weeks since the Balkan campaign was concluded. In that fighting only a small proportion of the German armed force were employed, a portion comparable to that which took part in the Scandinavian invasion a year ago.

The bulk of the German army is restless after its winter of idleness and time presses the Nazi leadership to make good its promises to bring Germany in 1941 its greatest victories. The Nazi embarrassment felt in the defection of Hess and the poor showing of the Germans during April in the battle of the Atlantic make action imperative if the buoyant Nazi spirit that followed the conquest of Yugoslavia and Greece is to be maintained.

It will take all of Goebbels' ingenuity to convince the German people and others in the Nazi orbit that Hess fled Germany while the balance of his mind was disturbed. The first Nazi announcement of his disappearance betrayed uneasiness and the hope his plane had dropped into the sea. But, apparently knowing from the note Hess left that he had intended to try to reach Britain, the Nazi propagandists were unable to risk giving out a more palatable version of the affair.

Some 12 hours after their original announcements, in the light of British announcements demonstrating clearly that Hess is sane, the Germans changed their line and asserted Hess had harbored the illusion that through English friends he could yet restore peace. They stuck, however, to the notion that "hallucinations" had brought about this attitude.



At the McCarthy Theatre all this week, Cary Grant co-starred with lovely Irene Dunne in what is acclaimed by Hollywood to be the finest romantic drama of the year, "Penny Serenade."

Spanish Captain Defies German U-Boat Commander

London, May 13—(CP)—How the captain of a Spanish ship detoured 300 miles to rescue survivors from a torpedoed British vessel and then "defied" a German submarine commander's order to surrender them was disclosed last night in a Spanish wireless station broadcast quoted by the British Broadcasting Corporation.

The BBC said the Spanish ship was proceeding to New York when it picked up an SOS signal from a British vessel. The captain then took the ship 300 miles off its course to pick up survivors.

"Shortly afterwards," the BBC said, "the German submarine which had torpedoed the British vessel stopped the ship and demanded the surrender of its prisoners.

"But the captain of the Spanish vessel refused to hand them over and was allowed to proceed."

AT THE McCARTHY

"Penny Serenade"

Irene Dunne and Cary Grant, two of the screen's most popular stars, are excitingly reunited in George Stevens' new romantic drama, Columbia's "Penny Serenade". Based upon Martha Cheaven's delightful magazine novel of a carefree, irresponsible newspaperman and his wife, and adapted by Morrie Ryskind, the film which opened yesterday at the McCarthy Theatre is an absorbingly human and tender love story, as heartwarming as life itself.

Concerned with such delightful elements as the ecstatic courtship of a boy and girl, their honeymoon and the early years together. "Penny Serenade" possesses a ring of reality which makes it romance that is everything a love story should be. The newspaperman's casual attitude towards life, the demands of his job, the near-disaster which ends their honeymoon, the infant they adopt and the small country newspaper they attempt to run—all these and more provide the dramatic material for a vivid and memorable film.

In a dramatic climax which is a veritable highlight, "Penny Serenade" ends on a note of courage, of laughter and tears, to place itself definitely in the minds and hearts of its audiences.

The brilliant performances of its stars, in roles as demanding and as memorable as anything they have ever given the screen, are superbly matched by the splendid characterizations turned in by supporting players. Beulah Bondi is seen as the superintendent of an orphanage, a role which gives her a wealth of sympathetic and dramatic values; Edgar Buchanan, as a linotype operator, makes a delightful, extremely pleasing friend of the family, and Ann Doran is equally effective as the salesgirl who is Miss Dunne's roommate.

Stevens' direction possesses a smoothness and understanding which makes "Penny Serenade" an immediate choice for one of the "ten best" of this year. It brings to motion picture audiences a portrait of courage and of comedy, of rapture and romance so tellingly blended into one perfect whole that it surpasses in general excellence everything ever done by the stars and the director.

"Penny Serenade" remains at the McCarthy Theatre the entire week.

Old Corner Druggist a Passing Clan

By Logan Clendening, M.D.

Within the past few years our literature has begun to notice the figures in life who have been so familiar as hardly to attract the attention of the literary world. There was Dr. Hertzler's Horse and Buggy Doctor, followed by Country Editor, Country Parson, Hoss Doctor, and now we have Robert B. Nixon, Jr's account of his father, called Corner Druggist (Prentice-Hall, Inc., publishers, New York, 1941).

The corner drug store still exists and I suppose there must be some good reason why corners are selected, although I am not so sure I understand it, but the corner druggist, in the sense of the word, is largely disappearing. He was the neighborhood druggist, just as the doctor was the neighborhood doctor and the minister was the neighborhood minister. His position, as Mr. Nixon says, was at once the most obscure and the most important in his community. He performed the greatest service for the lowest pay.

Apprentice at Seventeen

The corner druggist here described, began his apprenticeship when he was 17 years old. He lived over the drug store. He was available day and night. He did a good deal of medical practice in the way of prescribing for common ailments. So far as I can see he did it pretty well. He took care of a great many illnesses at a cost which the patient could afford to pay and filled a place in the practice of medicine which I am not sure was supplied by the regular medical profession. The Public Relations Counsels of the various druggists associations tell me that this practice is dying out but I am not so sure but what it is a good practice. Your baker now sells you vitamins, why shouldn't your druggist sell you simple herbs?

"The old-fashioned neighborhood drugstore was an institution unique in American life . .

A Neighborhood Accommodation

"The corner drugstore was an accommodation centre much like the modern filling station. People come there to use the telephones, or the rest rooms, to get free maps and free information, and occasionally to buy. So it was with the drugstore. Father said that loafers bought cigars in others places and came there to smoke them; that they bought drugs somewhere else and came there to be entertained. People dropped in for the weather report, to look at the thermometer, to buy two-cent stamps, to have specks taken out of their eyes. . . . .

"Father, like most old-time pharmacists, cursed the people who came to talk instead of to buy, but he would have been lost without the gossip and bustle around him. Because he was on duty eighteen hours a day, he had no opportunity for any other social life. The familiar story was of the pharmacist and his friend . . .who were playing checkers. . . The latter whispered, 'Doc, a customer just came into the store.'

"'Yes, I know. Keep still. Maybe he'll go out again.'

Long Hours for Low Pay

The average neighborhood druggist has a hard time keeping his head above water, or staying a few steps ahead of the sheriff . . .

"Suppose a druggist fills six prescriptions a day at sixty or even seventy-five cents. Let us say it is all profit. That makes $3.60 or $4.50. Let us say his average daily business is thirty dollars. That is a very fair average. His profits cannot possibly be over one-third of his gross receipts. That gives him ten dollars. He must pay store rent, light, heat, and a relief clerk, and usually he has a boy to help him".

A GREAT BLOW

party affairs almost to the end, the inevitable question arises to Hess' mental condition for some time past.

In short, the German people may well wonder how long important affairs have been in the hands of a man of dubious mental stability.

The British account shows different seeds of doubt. It represents Hess, long one of Hitler's closest associates, as deserting to surrender voluntarily in Britain. And it stresses his complete sanity.

No Doubt of Loyalty

Accepted in this light, Hess' flight can only dumbfound the average German, it was said. There never had been any question of Hess' loyalty to Hitler in the past. He had stuck to the Nazi leader during the most discouraging days of the Nazi movement. Why this amazing turnabout? Did it mean he saw defeat ahead for the Reich? Had he lost faith in Hitler?

Diplomatic quarters here were frankly bewildered as to complete significance of the matter. Apparently authoritative reports reaching the capital, however, agreed on three points; that Hess' identity had been established beyond doubt; that he is perfectly sane, and that he fled Germany for fear of his life.

Strained Relations Believed

Information has been reaching London for some time past, it was said, that relations in inner Nazi councils were strained, and Hess' flight was looked on as confirmation of such reports.

A likely reason for the breach, one informed source said, was disagreement over Germany's future military moves, but this makes for a strange denouement. Hess, it was explained, had been usually identified with the so-called left wing of Nazi officials who advocated a knock-out invasion of Britain, whereas the generals and right wing officials favored the Mediterranean and middle east theatre of operations for the present.

Whatever the complicated background, the belief here was that British authorities are alive to the possibility of an audacious Nazi trap, or "plant," and would be exceedingly wary in making use of any information Hess might offer.

Would Have Good Information

But should his good faith be established beyond doubt, it was pointed out, Britain would have a wealth of highly reliable and valuable information at her disposal.

There was some conjecture here as to why London withheld news of Hess' capture almost three days. The general opinion was that Britain preferred to have the Nazis make the first announcement on the subject in the hope of a mistake that would have propaganda value later.

The fact that the German announcement hinted broadly at insanity was interpreted in some circles here as an attempt to discredit any information that Hess might give. A few persons went further and considered it evidence of Nazi apprehension that Hess had gone over completely to the enemy.

James Stewart appears opposite Ginger Rogers in the comedy riot, "Vivacious Lady," now on the Capitol screen. This is the only picture to co-star both 1940 Academy Award winners.

"DAUGHTER OF DESTINY"

By ELEANOR ATTERBURY COLTON

CHAPTER XIX

"It's so nice of you to bother to take me home, Mr. Macias," Devona said, trying hard to ignore the subtle possessiveness in his smile, his manner. "I'm really terribly tired tonight."

"No bother at all." His dark eyes laughed at her elaborate pretenses a little. "I suppose you want to put those things in the safe?"

He nodded at the little bundle in her hand—the handsome mantilla, the locket and fan.

"Yes — please. I'm sure they will be safer there than in my dressing room."

With quick, deft fingers, he turned the dial, opened the heavy steel door, reached for the pile of treasures Devona had laid on his desk.

The safe, she noticed without really intending to, was full of little square white boxes. And bundles or currency rolled together with elastic bands. Idly, she wondered how much money was tucked away in there, and why he preferred to keep it there instead of in a bank. Probably, Macias was just money-lover enough to enjoy having his wealth where he could count it, admire it, touch it with those long, brown fingers.

She was still staring when Macias turned toward her. Flushing a little under the swift, hard look he gave her, the almost insulting vigor with which he slammed the safe shut, swung the portrait back into place, she faced him across a sudden, throbbing little silence.

Finally he said, quietly but with unmistakable warning: "No one but me—and now you—knows where that safe is hidden."

"Oh—really."

"The man who installed it is dead," he went on. "I've never showed it to any one else. Understand?"

Undercover Threat

"Perfectly." She tried to smile away the implication. "I'll keep your secret."

"Yes—you will." But there was no smile with it.

And Devona was suddenly aware that she had been given a glimpse of some secret vulnerability in this hard, ruthless man. He had some secret — some guilty secret. One that he was deliberately revealing to her—gradually. She would learn the whole of it, in time.

Macias calmly picked up his expensive, pearl - grey homberg. "Shall we go now?"

Devona nodded. "Yes, please," and started to open the door.

"This way." Macias said and, pushing a light switch, uncovered a small, pearl-white button. Silently, stealthily, a panel slid aside revealing a narrow hallway, a door beyond. "It saves a little time."

Aware that his quick glance was losing nothing of her astonishment, Devona tried desperately to control her expression. But this was all so uncanny, so melodramatic. A wall safe, yes. But why a secret passageway?

More Secrets

"No one but me—and now you—knows about this passageway, either," he said as he stood aside, motioned for her to precede him into the narrow little hall. Then he closed the panel behind them, led the way to the small door at the end.

"It's terribly exciting," she said as he helped her into the broad front seat of his custom-built convertible coupe. He used the limousine when he had guests and when he wanted Joe to do the driving. He only drove the coupe himself on his frequent mysterious errands alone. Devona wished desperately for Joe and the limousine now. "But what is it for—the secret passage way, I mean," she rattled on, blythely.

"Convenience," he said, cryptically. "Some day—I'll show you."

Another promise of adventure! Devona went a little cold.

Macias slipped into the seat beside her, started the powerful car with quick, deft movements.

"I'm still staying at the Brownstone," she said, chattily, trying to hide her mounting nervousness even from herself. "It's three blocks down and then up to Main St."

"Yes, I know." He turned the car out of the dark alley into the blazing corridor of lights.

She Does Not Go Home

Down three blocks and then he turned. Up to Main. The Brownstone's neon sign blinked at her from down the block. Devona began to let go of some of the terror that had stalked her for the last hour. Silly. He really meant nothing more than to take her home, actually. Just the thoughtfulness of an employer for his overly weary employe. She'd misjudged him. Overwrought, she'd let her imagination run away with her.

"Thank you so much," she began—and then stopped short. He was driving right past the Brownstone's modest entrance. . . "But you've passed it!"

His smile answered her first. Then, "I just thought we'd take a little ride first. It's such a lovely evening."

The long, powerful car rapidly put hundreds of city blocks behind them before it turned off the main boulevard into a quieter street, lined by towering apartment houses. And when Macias turned into a gravelled drive, stopped under the canopied entrance Devona still was not sure she wasn't having a nightmare.

A liveried doorman opened the door and helped her out.

"Good evening sir," he said deferentially. "Shall I take your car around?"

"Might as well," Macias nodded curtly, led the way into the softly lighted foyer.

"Yes, sir."

Into the Web

Behind her Devona heard the soft purr of the engine as the car slid out of the drive, out of sight. Underfoot, she felt the soft luxury of rich Oriental rugs. 'Louis Quatorse' was emblazoned on a heraldic shield ornamenting the doorways, embroidered into the soft draperies. This, she realized as Macias rang for the elevator, was where he lived.

Still numb, afraid to go on, and still more afraid to stop, she stepped into the gold and red-velvet elevator cage. A moment later Macias' dark-skinned house-boy was bowing them into an elaborately furnished living room. At first, Devona saw only deep-cushioned elaborately carved furniture, heavy chests that might have been heirlooms preserved in some rich Spanish nobleman's castle, thick carpets, dozens of massively framed oil paintings. The whole scene heavy with gold and red velvet—and obviously costly.

Table for Two

Then she noticed the little table set before the fireplace — a table set for —TWO!

"How—— nice," she murmured, managed to move calmly toward the fire, to pretend to warm her numbed fingers.

"How delicious," she said a little later as the well-trained houseboy served very excellent lobster under glass and very old champagne.

Delicious, stimulating, the food and wine lent her courage—a courage she realized only too well of which she'd have great need if she carried this through without blundering.

Because, of course, the excellent little supper, the warming fire, the quiet intimacy of this elaborate room were only strains of the overture before the curtain went up on the main action.

Is She Next?

Her eyes wandered over the handsome grand piano, the massive lamps, vases that were huge, costly. Everything the biggest the most that money could buy. Symbols of Macias' power to buy and buy and buy.

She came back to the situation with a jolt. And she was next on his shopping list!

"Well, and do you like it?" he asked, and the question told her he had missed none of her silent study of his room.

"It's very — elaborate," she said honestly. "The effect is — overwhelming. So many priceless, beautiful things——"

Then, to avoid that dark-eyed scrutiny, she rose suddenly, crossed to the big window behind her. Below, Los Angeles and its constellation of satellite cities spread a carpet of shimmering lights as far as she could see. "And your view, too. It's simply breathtaking."

Macias had followed her, stood now just behind her shoulder. "You appreciate beautiful things, don't you?"

Devona shrugged. "I — enjoy them." And then, because talking seemed safer than silences, "My father taught me, really. If it hadn't been for his tremendous inerest in the art centres we traveled through, in the fine, beautiful things that different civilizations had created, I probably wouldn't have been so interested."

"That's probably what makes you a different—and very charming person."

His Pictures

"Thank you," and, to distract his attention, "Tell me about your pictures."

Moving toward it, Macias ran one finger, almost caressingly, over the rough surface of the canvas. "Come here, a moment."

Obediently, she went to stand beside him. Taking her hand in his, he touched her forefinger to the soft smudge that might easily have been mistaken for the artist's signature, pressed it a moment. And, to her amazement, the painting slid out of sight, leaving a yawning, dark aperture. Devona gasped. Another secret hiding place.

"Oh—how—startling!"

"Clever, isn't it?' Macias beamed proudly. "I invented this one myself."

In His Toils

"Yes — very clever," and she couldn't help seeing that this hiding place, too, was piled with square boxes, with rolls of currency. Why was he flaunting his enormous rolls of money, his strange devices for hiding them?

As if in answer, he drew the painting back into place, turned toward her quietly.

"I'm glad you like it here," he said, "because I want you to stay."

For an instant, Devona just stared at the picture of the tall Monterey pine tossing its limbs grotesquely while the sea clawed at its roots. Then, as the silence failed to hide Macias' meaning, she turned slowly to face him, her heart a frozen lump in her throat.

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was smoking to himself with a far away expression and ma said, Willyum do you believe it's possible to judge a person's caracter by the personal tone of their voice?

It's my infallible guide, my deer, pop said. Take the normal tones of the average traffic cop, for instants. I can shut my eyes and still know that with a different uniform and in a different place the possessor of that voice would be a successful dictator. When a man addresses me in a voice that has all the qualities of a harty slap on the back, I can tell he's going to be picking imaginary threads off my coat in another minute, and my mind works like a steel trap to think up a favor to ask him before he asks me one. It doesn't take me a second to spot a confirmed liar by the frank, candid tone in wich he says to me, Potts, I'll tell you the truth. No doubt about it, my deer, the voice is the index of the sole, pop said.

That just encourages me in my decision, ma said. Somebody was giving me some advice while I was in a doubting mood, so I just cast it aside like a glove, and yet the unselfish sincerity in that person's voice has been haunting me ever since like a lost cord, she said, and pop said, Well, is it too late now, or has opportunity stopped knocking?

Not at all, the special offer holds good all week, ma said. It was the radio announcer on Hookbinders broadcast yestidday, and he was advising women to have a winter coat made in their tailoring department right now instead of waiting to buy one ready made next season, because with the special offer it would only cost 25 per cent more than a ready made coat and yet it would last a hundred per cent longer, or a clear saving of 75 per cent, and now I know I should of trusted that voice, especially after what you've been saying, and I'm going down to Hookbinders tomorrow morning for measurements, she said.

Yee gods, I'll see you later, pop said.

Fourteen Rural Schools Participate In Music Festival At Shannonville

Shannonville—Music lovers were given a rare treat on Friday evening at the Orange Hall when 14 Tyendinaga Township public schools presented a musical festival. The seating accommodation of the hall was taxed by the large audience. The parents and friends of the children came from near and far to see the children perform. Proud mothers and fathers watched their children perform on the stage in a manner that would have done credit to trained vaudeville artists. The children demonstrated by their enthusiasm and adaptability to any scene in which they were placed that they were well trained and keenly interested in music. Miss Bernice W. Robinson, A.C.C.M., who is the music teacher for all the schools represented, directed all parts in a splendid manner. Miss Lorena Haight was assistant pianist. The program was as follows:

NOW'S THE HOUR TO PLAN FIGHT ON MOSQUITOES

Ottawa Experts Advise Housewives and Others How to Meet Annual Insect Invasion

Ottawa (CP)—Canada's summer invasion hordes—her 60 varieties of mosquitoes—will be in action two to three weeks earlier than usual this year because of unusually warm spring weather in many districts, and the Dominion Department of Agriculture has issued its plans for counter-attack.

Full instructions on how to combat the pests are in "Household Insects and Their Control," a book written by Dominion Entomologist Arthur Gibson and C. R. Twinn of the agriculture department.

Many of the 60 known varieties do not come near cities but are found mostly in fields and woodlands. They are however, a great annoyance to summer cottage dwellers.

The urban type of mosquito is called the "cosmopolitan house mosquito." This insect will breed in any stagnant bodies of water in the vicinity of houses and is most prolific in water polluted with sewage. "Rain water barrels are a common source of infestation," housewives are counselled to remember.

Special study of this type of mosquito which is "rarely found far from dwellings" reveal that it comes out usually at dusk and has a particularly lively night life carrying on its biting campaign usually in the darkness.

The best methods of control entomologists advise is the draining or filling in of breeding places or "covering the surface of stagnant collections of water with petroleum oil of good spreading qualities."

Screens and Sprays

In screening doors and windows that screens have about 16 meshes to the inch otherwise the tiny insects squeeze through. A spray recommended which will not stain fabrics or furniture is made from insect powder and "water-white" kerosene.

"This spray is easily and cheaply made," the department suggests, "and any unpleasant odor can be avoided by added methyl salicylate or oil of sassafras, or in the use of odorless kerosene."

Proportions used in making this spray are one pound of pyrethrum powder to one gallon of kerosene and three fluid ounces of oil of sassafras. Well mixed, it should be left to settle about four hours, and then the clear, lemon-colored liquid taken off and sprayed with hand spray or atomizer. The mixture should be kept tightly corked and away from the sunlight.

Spray for Lawns

There's no reason now why picnic parties and garden parties should be spoiled by the bloodthirsty mosquitoes. A new spray has been developed which can be used to make lawns and foliage "mosquitoless."

This spray consists of one gallon of the pyrethrum kerosene mixture to which has been added an emulsion of four ounces of liquid coconut oil soap thoroughly dissolved in one half gallon of water. When the two solutions are mixed these are further thinned down with 10 more parts of water and then the whole area sprayed by a power spray with a thin mist of mixture.

About 55 gallons are enough to make one acre of lawn and foliage completely free from mosquitoes. The area should be sprayed immediately before the gathering, "spraying the air as well so that the atmosphere will be well saturated with the mist."

An accolade for Gnr. D. B. White of Edmonton whose successful battle against flames threatening an ammunition-loaded army truck won his commendation by senior officers.

White, member of a First Division Field Regiment, watched while German raiders droned through the night skies and anti-aircraft shells burst high in the sky.

Suddenly, a Nazi plane turned back, jettisoning incendiary bombs that fell near a Canadian vehicle park, and the tarpaulin on a truck caught fire. In that truck were live 25-pounder shells for field guns and hundreds of rounds of small ammunition.

Only person right on the spot, White raced into action and battled the flames as they crept toward the ammunition. Officers said he extinguished the fire at the risk of his own life.

Relieved of Stomach Troubles, Constipation; Praises Syntona

Improves Appetite; Aids Digestion; Rids System of Poisonous Waste Matter and Excess Acids That Often Cause Headaches, Muscular Pains, Backache, Nervousness, Sleeplessness and Lowered Resistance.

MR. GEORGE ROXBOROUGH

If you suffer from stomach troubles, torpid liver, sluggish kidneys, constipation, headaches, nervousness or any of the long train of distressing symptoms of faulty assimilation and elimination, benefit from the experiences of other well-known local men and women and begin taking Syntona Herbal Tonic to-day. You'll know then what a really fine medicine this is. You, too, may know what it is to be free of vague aches and pains or fatigued, irritable feelings and be ready to go into the warmer weather with renewed energy and vigour. To-day, we quote the experience of Mr. George Roxborough, 28 Keith Street, Hamilton, as reported only a few days ago:

"For fully three years I suffered with stomach troubles and constipation. My appetite was poor and the little I did eat just seemed to sour in my stomach and cause gas, bloat and cramps. There was a bad taste in my mouth, particularly in the mornings, and my breath was bad. Lately, I began to feel constantly fatigued, my nerves troubled me and I couldn't sleep well. A friend suggested I take Syntona and I have found it just great. Right from the first, I liked the way it acted on my stomach and bowels and now I can enjoy my meals without all that stomach distress. My nerves are more relaxed, I sleep better and I arise mornings feeling rested and energetic."

Get yourself a treatment of Syntona to-day, at Dolan the Druggist, Belleville. See how it will help you, too.

RUDOLF HESS TALKING AND WRITING SAYS BBC

Propaganda Plan To Capitalize On Flight of No. 3 Nazi

Believed Hess Preparing A Treatise On Reasons For His Flight

IN GOOD SPIRITS

London, May 14—(CP) — Rudolf Hess is talking and writing "words which will make the German High Command sweat," the British Broadcasting Corporation declared today as it hit its stride in a propaganda campaign against Germany to capitalize on the flight of the No. 3 Nazi.

While the BBC started on a schedule of ten broadcasts a day to Germany on the Hess affair, a meeting between Hitler's deputy and Prime Minister Churchill was projected—a move which Britons hoped would result in disclosure of vital Nazi military secrets.

For the second successive day an authoritative British source stressed that Hitler's erstwhile deputy and minister without fortfolio was writing and reading.

(A fair assumption was that he was preparing, in some form or other, a treatise on reasons for his flight.)

Listens to Radio

Hess, it also appeared, was listening to BBC's handling of his case, for an authoritative source said he spent some time at his secret sanctuary listening to radio news bulletins. Hess is fluent in English.

In the hospital to which he was moved from Glasgow, the fugitive Nazi was said to be in good spirits and recovering from the ankle fracture and slight arm abrasions he suffered when he balled out over Scotland last Saturday night.

Hess was reported finding "life not too bad" on such English fare as good coffee, chicken, fish and eggs.

Meeting Between Churchill And Hess Will Likely Take Place Soon

KEEP NAZIS GUESSING

London, May 14 (CP)—A meeting between Prime Minister Churchill and enigmatic Rudolf Hess was projected today in a move which Britons hoped would result in disclosure of military secrets of Germany's highest war councils.

Details of arrangements for the proposed conference were guarded and even the whereabouts of Britain's No. 1 prisoner of war were undisclosed.

Observers expressed belief, however, that the dramatic meeting might provide material for the "further statement" concerning Hess' strange flight from Germany which Mr. Churchill yesterday promised the House of Commons would be made "in the near future."

Hess, under treatment for a fractured ankle he suffered when he parachuted down in Scotland Saturday night and was taken prisoner by a farmer, has been questioned already by high military officials.

He was said to have talked freely. The Daily Mail said he was reported to have "indicated his personal disgust with the Nazi Party and its policy" as well as a growing tension between Party leaders.

Informed sources explained that any information concerning German plans which might be gleaned from Hitler's erstwhile lieutenant "obviously will be kept secret" for military reasons.

Eden Suggests Dissension Cause Of Hess' Flight

London, May 14.—(CP)— Foreign Secretary Eden, addressing an English-speaking Union luncheon today, suggested this explanation for the flight of Rudolf Hess:

"A small group of men possessed of immense military power are trying to impose their rule by force on all civilization.

"When you have that spectacle you are certain to see something else, too.

"You are certain to see in time of stress and strain evidence among that small group of men, not only of tension but of dissension.

"In this you may well find, in part at least, an explanation of the parachute descent that so much electrified the world this last week-end."

BRITISH TROOPS REACH FREETOWN

Reported 30,000 Troops Concentrated 500 Miles From Dakar

New York, May 14—(CP)—Crew members of a freighter reported on arrival yesterday that between 3,000 and 5,000 British troop reinforcements reached Freetown, British West Africa, on the passenger steamship Monarch of Bermuda last April 26.

Crew members added that more than 30,000 British troops are concentrated at Freetown, which is 500 miles from Dakar, French African port considered of vital importance in the war in the middle east.

Strasser Believes Hess Fled Reich Because He Felt Position Hopeless

By WILLIAM STEWART
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Montreal, May 14—(CP) — The flight of Rudolf Hess to Britain was a flight from the shadow of a looming, fatal struggle in Germany between the army and the National Socialist Party, Dr. Otto Strasser said here last night in an interview.

Dr. Strasser, head of the underground, anti-Nazi black front and a one-time member of the National Socialist Party who turned against Hitler, said he believed Hess fled Germany because he was "hopeless about the war position and party position."

But he could not believe that Hess had quarrelled and broken with Hitler.

"He was the most devoted man to Hitler," said Dr. Strasser. "He was not a National Socialist but a Hitlerist. He was his master's voice."

He admitted astonishment over the dramatic escape although he said it bore out his forecasts that all was not well in Germany internally and a collapse was due.

"I always thought Hess would commit suicide with Hitler at the last moment. Actually I am very astonished at his escape. He was so devoted to Hitler that I thought he would be with him to the end —in fact would hand him the knife."

"I cannot believe that he now is against Hitler. I am sure though he has lost confidence that Hitler can win the war."

Dr. Strasser said he knew Hess for 20 years from the earliest days of the Nazi movement. He knew him as a "modest, intelligent, industrious and honest" party worker who also wrote "very good poems."

Was Hitler's Shadow

Dr. Strasser said that to his knowledge, Hess never at any time expressed disagreement with the Fuehrer and always reflected Hitler's opinions.

LOW-LEVEL RAID ON HELIGOLAND MADE BY R. A. F.

Bombs Rained On Port From Few Hundred Feet Cause Great Confusion

SEVERAL SHIPS SUNK

London, May 14 (CP)—Bombers of the Royal Air Force made a successful low-level raid on Heligoland, German North Sea Island-base, before darkness yesterday, it was announced today.

An authoritative source said:

"Heligoland was raided in daylight yesterday by an R. A. F. squadron. Successful attacks were made with bombs and machine-gun fire from a few hundred feet, causing great confusion.

"Other daylight activities of the bomber command included an attack on shipping off the coast of Holland, France and the enemy base at St. Nazaire. Several ships were sunk or damaged.

"Weather last night was unsuitable for large-scale operations but fighters attacked an airdrome at Ostend."

Sweep Fields at Dawn

Hurricane fighters swooped on the Belgian field at dawn, the Air Ministry news service said, spraying it with machine-gun fire.

A large hangar burst into flames after a violent explosion. The service said that several guns between the airdrome and the sea were silenced and casualties were inflicted on the gun crews.

Operations of the German Air Force over Britain were on a small scale for the second straight night last night. The Air Ministry in its regular morning communique said a few bombs fell on the coast but damage was slight and casualties few.

A Nazi bomber was reported shot down over Britain in the night.

'The Maggot In The Apple'

London, May 14 (CP)—When Prime Minister Churchill told the Ministry of Information about the parachute landing in Scotland of Rudolf Hess, it was disclosed today, Director General Sir Walter Monckton cried: "That's great news."

Mr. Churchill replied: "Yes—the maggot in the apple."

Economic Bars To Stay Unless Japan Respects U. K. Rights In China

London, May 14 (CP)—Foreign Secretary Eden warned Japan today that British economic restrictions against her would not be eased unless Japan recognizes British rights in China.

He said instructions to this effect had been sent to the British Ambassador at Tokyo.

(Both the British Ambassador, Sir Robert Craigie, and the United States envoy, Joseph Crew, conferred separately today with Foreign Minister Matsuoka, said a dispatch from Tokyo.)

Speaking in the House of Commons, Mr. Eden declared also that Britain has "great sympathy with Syrian aspirations for independence." (The British authorities fear Syria may become a route for a German drive on Suez from Asia Minor.)

On Iraq, which adjoins Syria, Eden said that British forces there were being reinforced swiftly, but that Britain had no intention of threatening Iraq's independence.

Discussing British-Japanese relations, Eden said Britain would continue to do what she could to help China maintain her independence.

"I have indicated on recent occasions that Japanese discrimination against our interests in China it at variance with the numerous assurances of the Japanese government and that in the view of his Majesty's government the Japanese government cannot divest themselves of responsibility," Eden said.

"I have stated that representations have been addressed to the government and its representatives, the outcome of which has been unsatisfactory."

GERMANY CLAIMS HESS PLANNED TO VISIT DUKE

Spokesman Says Hess Had Fixed Idea He Was a Sort of Messiah

DOCUMENTS LEFT

Berlin May 14 —(AP)— The German propaganda claimed today that documents left behind by Rudolf Hess indicated he planned to visit the Duke of Hamilton in Glasgow in an effort to bring about peace.

A spokesman asserted Hitler's deputy had no intention of approaching Prime Minister Churchill or other British leaders, but had "a crazy notion" that a Pacifist group, of which the Duke was said to be a member, could bring about an international understanding.

He added the government in no way encouraged or knew of Hess' plans. The disclosure, he said, was made in numerous documents Hess addressed to various persons and which came to light only after his flight to Scotland.

"Hess did not flee as a traitor," the spokesman added. "He remains a German but, unfortunately, possessed of a Messiah complex. I have a feeling the English will have plenty of trouble with him.'

Met Duke at Olympic Games

It was claimed that Hess met the Duke of Hamilton during the Berlin Olympic Games in 1936, and that they were "kindred spirits" because both "longed to bring about a lasting peace between Europe's two great Nordic and Germanic nations."

Hess, it was asserted, had extensive correspondence with persons in many nations who were active in various peace movements. It was claimed also that he kept in touch with the British nobleman many months after their original meet-

REPORT KNUDSEN TO QUIT O. P. M. IF HANDS TIED

Friends Say He Has Reached This Decision if He is Not Left With Control of Priorities

ADMINISTRATION ACTS

Washington, May 14. — (AP) — William S. Knudsen was reported today to be determined to quit as co-director of the office of production management if his hands were tied in the matter of priorities.

Friends of the Danish-born production expert said he reached this decision as a result of a house amendment to the pending Vinson Bill—an amendment establishing a priorities division separate from the O.P.M., and accountable only to the United States Army-Navy Munitions Control Board.

Knudsen was said to have taken the stand that he could not continue at the helm of O.P.M. if someone else were to have the authority to say what materials should be produced first, and what orders should be placed before others.

To avert such a development, the administration began throwing its full weight behind a move to overturn the House vote and leave the O.P.M. in full charge of priorities.

Acting Chairman Robert Reynolds (Dem.-North Carolina) of the Senate Military Affairs Committee said that War Secretary Stimson, Navy Secretary Knox, Knudsen, E. T. Stettinius, O.P.M Director of Priorities, and Leon Henderson, Price Control Administrator, had asked to appear before the committee today in a closed session on the priorities question.

HITLER-DARLAN PACT CONFIRMED BY PETAIN GOV'T

Communique Says Effects Of Negotiations Will Be Felt Soon

TERMS NOT DISCLOSED

Vichy, May 14 (AP)—The Petain Government approved today terms negotiated by Hitler and Vice-Premier Jean Darlan, presenting the United States with what diplomatic circles called "the accomplished fact of European co-operations designed to halt American entry into the war."

There still was no official indication of what the terms involved but a communique, issued after the Cabinet meeting, said "the effects of these negotiations will be felt soon."

Admiral Darlan, who also is the Vichy regime's foreign minister, was disclosed this week to have met Hitler at an undisclosed time and place in the presence of Foreign Minister Ribbentrop.

Diplomatic circles were agreed generally that the terms included not only economic but political collaboration as well between Vichy and the Germans.

Flight Of Hess Forecast By Edmonton Man

Edmonton, May 14—(CP)—Harry Snider, 60-year-old Russian-born amateur prophet, read of the sensational flight to Britain of Rudolf Hess, Hitler's right-hand man, and said triumphantly:

"I told you so!"

And he quoted from this prediction he made one night more than six months ago to a reporter:

"A great man will go to England from Germany and give tremendous aid in speeding the British victory."

That forecast was published in an Edmonton paper Nov. 11, 1940, along with Mr. Snider's prophecy that this war will end Aug. 31 this year and Hitler and three other dictators will die of violence within a week of that time.

The former live stock buyer, now unemployed, lives here with his wife and five children. He came to Canada from Russia in 1912 and lived for a time in Winnipeg, where he married the former Clara Simovich in 1917. Later he lived in Vegreville, Alta., and other points and came to Edmonton fifteen years ago.

Axis Army Retires To First Positions, Steadily Harried

Strong Italian Post South Of Addis Ababa Is Taken With 500 Prisoners

FOE EQUIPMENT TAKEN

Cairo, May 14 (AP) — British headquarters announced today that Axis troops on the Egyption frontier has withdrawn to their original positions south and west of Salum, where they were being "continuously harassed" by British forces.

The British command said the Axis troops were thrown back about 40 miles.

"In the Salum area the enemy has again withdrawn to his original positions south and west of Salum, where he is being continuously harried by our mechanized patrols," said the daily communique.

British forces besieged at Tobruk, within Libya, carried out a "limited offensive operation," it was said, destroying two German medium sized tanks and inflicting "many casualties."

In Ethiopian operations, the British comment reported capture of "a strongly defended enemy position" in the lake area south of Addis Ababa along with 500 prisoners, two batteries of artillery, five light tanks and an anti-tank gun.

Two forces were reported still converging on Amba Alagi, 280 miles northeast of Addis Ababa, while another force occupied Algi, described as an "important post north of Yavello."

The rearguard of Italian forces fleeing on the Neghelli-Dalle road, the communique said, has lost more than 100 men as prisoners.

Of Iraq, the communique added simply "The situation is quiet."

Many Applications For Hog Bonus Received

Toronto, May 14 —(CP)— Hundreds of applications for payments under the Ontario Government's hog-subsidy plan which became effective May 5 have been received at the newly-opened subsidy office in the Ontario Department of Agriculture.

"As a farmer has 90 days in which to file an application, we are hoping that shippers will hold their applications until they have a number on hand so it will save work in the department and in the treasury and also save postage costs," Agriculture Minister Dewan said.

The bonus calls for $1 a head on Grade A and 50 cents on Grade B1.

IDEAS, INVENTIONS SPEED PRODUCTION

New Devices Help to Make Hundreds of Fighter Ships Instead of Dozens

Buffalo, N.Y., May 14.—(AP) — Warplane engineers disclosed today the clue to how they have helped make hundreds of fighter ships 'grow' where only dozens grew before.

It is "inventions".

Bell Aircraft Corporation, producer of Airacobra interceptor pursuit planes, announced a six-month report covering work through April showed its employees turned in 81 ideas, of which 23 already have been adopted.

Curtiss-Wright Corporation airplane division engineers likewise reported employee-inventions have contributed greatly to the firm's present output of more than 10 P-40 fighters daily.

Here are some of the inventions making this possible:

Rivet-maker —a machine which swallows heavy wire from big spools and spouts out rivets like drops of water. Besides turning the rivets out by the hundreds of thousands, the machine has cut rejections from 17 per cent to less than one per cent, and with a 20 per cent increase in strength.

Spar Cap Milling Machine—This makes wing beams. Formerly the operation cost $175, took 100 hours, the invention slashed it to $8, 45 minutes.

Leading-edge rollers — They form the skin for Wings' front edges, this process once took three or four hours, now takes three minutes.

Canadian Seamen Manning Corvette Determined To Make Amends For Miss

(Foster Barclay, Canadian Press Staff Writer, has just completed a long voyage aboard a Canadian-built corvette in the North Atlantic, sharing with the crew the dangers of wartime life at sea. In this article he tells something of the life and work of Canadians serving aboard these sturdy ships.)

(By Foster Barclay)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Aboard Royal Navy Corvette in North Atlantic, May 14.—(CP)—Canadian seamen manning a Corvette in British waters won't be satisfied until they have a Focke-Wolfe propeller tacked to the mast. They missed a Nazi bomber at almost "point-blank" range and are determined to make amends.

The Canadian-built Corvette was sub-hunting and escorting merchantmen during one of our days at sea when the plane attacked and escaped after a "hot reception". The sailors maintain they should have bagged it as it flew low over the sea.

Art Jackson, 21-year-old Regina gun-layer, was pacing the pom-pom bridge when he sighted the bomber on the horizon and warned the officer on watch.

Two sharp signals sounded throughout the ship. Excited sailors clamped tin helmets over the head and tumbled from hatchways. They had barely reached their stations before the raider, machine-guns spitting, skimmed over the masts of the merchant convoy. Six bombs were dropped, but they fell harmlessly into the sea.

As the plane passed within 50 yards of this Corvette, Lt. F. Johnson of Vancouver ordered a burst of ten rounds from the pom-pom. The shells scattered just below the fuselage and the pilot veered and plumped two bombs near the ship, climbed into the sun and disappeared.

Ronnie Gibbeson, 21-year-old former Victoria logger trembled from excitement as he cleaned and greased the "pom". "We nearly had him", he said. "If our shots had been a little higher we'd have blasted the plane from the sky. It was almost point-blank range".

Jackson, too, glowed as he relived the few seconds of action.

"When he came close I thought he was going to hit the masts". He said, "we won't miss the next one".

CITY AND DISTRICT NEWS

MOTORISTS WARNED TO DRIVE CAREFULLY

Motorists who persist in driving with reckless abandon over Belleville streets, can expect little sympathy in the City Police Court if apprehended. Repeatedly Magistrate E. J. Butler, K.C., has issued warnings through the Press to drivers who possess what is commonly known as "itchy accelerator feet," stating that careless driving and excessive speed violators may expect no consideration, if convicted.

Traffic Officer Doug Ellis mounted the police department motorcycle this week to commence the summer period of patrolling the city streets. Since the patrol was inaugurated numerous motorists who have been found in violation of the city traffic laws have been apprehended and summoned into court. Yesterday no less than four such persons were summoned.

CAT ADOPTS 25 BARRED ROCK CHICKS

Motherly instinct has no bounds and this fact was clearly proven when a cat was found mothering 25 chicks in Shannonville.

Early yesterday, William Day, Purdy Street, chicken hatchery operator, delivered 25 Barred Rock chicks to Ira Cook in Shannonville and continued to Deseronto to make another delivery. On his return trip Mr. Day was stopped at Shannonville by Mr. Cook, where he was witness to one of the strangest sights of his lifetime.

Mothering the 25 chicks was Mr. Cook's Persian cat, both the animal and the baby chicks apparently being quite contented with their new positions.

COUNTY PAYS $3,600 HOSPITAL ACCOUNTS

Payment of indigent hospitalization accounts amounting to $3,600 to ten Ontario hospitals and institutions featured the regular meeting of the Hastings County Council Finance Committee recently. The major part of the money ordered paid for hospitalization, will go to the Belleville General Hospital.

Routine business, payment of ordinary accounts, etc., occupied the remainder of the meeting.

RIVER WATER LEVELS LOWER THAN USUAL

Levels of the Moira River are lower at present than at any corresponding period over a number of years, according to city officials.

In many parts of the river the bed is visible while numerous "islands" are showing gravel tops above the surface of the water.

Scarcity of the ordinary spring rains is said to be the cause of the extremely low level.

AIRCRAFTMAN PASSES DISCIPLINARIAN EXAM

Aircraftman Earle Frye, former Front Street tobacconist and member of the Belleville Kiwanis Club, has succeeded in passing his examinations in disciplinarian courses at the Trenton Base of the Royal Canadian Air Force.

A veteran of the last war, Aircraftman Frye joined the Air Force some time ago. He is a former policeman and spent ten years on the Toronto police force under Brigadier Draper. He played a prominent part in unravelling the well-known Union Station robberies some years ago.

MORE INTEREST NOTED IN BOATING ACTIVITIES

The rising price of automobiles is causing a rejuvenated interest in the once-popular sport of pleasure boating according to waterfront frequenters who state that this season has seen more activity in this respect in the Belleville harbor than for several years past. Boat owners who ordinarily would not be thinking of launching their pleasure boats until much later in the season already have their crafts in the water and others which have stayed on the dock all summer are now being scraped and painted in readiness for a season's boating.

The fact that money seems a great deal more plentiful this spring is in some measure responsible for the added interest noted in pleasure boating, it is stated.

WATER LEVEL IN BAY SAME AS IN 1940

Despite the fact that there has been but very little rain to raise the levels of the water in the Great Lakes this spring, the Bay of Quinte is at practically the same level as at a comparative date last year, it was stated by Mr. Joseph Waddell, local harbormaster.

Strangely enough, stated Mr. Waddell, when navigation opened this season, the water level in the bay was higher than that recorded last year. Since, however, levels have fallen away to normal, quite the contrary to the usual procedure which ordinarily sees a raise at this time of year. Water levels run in cycles, according to Mr. Waddell, with every seven years seeing a high mark noted.

BUOY TENDER BUSY ON DUTIES IN BAY

Following up her routine duties of attending navigational aids along the shipping routes of the St. Lawrence River and Lakes Ontario and Erie, the Department of Transport buoy tender "Grenville" called at the Belleville Harbor during Tuesday evening and was still tied up at the Government Dock this morning.

The "Grenville" is at present engaged in laying and replacing navigation spars along the Bay of Quinte route in addition to attending gas and electric buoys. Included in the "Grenville's" teritory are the waters between Cornwall, on the St. Lawrence, to Sarnia on the St. Clair River.

LARGE QUANTITY TOMATO PLANTS READY FOR GROUND

Upwards of ten million tomato plants will find their way in fields of the district at the latter part of the months and the early part of June.

A Wellington, Ont., greenhouse owner said today that the plants thus far have "come through" splendidly and are attaining a sturdy growth. Frost precaution has prevented any losses from this source and unless a heavy black frost descends upon the district between now and planting time, prospects of damage are negligible.

A number of city gardens have already been planted with tomatoes.

POLICE BLOTTER

Reg. Hinchey, manager of the Deacon Aaero-suit plant, reported to Chief Kidd today the fact that his lady operators were being accosted by young men while returning home from their night shift employment.

The girls employed on the company's war work night shift return home between 1.00 and 2.00 a.m. Mr. Hinchey told the police. Last night two of the girls were followed by men in automobiles, who persisted in trying to "pick up" the girls on their way home. A description of the men who have been endeavouring to molest these young ladies was given the police and further investigations will follow.

"If this practice results in the apprehension of these smart-alecks I can promise no consideration will be shown them if convicted," warned Chief Kidd today as he assured Mr. Hinchey protection for his employees.

Two inebriates ran afoul of the law after imbibing too freely of intoxicants last night and were lodged in the cell block at the police station along with five transients, who sought shelter for the night. The drunks will appear for hearing on Friday.

Many Requests For Copies Of Tourist Folders

Stating that they had received numerous requests for information regarding the vacation possibilities of the City of Belleville and Hastings County, officials of the Ontario Government Travel and Publicity Bureau have requested a large number of copies of tourist folders issued by the joint publicity committees of the City Council and Hastings County Council, J. O. Herity, Secretary - Manager of the Chamber of Commerce announced today.

In addition to this, Mr. Herity stated requests well in excess of those of a year ago, are coming in to his office from not only potential Canadian tourists but from people south of the border.

In an effort to increase the tourist industry in this district, the joint tourist and publicity committees of the city and county will inaugurate an advertising campaign in metropilitan newspapers. According to government publicity officials, the folders and pamphlets issued here are of an exceptionally high calibre, displaying not only the advantages of the vacation spots throughout the far-flung district, but detailed information as to where holiday accommodation can be secured.

The barrier/of visa and passport difficulties, announced in June last year to take effect on July 1, and which resulted in a definite falling-off of the tourist industry here as well as in other parts of Canada, has been disposed of, Mr. Herity declared, and this fact alone should bear important fruit. The announcement regarding immigration requirements gave enemy propagandists the opportunity to get in their work last year, the results of which were seen in the falling-off of the industry.

Kiwanis Club To Hold Tag Day For War Victims

In an effort to assist the bomb victims of Great Britain, the Kiwanis Club have decided to hold a tag day on Saturday, May 24th and it will be designated Kiwanis Telegram British War Victims' Fund and the club will derive no benefits from the results excepting a labor well done. This is the first major effort by a service club in the city to get behind this worthy cause and it is expected the citizens and residents of the surrounding district will generously assist.

The club has been very active since the war began in assisting worthwhile objectives and the members believe that the victims of outraged bombing in Britain should be materially assisted as they are in the front line of battle. The members, the majority active business men, are willing to sacrifice their time on a busy Saturday to assist the taggers. The ladies of Kiwanis, who are willing on every occasion to help the men folk of the club, graciously volunteered their services as taggers and they will be accompanied by members of the Kiwanis Club, attired in berets, bearing the crest of the club, who will carry the tag boxes. Every cent that is collected will be turned over to the British War Victims' Fund sponsored by the Evening Telegram of Toronto.

Early Closing Under Discussion By Garage Operators' Assoc.

The early closing of garages, with nine o'clock in the evening favored as a suggested time for closing, came up for considerable discussion by garage operators of this district as members met in regular monthly dinner meeting of the Garage Operators' Association, Hastings and Prince Edward Branch, held at the Quinte Hotel on Tuesday evening.

Mr. Jack Trudeau, past president of the local association and vice-president of the provincial organization, in a report of the last provincial directors' meeting held in Kingston, stated that this matter had come up for considerable discussion at that time, and due to the shortage of labor in garages and also through a desire to give the garage operator a well-deserved break, early closing was receiving serious consideration by the directorate. Should the matter receive provincial sanction, special provisions will be made, somewhat similar to the present schedule among druggists, where one garage in each locality will remain open all night to take care of emergency calls.

Would Re-arrange Fiscal Year

Following a discussion re the dissatisfaction arising out of the present system of having the fiscal year end on February 1st., at which time all membership dues become payable, a motion was put forward by Mr. Bert Boyce advocating that the local organization's fiscal year end on May 1st., and that efforts be made to have the provincial council re-arrange their fiscal year to coincide.

Mr. Bill Davies, chairman of the apprenticeship committee, gave warning to garage operators of this district that a shortage of mechanics loomed as almost a certainty. In order to overcome this shortage the government were offering to sponsor an apprentice training class at the Belleville Collegiate during the months of July and August, providing a class of fifteen sponsored pupils could be secured, these students to be guaranteed employment at the conclusion of their course. The classes would be held under the provisions of the Dominion-Provincial Youth Training Plan, with students being allowed maintenance subsidy while taking the courses.

Explains Flat Rate System

The advantages of garage operators using the flat rate shop manual as the only fair method, both from the garage operators' and customers' point of view, to determine costs of service jobs, was extolled by Mr. Ed. Edwards of Lindsay, Canadian representative of "Motor." "Information in the flat rate shop manual has been collected from 150 manufacturers' manuals and is based on actual factory time required to do a certain job," said Mr. Edwards. "Manufacturers long ago quit guessing as to the cost of a certain job and garage operators cannot afford to do so," he said.

Continuing the custom established at a former meeting of taking up a silver collection for the benefit of the British War Victims' Fund, members generously donated $8.95 for this worthy cause. Musical entertainment was afforded with Trevor Rolley at the piano and Larry Brown as accompanist on the sax. Tim Lynch acted as song-leader. Mr. Edwards, the guest speaker for the evening, was introduced by Bill Davies, while member appreciation was expressed by Harold Vaughan. This was the last Operators' meeting to be held in Belleville for several months, it being decided to hold the next three meetings at Picton, Trenton and Tweed.

Obituary

C. CAMPBELL ST. CHARLES

Particulars regarding the death of Charles Campbell St. Charles, a former resident of Belleville, which was announced in this paper yesterday, have been learned. Death was due to injuries sustained in a motor car accident late Monday afternoon at Dunvegan Road and Lonsdale Road, Toronto, when his car collided with another car at that intersection. He died in the Private Patients' Pavilion at the Toronto General Hospital on Tuesday without regaining consciousness. Failure to observe that Lonsdale Road was a stop street was the cause of the accident.

Surviving him are four sisters, Mother Ethna, Loretto Abbey, Toronto, Miss Mae St. Charles, Miss Helene St. Charles, Toronto and Miss Margaret St. Charles of this city; one brother, Dr. W. F. St. Charles, Toronto.

Two Men Suffer Slight Injuries

Two persons were slightly injured and two automobiles were badly damaged in a traffic accident six miles east of Havelock early Tuesday morning.

The injured were the drivers of the two cars, John A. Shannon, Fish and Game Overseer, Marmora, who had both knees bruised and Kenneth Spence, 268 Thomas St., Peterborough, whose chest was injured.

Shannon was driving east and Spence travelling toward Peterborough when the two vehicles sideswiped each other as they passed and both machines were badly damaged.

The accident was investigated by Provincial Constable Archie Grayling of Havelock.

WAR MOVES ON

Famous battles of history bear place names like Thermopylae, Saratoga, Waterloo, Gettysburg, Sedan, the Marne . . . But in this war the names of battles are generalized: we have seen the battles of France, Norway, Greece . . .

Reason is that the war of position, classic since organized human combat began, has become a war of movement.

SWASTIKA OVER ATHENS

A gentle Mediterranean breeze preceded the Nazi hordes through the streets of Athens. The Greeks waited, reports a Homer of these times, "proud and calm."

Then the "new order" came to the very home of order: tanks, lumbering like prehistoric beetles, marching feet ordered by a prehistoric urge.

Iron on the move, marble standing.

The Nazis might cap the Acropolis with a tank, to leave it there beside the Parthenon as a monument to Nazi might. The Greeks would see it as a rusting satire on the conceit of one more new barbarism. Nowhere do the limitations of the "new order" seem so sharply defined as against the ancient dignity of Greece.

Courage in time of trial has made the Greeks glorious in defeat; they yield to their overwhelming adversary only a shamefaced triumph.

Today Greece may be merely a stepping stone in the Nazi path. Tomorrow the Nazis will be merely a page in Greek history.—Christian Science Monitor.

Little Benny's Note Book

I was taking a walk with pop for his appetite, and I said, Hay pop, I made the easiest dime this afternoon I ever made in my life, do you want to hear about it?

Yes, indeed, pop said. Im always fassinated by stories of dazzling rises to fortune he said, and I said, Well I was walking along just walking along, and some lady was pushing a baby and she told me she would give me a dime to watch the baby in the baby carriage while she went in a grocer store, and G wizzickers pop she was only in there about 3 minutes and anyways the baby wat a cinch to watch because it kept making such funny faces they were almost worth a dime to see instead of getting a dime to watch, so how was that for a cintchy way to make a dime pop?

Perhaps it was too easy, pop said. I well recollect one time being in a friend's house and playing poker for money, a thing I really dont approve of but the other men were all anxious to play and I didn't want to be a wet blanket, and besides I had gone there for that purpose, and anyway I won 4 dollers, and it was all so easy that I began to think of money in an easy come easy go sort of way, and before I knew it I was shedding money right and left on trifles risky loans and luxuries of every nature, until the entire 4 dollers had disappeared, and 3 more with them, he said, and I said, Well G pop, I thought of that so I thought the best idea might be to put it in some good investment.

Your dime bank might be the best investment place, pop said, and I said, Well I thought of that, but dime banks are libel to get lost. Puds Simkins lost his, and if he had of lost it 2 days sooner there would still of been money in it, so I invested it in a dime's worth of assorted hard candies that just have to last a long time because you cant hardly bite them if you try.

Being the end of the subject.

VICTORY WAR LOAN

Canadians have been prepared for the new war loan and the figure of $600,000,000, while large, will not daunt the people. They will be ready to meet their obligations to their country by loyal support of the forthcoming Victory Loan drive.

Arrangements are such that the greatest general support to the loan will be made possible.

Signs are plentiful of full-hearted co-operation so as to make this undertaking a success since it supplies the sinews of war to our gallant fighting men and our nurses who are helping to maintain the priceless possession of British liberty in the world.

From now on people should think of doing their utmost to raise this money and to exceed the total mentioned in the announcement.

STRANGE STORY

Rudolf Hess' flight by plane from Germany to Scotland is romance brought right into life. Much of international politics veers far from such a sensational event as where one man takes the world stage under the most unique circumstances in history.

Out of that mad, strange, dark, barbarous, worse than pagan world of Nazi Germany has come this psychological development of the Huns' way of life. Truth is ever stranger than fiction.

The interest in this case is intense because of the unique position this man held in the ranks of the supposed iron-bound one-man country which is the enemy of Britain; he is a member of the inner circle which is in the know of everything Teutonic or at least Hitlerian. What will the future unfold of Hess' purpose in his departure from Germany? Until that story is told the world will watch for every bit of news of this strange man.

What will the sensation be in Germany among the people when they get to know? What effect will it have on Hitler's entourage, his immediate circle? Who will not be under suspicion of a liklihood of another escape from the land of the Huns? Will Hitler watch his friends as closely as a cat watches a mouse lest they leave him?

RURAL MAIL COURIER

Every person enjoys spring time, but the Rural Mail Courier (Toronto) says, "perhaps there are no other people in Canada who can appreciate and enjoy the beauty of spring more than the rural mail courier. For the past months he has faced daily sleet and snow, wind and cold, mud and drifts; appreciating to the limit the fine days when it was a pleasure to be out, but always with that apprehension and wonderment as to what the morrow would bring.

"Spring is here and knowing that the fine summer days are ahead, we need not worry about the morrow, but enjoy the beautiful spring time to the full."

The courier says that many routes, if not the majority, include byways that are a picture of desolation in the bleak winter time, but now as we pass along the same way we can listen to the songs of the birds.

Those who live in towns and cities and others miss the trials of the byways during the winter time for their cars stay to the regular roads but they are glad enough when spring comes to wander from the highways into some of these byways to see nature in her dress of greatest beauty.

Strength of the British arm is being felt by the Axis forces in the Salum area, five small advancing columns of the enemy having been beaten back. Tobruk still holds firm against the Italians and Germans. In these areas the British forces have chosen their ground and will give a good account of themselves. The world will remember Mr. Churchill's reference made last week to desert warfare and be confident in the British position.

Hitler has two worries on his hands, the unsolved Munich bomb plot and the flight to safety by Rudolf Hess from the land of Adolf Hitler. How could two such events happen to Hitler and to Germany? Adolf might well ask. But Rudolf won't have to tell Adolf. Even militarism cannot prepare against such loop-holes in the perfect tyranny.

OURSELVES AND OTHERS...

BY

BEAUTY AND THE BEASTS

When one thinks of Hitler and his ruthless gangsters, one scarcely associates them with the gentle influence of a female companion. In fact Nazi Germany seems to be a world for men only.

Yet, according to an English writer, there is plently of "romance" in the lives of the Nazi leaders. But it is romance of a sordid nature which reflects the characters of the three leading creators of the "New Order."

Take the arch-wolf, Hitler. In his early days in Vienna he was called the man who "blushed in the presence of ladies." There, apparently then as there is now, the unhealthy atmosphere which his satellites have tried to turn into a myth.

There was mystery, however, in his associations with Therese Raubal, his niece, who fell in love with her uncle. Yet she killed herself because he proved to be a violent sympathetic lover who broke the spirit of the poor working girl. The time had come for him to find a more influential woman. It was not long before he found her.

She was Winifred Wagner, the great composer's daughter-in-law, and the most important woman in Hitler's life. She opened the gates for Hitler to step into a world he had never known. In her drawing room he met industrialists and generals who financed his movement. She took the arch-fiend to her heart and her art. She was born in Hastings, England, of humble parents. To Hitler she was a friend, mother and inspiration. Without her he would not have been what he is today—which is no compliment to Frau Wagner.

But when little Adolf became Der Fuehrer, a different type of woman attracted him. He was roused by the beautiful Renate Muller (Sunshine Susie), stunning blonde who told her friends how Hitler used to drag her into a room in the chancellory, hold her hand for hours, always talking, talking, talking. One evening, she said, he suddenly jumped to his feet, stretched out his hand in the Nazi salute and boasted loudly, "I have held my hand like this for three hours during a parade. I have never trembled. No other man can do it as long as I."

Renate said he made an ass of himself. And that proved her undoing. She avoided Hitler's company; Nazi film producers snubbed her and she never played a major film role again. Her early death is said to be a direct result of her association with Hitler.

Then came Leni Riefenstahl, whose unbounded admiration flattered the Big Bad Wolf. Before he cast her to the jackals, he rewarded her with the official order to make a film of the Berlin Olympic games. Leni spent Nazi money like a drunken sailor. The picture was a flop.

Now, it is claimed, Hitler has settled down.

But there are those who insist that he has quietly married Eva Rapp, the assistant of his friend and "court photographer" Hoffman, who once took a picture of Hitler, and standing behind her camera, asked him "to smile." He has smirked at her ever since.

Now comes Goebbels, club-footed monstrosity, whose home-wrecking qualities are second to his propagandist lies. He is married to Frau Quandt, whose husband, a rich German industrialist, learned to his pain what happens when a Nazi wolf takes a fancy to your wife. One day Quandt found himself in prison, his marriage quickly dissolved and his money transferred to his wife, the present Frau Goebbels.

She probably regrets the deal by this time for she rarely stays in Germany for any length of time. She can nearly always be found in Switzerland or in Italy, sometimes Holland. And the ugly little Nazi wolf-licker would have been divorced long ago had it not been for Hitler's intervention. He wanted to avoid a public scandal.

Due to lack of space this article will be concluded in tomorrow's city edition. The remainder of the sordid love-life of Goebbels will be disclosed, as will that of the corpulent bemedalled Goering who actually was in love with his first wife.

Heal Hitler

A correspondent in the British Chiropody Journal writes of a remarkable skin disease cure caused by bomb shock.

A patient of his, he says, suffered from psoriasis, which in spite of treatment, gradually grew worse. The patient, despairing of ever finding a cure, went to stay with a relative. During her visit the place was bombed, and one bomb fell a few yards from the house where she was staying, rocking the building with the exrlosion.

"My patient got the shock of her life, naturally," he writes, "but to her amazement the psoriasis began to clear up from that moment, and within three days all traces had disappeared.

"It is not suggested that all patients suffering from this disease should be grouped at vulnerable spots to receive Hitler's ironmongery with a view to a possible cure. but should any sufferers find themselves in such circumstances they might take encouragement from this patient's experience and say, "Heil, Hitler', pronouncing it Heal, Hitler"." — Leeds Yorkshire Post.

ON THE RECORD

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

Abbey, Museum, Commons

New York, May 14—In order to have resonance in the world today, words and deeds have to be in some proportion to the events. They have to be somewhat adequate. Mr. Hoover's speech was nowhere near the events. It seemed to me to have been uttered from some other time, from some other planet, and this in spite of several references to facing "hard facts." It seemed to me that hard facts were nowhere in Mr. Hoover's picture.

It happened that Mr. Hoover's speech coincided with news of the bombing of Westminster Abbey, the British Museum, and the House of Commons. The three objectives represent the very heart of western civilization. No three structures in the world more completely embody the dignity of man: The Abbey; the Museum; the Commons.

The Christian church and tomb of heroes, sages, statesmen, poets. The world's greatest library; receptacle of the wisdom of ages; record of the timeless thought of man; fountain to which the thinkers of all countries, in all languages, have repaired, open to all at the service of all. The Commons, symbol of the longest, most uninterupted, and, on the whole, most dignified and enlightened experience of popular government that the world has ever known.

* * *

When the Nazis burned the Reichstag the world should have leapt to arms. For in all the wildness there is always a certain pattern, ominous, symbolical, portentous. When they set fire to synagogues they made a little trial arson on the abodes of the human soul. Soon, and inevitably, it would be the Abbey. When they burnt the books in the public square—just a few years ago—soon, soon the world should have known, it would be the Museum.

The Abbey, the Commons, the Museum are not just buildings. They are history—the history of the human soul and the human mind, struggling upward, ever upward, toward light toward freedom, toward decency, toward knowledge toward grandeur.

They are immense symbols of humanity's piety faith, and hope.

They are beyond the present and beyond England. They belong to mankind — to the past — to the future.

They are the link between what man, for thousands of years, has considered good and worthy to be praised and the better and truer tomorrow which he must build.

These are what are falling, falling, falling in the moonlit night, or falling in the blazing light of the fires of hell. Falling is the temple of man's soul, falling are the monuments to the great dead that remind us constantly of the sacrament of life, falling is the careful structure of beauty and wisdom, falling are the parliaments of man. Falling is western civilization. A world is passing away in wantonness o'er-thrown. Wanton. Senseless. Insane. Idiotic. Evil. Even trivial.

Yes, even trivial. Trivial this childish, barbarian, crazy assault upon the human race. A few boys with some machines and explosives press buttons, and where are you, Shakespeare, and where are you, Blake, and where are you, O long, deep memorable history of man?

This war is to stop the destroyers of civilization in their tracks. To defend the Abbey, the Museum, and the Commons. To see to it that though they lie in rubble, and the very dead are exploded out of their tombs into the light of arson brighter than day, and the records of a thousand searching brains are mingled with the ashes of a surprised child's hair, and the representatives of the people must meet under the sky of a roofless hall—to see to it that nevertheless:

The Abbey stands; the Museum lives; the Commons meets. Because the human will cannot be broken.

It is better to say nothing at all, perhaps. To stand still in deepest awe. To look. To gaze hard, not to avert the eyes—not for a moment—to stare, to think, to realize

To realize a world without the Abbey, the Museum, the Commons.

A world without aspiration, love, reverence, wisdom, freedom.

A world of barracks, and prisons, and factories, and slaves, where wisdom is the Voelkicher Beobachter, and the people an incorporated shrieking hyena applauding itself with monotonous animal-like cries.

It is not an adequate comment that Britain cannot defeat the Nazis. If not, what then? It is not an adequate comment that we must send more and more materials to Britain to help her defeat the Nazis but we must not see to it that goods get there, because getting them will mean that our ships will be shot at. It is not an adequate comment that we can do more for Britain by letting the goods go to the bottom of the ocean than by risking our skins.

That is sophistical argument. It is not candid, and it is not true. There is a touch-and-go chance that we may save enough civilization to build another world on, but no chance at all unless we risk our skins.

And our lives, fortunes, and sacred honor.

And our savings, wages, and standard of living.

The cross, the book, the gavel. Aspiration, inspiration, order. In one word: Humanity.

You are worried, Mr. Hoover, about post-war bankruptcy. You mean our savings will be gone.

And if Hitler wins?

What bankruptcy will that be? What are savings? Are they in the bank? Or in the Abbey, the Museum, and the Commons?

A MOA CEMETERY

London Times.

An article in the Wellington Dominion describes how thousands of moa bones were excavated recently from a swamp near Oamaru, South Island, New Zealand. A selection of the bones, comprising the remains of perhaps 100 moas, was taken to the Dominion Museum for cleaning and sorting.

These gigantic flightless fowl, bigger than ostriches or any birds on earth today, lived centuries ago in the hill country of New Zealand, and are believed by the Maoris to have been able to kill man or dog with a kick. Other large moa cemeteries have been disinterred in the same neighborhood in the past.

In this latest discovery it is assumed that the massive birds, perhaps coming to drink at the brink of what was then a hill lagoon, broke through the crust of the swamp and became engulfed in the bog. Their skeletons were preserved by the silt and by a deposit of heavy blue clay brought down by the creek feeding the swamp in later years.

A SMALL PRICE

Mr. Ilsley is heavy-handed. The imposts he announced at Tuesday's budget session will dig deep into our pockets. But even these taxes are a cheap price to pay for personal freedom and dignity. A tiny price when compared, as it cannot properly be, with the price being paid and cheerfully—by our cousins across the ocean night after bomb-filled night. — Kamloops Sentinel.

The Source Is Important

Confronted by modern warfare, Canadians are being forced to think in terms of millions and billions of dollars. We must fight with planes and tanks and ships and guns, the cost of which makes even the last war seem comparatively inexpensive.

Many of us rumple our hair and wonder where all these huge sums are coming from.

In times such as these, we are apt to overlook some homely truths. We forget that the Great Lakes are fed by thousands of tiny rivulets that trickle into larger streams and rivers. We fail to recall that in most cases the man who is successful financially learned early the necessity to work harder in the first place and then watch his expenditure of nickels and dimes. We are prone to overlook the fact that fine homes and good automobiles had their beginning in extra efforts and the careful management of nickels and dimes. With her population limited, Canada is utterly dependent upon each and every wage earner in the country in the task of financing our war to a victorious end. Without the money which trickles from the pocket books of the humblest citizens, there can be no great flood of money into the public treasury.

The general rule which guides the individual to financial security calls for two definite undertakings by the individual. He must be willing to pay the physical price, in the form of hard work, and he must take steps to leave a margin between his total income and his total expenditure.

And since the country is so dependent upon the individual during wartime, that two-edged rule becomes much more important.

Let's do some simple arithmetic. Assume that there are approximately three and one-half million wage-earners in Canada. If each one of these pared off a nickel here and a dime there from his ordinary everyday expenditure, to make up a total of just one dollar a week, the total savings for all Canada would amount to upwards of two hundred million dollars a year. That's one side of it. If at the same time, the Government, the employers, the labour unions and the general public made it possible for each of those three and one-half million wage-earners to work an extra four hours a week at an average rate of 50c per hour, and they made the proceeds available for paying their share of taxes, the citizens of Canada would have another six hundred million dollars for this purpose.

In other words, the combination of the saving of a few dimes each week and four hours' extra work during that week would supply more than three-quarters of a billion dollars for war purposes, over and above what the country has now.

If it were possible to bring about such a new situation in Canada, we would be able to take even such a drastic budget as Mr. Ilsley brought down a few days ago with comparative ease.

THE BEST TEACHER

Old Failure is a teacher with no nonsense in his school,
No time has he to dally with the playboy or the fool.
He keeps his pupils toiling till they get their lessons learned,
And he tells them skill and knowledge are two gifts that must be earned.

Old Failure pampers no one and there's no one he prefers,
His discipline's impartial when some carelessness occurs.
The penalty's exacted from whoever it may be,
But he always rises wiser who is taught at Failure's knee.

By trial and by error and by effort down the years
Men are tested for their courage and by bitter doubts and fears.
For real conquests aren't permitted to the faint of heart and frail,
But are held for men of vision who are not afraid to fail.

The price of growth is struggle; true success is bought with pain.
Who seeks ultimate achievement finds it difficult to gain.
And who'd shape a better method than is known on earth today
Must have endless pluck and patience and through failure learn the way.

You'd Be Surprised!

ORCHIDS TO YOU

The war is interfering seriously with the wild orchid business of northern Latin America and the Orient.

Orchid hunters in the damp, tropical forests of Mexico, Brazil, Venezuela, Columbia and many other parts of the world sold their finds chiefly to collectors and specialists in Europe.

The orchid family is one of the largest groups of flowering plants, and there are 750 known species.

Orchids grow as far north as Greenland and about 140 species are native to North America north of Mexico.

Most of the most gorgeously flowered species are indigenous to the tropics.

There are two general types of orchids — those that grow in the ground and those that are parasites on other plants.

It is a common, but erroneous, belief that parasitic orchids live entirely on the air. They derive much of their nourishment from the host plant.

Natural vanilla, the common flavoring and perfume extract, is made from the dried pods of tropical American orchids.

Orchid seeds are said to be the smallest seeds in the plant world. The seed capsule of some species, it is estimated, contains about 74,000,000 seeds, and an ordinary thimble would hold a million orchid seeds.

In England a titled member of the London Stock Exchange is known as an orchid. The slang term originated many years ago when a young lord observed: "You know, when I'm in the House I feel like an orchid in a turnipfield!"

Sir James G. Frazer, in "The Golden Bough," makes the following interesting statement:

"With the ritual observed by the Druids in cutting the mistletoe we may compare the ritual which in Cambria is prescribed in a similar case. They say that when you see an orchid growing as a parasite on a tamarind tree, you should dress in white, take a new earthenware pot, then climb the tree at noon, break off the plant, put it in the pot and let the pot fall to the ground. After that you make in the pot a decoction which confers the gift of invulnerability."

Tropical orchids grow slowly and a seedling does not become commercially profitable for about a dozen years or so.

NEW INCOME TAX RATES COME UP FOR DISCUSSION

Extent to Which Large Incomes Should be Taxed Aired in House

BASIS OF TAX GIVEN

By FRANK FLAHERTY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, May 14—(CP) — Conflicting views on the extent to which large incomes should be taxed were aired in the House of Commons yesterday as the new income tax rates provided in the 1941-42 budget came under consideration.

Finance Minister Ilsley was not prepared to go as far as some members of the C.C.F. and New Democracy groups who suggested all large incomes should be taxed until the persons receiving them had left only enough to maintain a decent standard of living.

The Minister said the new rates hit higher incomes proportionately heavier than lower incomes and gave the House the key to the system on which they are based.

The government took the amount taxpayers in various income tax brackets had left after paying the old rate of taxation and proceeded to work out new rates, boosting the rates in proportion to the amount left. Thus if the tax on a low income amounted to five per cent of the amount the taxpayer had left, the tax on higher income would amount to six per cent of the amount left and so on up the scale.

"You will find a complete graduation right through," he said, "and the proportion which the income tax bears to the amount of income left rises progressively throughout the whole range. That is how we graded our increases and I think it is the fair way."

C.C.F. Leader Makes Charge

M. J. Coldwell, Acting C.C.F. House Leader said he had heard a report 20 new millionaires had been created since the outbreak of war and wanted to track it down. Mr. Ilsley said 483 Canadians paid taxes on incomes of $50,000 or more in the year 1939-40 but that he was unable to give the corresponding number for 1940-41 which, Mr. Coldwell said, might provide a clue to the rumored new crop of millionaires.

"If you took a larger amount from those who can afford to contribute you would be making a valuable contribution toward strengthening the morale of the Canadian people", A. M. Nicholson (C.C.F.-Mackenzie) told the Minister.

"Those with lower incomes are finding that the cost of living is increasing. They are being compelled to support war savings drives and the National War Savings campaign. They cannot turn down these appeals and they find it difficult to balance their budgets.

"I submit that those with really large incomes can pay a larger tax without seriously reducing their standards of living. While the Minister has made some increases I do not think he has gone far enough in increasing the tax on incomes of $50,000 and over".

Mr. Ilsley suggested this idea was based on the theory that the incomes of all the people should be the same but Mr. Nicholson said it was not. Victor Quelch (N.D.-Acadia) said he would not subscribe to Mr. Nicholson's suggestion of a higher tax on large incomes in peacetime but thought it appropriate for wartime.

Wants to Increase Tax

"I would be quite prepared to increase considerably the tax on the higher salaries, say down to the level of $3,000 or $4,000, so that people will have just enough to maintain a decent standard of living," said Mr. Quelch.

"Then it would not be necessary to sell bonds. If we had a proper scale of taxation there would be no money left with which to buy bonds."

Mr. Ilsley then explained the basis on which the new income tax rates were arrived at and made this comment:

"There are some people who because of their application and industry and character, because of a certain firmness of determination, because of some other qualities which may or may not be admirable have got themselves into a position where they are able to earn high incomes.

"When they do they are likely to buy larger houses, have more extensive grounds around them and have many pieces of fine furniture and so on. Suppose we come along and take everything above $3,000 or $4,000.

"That would mean wholesale liquidation of property and a complete upset in the standards of living and the arrangements which have been established. I am not at all sure that that would be in the interests of the community.

"In fact I am sure that a sudden inroad upon established arrangements of society would create so much dislocation that it would do more harm to our war effort."

Ontario Has Not Replied

Mr. Ilsley said all provinces but Ontario have replied to the Dominion Government's proposal that they vacate the income tax field for the duration of the war. British Columbia had accepted the proposal in principle and the other provinces were exploring the position. No word had been received from Ontario.

The House spent the night sitting on agriculture department estimates and heard Agriculture Minister Gardiner say indications were the grasshopper menace in the west would not be as grave as in other years.

Earlier Mr. Gardiner announced the fixing of a minimum price for butter during the high-production season, action demanded by farm organizations following the fixing of a maximum price—now discontinued—last December.

Trade Minister MacKinnon announced what he described as the largest single transaction in the history of the wheat trade, the sale of 120,000,000 bushels of wheat futures by the Canadian Wheat Board to the British Ministry of Food. He said the British Government insisted the price be not disclosed and also that the grain market remain open for the period of the transaction, which runs to July 31, 1942.

Mr. Ilsley's budget resolutions will receive further consideration today. The only resolutions approved yesterday were those providing increased levies on beer, malt and malt syrup.

The minister replied to suggestion that taxes on spirits be increased by stating that a sharp tax increase had been made in the fall of 1939 and it was felt a further rise would lead to more illicit importation manufacture and sale.

The Swedish government has agreed to supply Finland with 250,000 fruit tree buds for grafting.

Picton and District

Picton, May 14 (Special) — A special meeting of the town council was held on Monday evening to discuss street repairs. It was decided that the maximum expenditure this year would be $10,000. Last year the amount spent was $22,500. Council decided to spend less, when Mayor Nesbitt McKibbon pointed out, that the amount to be raised by taxes would mean an increased mill rate, possible 39 mills less the one mill government subsidy. His Worship stated that this was caused by a carryover of $8,500 from last year. Reeve Horace Colliver declared that the council of last year and the council of the previous year had not levied a high enough tax rate.

Of the amount to be spent on streets the greater part will be for repair work and patching and $500 for sidewalks, while it is planned to build one section of street each year.

A report showed, that the tax arrears at May 12, 1941 amounted to $9,914. It was decided to ask the Collegiate Board to reduce their requisition and to seek other methods of economy.

A letter was read regarding a public health nurse for the town but council felt that with an increased tax rate in view that this matter should be shelved for the present.

The I.O.D.E. was granted permission to hold a salvage campaign in Picton but it was pointed out that a campaign in the town and county is already being carried out by the schools and the Red Cross. Councillor William Henley decried the lack of co-operation between the I.O.D.E. and the Red Cross and felt that no patriotic grants should be made until all war organizations showed a spirit of co-operation.

Council had asked the Lord's Alliance to look into the matter of Sunday selling but the Alliance replied that it was the duty of the police officials to see that the laws are enforced.

Ribbentrop Hires A Killer

It is now a familiar phenomenon that murderers who have been sentenced to death in their own countries are received by the Wilhelmstrasse in Berlin as honored guests.

Ukrainian terrorists were long pronounced favorites of Herr von Ribbentrop. The assassins and pogrom-instigators of the Iron Guard waited upon him daily for orders before they returned to Rumania.

Ante Pavelic, the man behind the double murder of King Alexander of Jugoslavia and the French Foreign Minister, M. Barthou, is still in closest touch with the "Bureau Ribbentrop."

But even high officials of the German foreign office, accustomed to these constant visits from blood-stained "leaders," were startled when one day in the spring of 1940 their chief was called upon by no less a person than Ivan Mikhailoff, confederate of Pavelic and the head of the I.M.R.O.—the Internal Macedonian Revolutionary Organization.

This society, originally an underground movement in favor of Macedonian independence, developed after the World War into an increasingly dangerous hotbed of assassination and terrorism.

Of all the murderers on Hitler's visiting list Mikhailoff is the most brutal and coldblooded. Sentenced to death more than once by the Bulgarian courts, though without ever having attended the proceedings, he was banished from the country in 1935 after the military "coup d'etat" by the so-called "Zevno Club."

Until his reappearance in Berlin he led an insecure though a very comfortable existence in a variety of countries. His comforts were paid for by handsome German and Italian subsidies.

• • •

Mikhailoff, popularly spoken of in Bulgaria as "Vantche" (Killer), is a native of Serbian Macedonia.

With the bandit chief Alexander Todoroff, the last so-called "King of the Macedonian Hills," he carried out in 1923 the assassination of the Prime Minister Stambuliski, at the orders of Alexander Tsankoff. Mikhailoff selected from among his "comitadjis" those four "experts" who forced the Prime Minister first to dig his own grave, then cut off his nose and ears and killed him.

A year later Mikhailoff's friend and chief, Alexander Todoroff, was himself killed. His murder lay at the door of the Bulgarian general Alexander Protogeroff, a Macedonian who had long vied with the "King of the Hills" for leadership of I.M.R.O.

In 1928 Protogeroff was shot dead in broad daylight close to the Royal Palace. Mikhailoff wrote in his diary a few days later: "They are looking for the murderer, the fools! It was I who did it!"

Mikhailoff was unanimously appointed to succeed Protogeroff as head of I.M.R.O.

Under him I.M.R.O. terrorism grew worse and worse. His bands were the scourge of the Macedonian countryside. They levied illegal taxes, extorted large sums from the inhabitants, passed and executed sentences of death. They virtually controlled the machinery of state and declared all adherents of Protogeroff outlaws.

In 1930, after the murder of Pundeff, editor of Makedoniya and a member of the Protogeroff party, international indignation waxed so strong at these unending murders that the Bulgarian government determined to bring Mikhailoff to justice.

Pundeff was the one hundred and fifteenth victim of the private feud between Mikhailoff and the friends of his predecessor.

Two hundred and four barristers competed for the "honor" of defending Mikhailoff. Thousands of his supporters, conspicuous by their grey caps, green and brown military blouses and the revolvers at their hips, flocked to Sofia and occupied the court and all the surrounding streets. Mikhailoff alone failed to appear—he had repaired to his mountain fastness.

All the same, the trial was held. For days on end judges and jury debated the case in front of grim-faced, heavily armed bandits, who had come to prevent sentence being passed upon their lord and master. No wonder Mikhailoff was acquitted of his many murders.

Mikhailoff published a paper called Liberty or Death, and in it he sought to justify his bloody deeds.

It was in this paper that already in 1932 he announced the "approaching death by violence of King Alexander of Jugoslavia."

• • •

At about this time he received a visit from Ante Pavelic, the leader of the Croat revolutionary party "Ustachi." On that occasion the two men decided upon the assassination of Alexander, Mikhailoff promising to supply some of his toughest terrorists.

In February, 1933, at a secret I.M.R.O. congress Mikhailoff proclaimed a war of "fire and blood" against the Royal House and State of Jugoslavia. At the same time the Bulgarian government was sternly warned to take no measures against I.M.R.O.

Throughout the summer of 1933 hardly a day passed without its murder.

One Vlado Gheorgieff Chernozensky, Mikhailoff's chauffeur and trusted servant, was sentenced to death on several charges of murder. By Mikhailoff's intervention, however, the sentence was commuted to a term of imprisonment, from which Chernozensky was released a year later.

Chernozensky was the man who on October 9, 1934, at Marseilles, fired the fatal shots at King Alexander and Barthou, afterwards being overwhelmed by the crowd and trampled to death.

Although investigations quickly revealed Ivan Mikhailoff, with Ante Pavelic, as the brains behind the double murder, Mikhailoff's reign of terror in Bulgaria continued unchecked.

Finally, in 1935, a "putsch" by Colonels Veltcheff and Gheorgieff put an end to the misdoings of I.M.R.O., which was declared illegal. Judges were at last found with the courage to sentence Mikhailoff to death, if only in his absence. After he had succeeded in escaping from the police time after time, he was in the end outlawed and compelled to leave Bulgaria.

There were some who believed that Mikhailoff, once beyond the frontier, would find it impossible to resume his political career. They did not guess that one day Ribbentrop would summon to Berlin a man who after all is fashioned quite after Hitler's taste.

Mussolini, known to have been deeply involved in the double assassination at Marseilles, had warmly commended Mikhailoff to the notice of the German Foreign Minister. Ribbentrop was delighted to collaborate with the bandit leader. Were not his own methods, though more subtle, essentially the same as the Macedonian's?

Mikhailoff undertook at once to place the whole of his—still existing—resources at the disposal of the Nazis for the execution of their plans in Bulgaria. In Berlin he had secret meetings with the Bulgarian Quislings, Tsankoff, General Jekoff and Kostoff. A condition of his help was that the Third Reich, as part of its "New Order" in the Balkans, should put in hand—at the cost of Jugoslavia and Greece—the formation of an autonomous Macedonian state.

• • •

Ribbentrop readily agreed and—for once—he kept his word. At the recent meeting of the Jugoslav Premier Zvetkovitch and his Foreign Minister, Cincar-Markovitch, with Hitler at Berchtesgaden, it is known that one of Hitler's chief demands referred to this new Macedonian "State" — the state of the mass-murderer, Mikhailoff.

It is significant also that the day when the British Minister left Sofia, Mikhailoff returned to Sofia to take up his special tasks in connection with the arrival of the invasion army, and that the German Commander - in - Chief, Field-Marshal List, asked the Bulgarian government to withdraw the expulsion order against Mikhailoff.—London Express.

Palmist Says Hess Most Sane Of Nazi Leaders

By PAT McGRADY
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

New York, May 14 (AP)—Josef Ranald, German-American palmist, said today that Rudolf Hess, who surrendered to Britain last Saturday, had consulted him on several occasions to determine his destiny and "he struck me as the most sane of the many Nazi leaders I interviewed."

"However, he was exceedingly superstitious, was a sucker for psychic phenomena and leaned heavily upon the signs he found in his stars," Ranald added.

He said he met Hess through Erik Jan Hanussen, Hitler's "personal astrologer" during the Fuehrer's climb to power.

(A Berlin spokesman yesterday ridiculed Hess' interest in astrology and palmistry, hinting it had much to do with the "hallucinations" he was said to have.)

"The most marked characteristic of Hess," said Ranald, "was his leaning toward the occult. His palms were marked by what we call 'crosses of mysticism' and these lines dominated all others.

Appeared Incorruptible

Hess stood out from other Nazi leaders of my acquiantance in that he appeared incorruptible and seemed to lack entirely any element of personal ambition or self-seeking. As he hated Communism and the Jews, so he was devoted to Hitler.

"Apparently Hitler did not measure up to the ideal which Hess first attached to him. Only that could have caused him to leave his wife and child to any Nazi revenge.

"I do not know Hess's religious faith; but he was almost ascetic in his habits and a martyr in temperament. He was a vegetarian, never smoked or drank and paid the closest attention to his health.

Power Would Not Last

"I told him, after reading his palm that his hand indicated he would come into great power but it would not last. I pointed this out on his feeble life line. He took it in very good grace, although he was fascinated by my account.

"It was different with Hitler. When I predicted an end to his glory—the lines really showed a violent end due several months ago, so Hitler is living on borrowed time—the Fuehrer-to-be grunted and glared at me and I did well in getting out before he threw me out."

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—
And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go
The liver should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You get constipated. Harmful poisons go into the body, and you feel sour, sunk and the world looks punk.
A mere bowel movement doesn't always get at the cause. You need something that works on the liver as well. It takes those good, old Carter's Little Liver Pills to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up". Harmless and gentle, they make the bile flow freely. They do the work of calomel but have no calomel or mercury in them. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name! Stubbornly refuse anything else. 25c.

About the Commander And Gunner, His Dog

By L. D. COSGROVE
In the Manchester Guardian

It is seven years since I first saw the Commander and his dog. I met him in the saloon bar of the Griffin, which is near the flat of my relations who live in a Western London suburb. Some three years later—for they were bad old times of difficult acquaintanceship—I had my first beer with the Commander. His dog had had by then a century of biscuits with me.

Gunner, for that was his name, was a black-and-tan spaniel enormously fat and with soft and melting eyes. On every successive visit to London I found him more and more prosperous looking; on the surface he was a successful stockbroker of a dog, but one given to good works and not living for himself alone. His master I knew for a long time merely as the Commander.

Gunner certainly mixed in distinguished company, but it must be confessed that his own standard of conduct was pitifully low. No regular stockbroker was he but a mere keeper of a bucket shop, a shady black-and-tan financier.

He was, indeed, a scrounger of the worst type, a successful confidence trickster without mercy on his victims. When he entered the Griffin at 1.30 and 9.30 p.m. precisely he would, while pretending to greet the Commander's friends, slyly look round, weighing up the comparative strangers in the endeavor to find one like myself, a little unused to London ways, one who might fall to a good tale.

Of course, he realized that it was of no use to tell a hard-luck story; never did he once suggest, as so many dogs do, that he had not had a meal for days; his figure was all against that. He was the well-dressed man-about-town, anxious to put you on to a good thing.

Once having marked you down, he would, without hurry, come and sit beside you, apparently ignoring you, though occasionally you might catch him having a quiet inspection from the corner of his eye. Then he would get a little nearer and, under pretence of making himself comfortable for sleep, rest his head on your shoes. Sleep, however, would be the last thing in his mind. By this time you would have found it almost impossible not to have scratched his back or gently pulled his ears.

The moment of the "kill" was at hand. Still without hurry or excitement, he would slowly raise himself on his hind legs and make his appeal. I cannot bring myself to use the word "beg". It was an appeal such as might be made by a cunning hospital secretary for a new ward, with nothing personal in it—a mere suggestion that you should subscribe from a sense of duty and for the public good. You then made your way to the bar and bought Gunner a biscuit.

While eating the biscuit you had provided he would take up a convenient position for marking down his next victim.

Just before the war I found out a little more about the Commander and a great deal more about Gunner. The Commander had retired from the Navy at the end of 1919 and for nearly 20 years had lived a life of ease, devoting himself to Lord's in the Summer and Twickenham in the Winter. Except on match mornings, his routine had been, at any rate as long as he had owned Gunner, always the same.

At 11 a.m. he had a cup of coffee in a popular cafe and read the news. Gunner here made a complete tour, and while never obtaining a whole biscuit had a snack of assorted pieces from bath buns, chocolate eclairs, and sausage rolls. At 11.30 they moved off for a mile walk, at the end of which Gunner, panting furiously, would be revived with a drink of water at the Station Hotel. The landlord of the Station Hotel had been a warrant officer in one of the Commander's ships. Here Gunner's first duty was to receive a sponge cake at the bar. He then concentrated on the visitors.

At 12.30 they made their way home by another route, calling for a quick drink at the Fleece, for the Commander had an eye for a pretty girl. Gunner was allowed behind the bar here. The noise suggested a bone. And so to the Griffin and home. In the evening, beginning from 8.30, the ritual, with the exception of the call at the cafe, was very much the same.

Towards the end of September, 1939, I happened to be in London and called at the Griffin. Gunner was glad to see me. The Commander was not on parade, and it was not until Christmas Eve that I found out exactly what had happened. The Commander was now in the uniform of a lieutenant in the R.N.R. He had two rows of medal ribbons, headed by the D.S.O. At the age of 59 he was in command of a minesweeper and was thoroughly enjoying himself.

I learned that Gunner was carrying on in his absence. He kept to the ritual perfectly. Every morning he made for the Commander's usual ports of call; every evening he made a similar tour. His technique was still perfect. Not that he practiced on me, he knew that as soon as he saw me I should pay up.

It was some time after Dunkirk when I saw them again. The Commander was hobbling along; he had been blown through his own bridge and had received a bar to the D.S.O. He was hoping that he would soon be fit for service but I think he realized that his fighting days were over.

I should like to end this simple tale by recording that the Commander's inability to walk more than a few yards made Gunner lead a reformed life and dutifully accompany the Commander on his shortened journey ignoring all his old attractions. I believe he did try it for a while as long as the Commander lived near the Griffin; but the truth must be told.

Just before Christmas of last year the Commander's flat received the benefit of enemy action. Both man and dog escaped with minor injuries Gunner's tail being severely singed. The unfortunate thing was that the Commander had to find a new flat. The only suitable one was opposite a vast new hotel with shining chromium fittings and with no age-old smell. Here he hobbles every morning and evening. There are a few young R.A. officers of the local defences who keep him company but he obviously longs for the time when he can visit his old places.

What makes it worse is that the unsympathetic Gunner after one look at the chromium fittings retired in disgust and continues the circular tour as before. Biscuits are rather scarce now but as the dog whose tail was singed in an air raid he does very well and, looking fatter than ever, he is kind enough to honor the Commander with his company at breakfast, lunch, and dinner.

THE JACKAL'S BARE BONE

The Yugoslavia, created by the First World War and now again overrun by the German armies comprised three territories — Serbia, Croatia and Slovenia. Of them, Slovenia was the smallest, the poorest and least important.

As Italy's share of the Yugoslav spoils, Hitler has now awarded to her a slice of Slovenia adjacent to her border, including the small city of Ljubljana; Germany takes the larger and more valuable remainder. To date this is Italy's sole territorial acquisition in return for her huge losses in lives and material resources. Rome is putting a good face on it, but the rejoicing has a hollow sound.

Mussolini demanded Nice, Savoy, Corsica and Tunis. He gets Ljubljana and a few Slovenes. Even as a jackal's portion it is not over generous.—New York Times.

The Stars Say

For Thursday, May 15

By GENEVIEVE KEMBLE

A DAY for conspicuous success, with expansion, growth, progress and happiness as well may be the augury based on the very propitious chain of planetary configurations. All ambitious objectives, well-laid plans, cherished desires may be in line for reaching high climax and happy fruition in whatever direction the energies and aspirations be extended. Promotion, finances, rewards for labor and fidelity, craving for change, adventure, and romance either in a business or sentimental way, should reach a new high under current auspices. It is a time for forging ahead to advanced goals.

Those whose birthday it is may have a year of the happy fruition of grand ideals, aims and objectives, affecting all associations, contacts and ambitions, with advantageous change, promotion, financial stability and many phases of enduring benefit. Honors and tokens of esteem are not lacking nor are pleasures, romance and adventure in the private life. There is much profit, happiness and fulfillments to climax the march on desired goals.

A child born on this day should have outstanding ability and character to express its lofty ambitions and aspirations in life, with the definite fulfillment of its cherished ideals. It should exercise some restraint in speech and writings.

Help Child Develop a Conscience

By Garry Cleveland Myers, Ph.D.

A good many years ago in a little red school house I wrote in my copy book: "Strive to keep alive in thy breast that little spark of celestial fire called conscience."—George Washington. I then believed, as did those who reared and taught me, that there was such a thing as conscience. I still believe there is. In my youth I often heard the word referred to. During the past 25 years, I have rarely heard the word or seen it in print. It seems to have almost entirely vanished from textbooks for teachers, books on character education, even on religious education

Instead of conscience has grown up the expression, "What is the best thing to do right now?" Interpreted and practiced by many it means, "What you can get away with". What you can get away with unapprehended is right, what you get caught at is wrong.

In the modern school, especially high school, there are not many ways for a student to do wrong without being apprehended. Outside of school the student is on his own. He may not be discovered in wrong doing, so his conscience alone is his guide in chosing right from wrong. What are the school and home and church doing to make growing boys and girls want to choose to do right when no one can see them or is likely to catch them?

Is Remorse Harmful?

Conscience is made up chiefly of feelings. With a good conscience one feels worried and unhappy at choosing and doing what one knows is wrong. It makes one pleased and happy at choosing and doing what one knows is right. This tendency to feel grows out of our earlier habits, feelings and ideals which are associated chiefly with those we have loved and respected.

Recently at Boston, before the New England regional meeting of the Child Welfare League of America, I heard Dr. Frederick Rosenheim, Psychiatrist of the Judge Baker Guidance Clinic, say: "There is much to be said for the oft-ridiculed New England — conscience. We have made too much fun of good character and religion. Too long we have assumed that religion understands only the good in man and psychology only the bad. Having analyzed the problems in a person we need to be able to make him want to struggle to be better and to show him how".

In the forum asked Dr. Rosenheim about the "fashionable" warning by some specialists against remorse. His was the commonsense reply that remorse is bad only if it hinders effort to improve in conduct and character; but very good if it help. Now to be able to have remorse is to have a conscience. Don't we want our children to cultivate a good conscience which will help them strive to do right when they don't have to, when no one might know about it, or when they could avoid being caught?

Solving Parent Problems

Q.—Should the adopted child be told?

A.—Yes, indeed, as early as possible, and without show of emotions.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

WHAT IS THIS THING CALLED CHARM?

How does it go, that famous quotation about fame? Is it, "Some are born great, some achieve greatness and some have greatness thrust upon 'em"? The same might be said about charm, which half a dozen high school girls have asked me to define. It seems to me that charm, like love, is impossible to describe in cold words.

We experience it, but when it comes to a definition exact as a blueprint, it floats away like thistledown. As someone has said, "A pretty face is the best introduction," but we are often introduced to a lovely girl and have no interest in keeping up the acquaintance. So, as far as downright beauty is concerned, it's useful, but not necessary to charm.

The lovely face that has attracted us may carry a sawdust brain behind the marble brow. Her loveliness may be so dull, stupid and lacking in understanding that we're delighted to sidestep the beautiful bore. Besides, these days, we have something known as "synthetic beauty." There aren't any really ugly women any more, unless they are too dull or too indifferent to make the most of themselves. The beauty parlor—no wonder it has risen to its eminent place in the nation's industries! — transforms the plainest woman into something much easier on the eyes. An instinctive or acquired knowledge of her color and line may accentuate one's good points goes hand-in-glove with the beauty parlor.

Unless a woman is a born fright, her appearance may register on the charm side today. All said and done, intelligence is a greater asset to charm than beauty. Intelligence indicates the possession of tact, that most wonderful of human assets. It makes one say and do the right thing at the right time; to learn how to avoid pitfalls of speech; to listen to the long-winded without squirming, when one's preference would be taking a chance in going over Niagara Falls in a barrel.

Gracious hospitality, even when one is poor, is a tremendous asset to charm. I recall a lady, once an outstanding Washington hostess. With the death of her husband, who had been in the seats of the mighty, this lady's income dropped to the vanishing point. But never did one hear a murmur or complaint, or regret for the past glories that were hers.

She kept her day at home, though she lived in a tiny apartment, and there was always fragrant tea, crisp buttered toast, and homemade cake, and people continued to visit this grandame who lived on the bleak shores of poverty because she was charming, uncomplaining, and her hospitality was the best of its kind.

If you would be charming, learn how to sell yourself to people. Don't tell the wrong kind of story to the wrong audience. Learn to be sympathetic. Avoid familiarity, which several poets have said in several ways, breeds contempt. Learn to write good letters, answer invitations, write letters of condolence when relatives of your friends die, and letters of congratulation when there is something to be congratulated about.

Don't rub people's fur the wrong way. Try and leave them with a satisfied feeling that they aren't flops, failures, or bores, that you at least enjoy their society. This simple prescription leaves us all purring like cats stroked the right way.

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Table Manners and Tips

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

You have helped so many others that now I am coming to you for advice.

1. I am always uncertain where I should leave my spoon when I have finished eating ice cream or soup. I mean when there is a plate under either.

2. Must one eat the salad before the main dish is served; or can it be eaten with the meal?

3. What is the usual tip for the maid when one is staying at a hotel for two weeks?

4. What tip is left for the waiter on the train, when three meals are eaten but one is not served by the same waiter?

5. When one is drinking tea, should the lemon be squeezed and put on the saucer or left in the cup?

G.Y.

1. If the soup is served in a soup plate, leave the spoon on the soup plate. If it is served in a cup, cream soup cup or bouillon cup, leave the spoon on the under-plate. Leave the spoon with which ice cream or other dessert has been eaten, on the dessert plate. If the ice cream or other dessert is served in a sherbet glass, leave the spoon on the under-plate.

2. If the salad is already on the table but on the side of the dinner plate, the hostess undoubtedly intends to have you eat the salad as an accessory to and with the main course — a mixed green salad, for example, with steak or chops or chicken. If the salad is in the center of your place, it is intended as a first course, and then it would be eaten alone.

3. The best and usual plan is to tip the chambermaid at the end of each week. In a first-class hotel she is given about one dollar a week a room; in a small inexpensive hotel, the tip may be fifty cents a week a room. It's better to give it to her personally, rather than to leave it on the dresser.

4. In a dining-car you should tip the waiter at the end of each meal, just as you would in a restaurant. Ten percent of the bill is the minimum, but this is usually taken to apply to meals more than two dollars. In general, for a meal of a dollar or less, the tip is usually fifteen cents, and twenty-five cents is usually the tip given for a meal costing between a dollar and a half and two dollars and a half.

5. The used slice of lemon is usually put on the saucer.

Wants to Show Appreciation

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

About a month ago I was a guest at a very small and delightful dinner. It is not possible for me to invite my hostess to dine or to any other kind of party, but I would like to make some bow of appreciation.

What would you think about my sending them some flowers or a plant sometime soon?

Gloria

This is a perfect idea for your remembrance of this hospitality. Spring flowers are so appealing these days and instead of enclosing a card, why not write a friendly little note of appreciation?

DR. DAFOE'S COLUMN on the Quintuplets and the Care of Your Children

FATNESS FOUND AS DANGEROUS AMONG BABIES AS IN ADULTHOOD

The common concept of what is a "healthy, normal baby" needs to be changed in one important particular. It is that a "bouncing boy," that is, a plump child, is the very picture of health. Actually, overweight is no more desirable in children than it is in adulthood. But the medical advisor still has a hard time convincing some mothers that their babies are doing alright, even if it isn't as wrinkled with fat as the next door neighbor's baby. For their mothers and their grandmothers believed and have told them that no baby is really healthy unless it is fat and rosy.

A Kentucky mother, aggrieved because of the outcome of a local "baby show" writes me, in part:

"My baby was much fatter and healthier than any of the others in the show. Other women said my baby was the finest in the show, but the doctors who were the judges didn't give him a prize at all."

She neglected to give me the weight and other measurements of the child, but I can guess the child is considerably overweight. And an overweight baby has no more right to win a prize in a contest in which good physical condition is the determining factor than an overweight adult. It's also my guess that her local doctor has already told her this, and that she's hoping I'll have a contrary opinion that'll provide some balm for her hurt feelings over little Billy's failure to carry off at least an honorable mention.

Every doctor who has been in practise very long has had experience with this and a slightly different type of mother, the kind who is always worrying about whether her baby is normal. Every little departure from her concept of what is a normal child upsets her. Sometimes even a doctor's report that little Johnny is in fine condition fails to reassure her. She clings to the idea that if something really was wrong with her Johnny, the doctor wouldn't tell her, but would keep it a secret to save her feelings. She doesn't realize that if a doctor did find any evidence of abnormality in a child, he would want to start corrective measures without delay. These, of course, could not be kept secret from the parents.

When is a baby overweight? This is hard to say, unless the doctor has all the facts about the child before him, for the individual child's weight is affected by a variety of factors, chief among which are sex and race. For example, male infants tend to weigh more than female and white infants tend to weigh more than colored. In some families, heredity dictates that most of the babies be larger than the normal average.

Records kept over a number of years indicates that the average weight of the full-term infant at birth is seven pounds, and the average height is 19 inches. (The Quintuplets, born prematurely averaged 13½ inches at birth.) But neither at birth nor at any other age is a comparison of the child's weight with the average of much value unless such factors as were mentioned above are taken into consideration.

There are a number of sound reasons why overweight is not desirable in babies, most of which should be obvious. The baby who is too fat is not only more likely to become ill, but when he does become ill, he is less likely to recover. He has that smothering burden of flabby flesh sapping his vitality and recuperative powers. He is likely to have trouble when he starts walking: his little bones are not strong enough to carry extra weight, and he may suffer bad falls and develop bowed legs. Overfeeding throws a strain on his heart, and makes his mental development sluggish.

An adult is responsible for his dietetic follies, but an overweight baby is more sinned against than sinning.

"DAUGHTER OF DESTINY"

By ELEANOR ATTERBURY COLTON

CHAPTER XX

At first, as Devona stood staring at the almost insolent confidence written boldly in Jose Macias' face, she felt only anger and a passionate desire to dash something into that blandly confident smile.

The conceited boor! As if, by flashing his wealth, by indicating his decision—he could buy her, body and soul, just as he'd bought dozens of others. All his sorry procession of silly little Freda Camps.

Then, common sense laid a cooling hand on her temper. Now was no time to antagonize a man like Macias. Hadn't she seen that brutal anger he kept only lightly under control, strike down others. Woudn't it be quite simple to strike her down here and now. She'd heard the house-boy slip out, quietly, only a few moments before. The doorman—any help—was too far away to be of any use right now. Aur her job even her life, depended on her wits, now. If she were clever——

The Cat and the Mouse

"Thank you. It's nice of you to ask me. But really——" and with casual reference to the watch on her wrist, "I'm only a poor working girl, you know. And it's late. I must run along. Tomorrow's another work day, you know."" And made her smile the most friendly gesture she could muster.

He only looked at her, his expression unchanged. The cat at the mouse hole, she thought again irrelevantly and suppressed a shudder.

"You know what I mean, Dona," he said finally, caught her hand, drew her toward him.

"Please, I——" and put a table's width, cleverly, between them.

Forced to release her hand, he bent toward her across the tiny, highly polished barricade. "I want you here, always, Dona. I'll give you what you want — what you should have."

"I—don't know what you—mean."

Macias Argues

"I mean you're not the kind of girl that can take the long drudgery," he said, still waiting for the answer he wanted, obviously intended to have. "You're beautiful sensitive, refined, educated — all that. You can't take this racket for long. You'll lose that beauty. You'll get hard, bitter, toughened, like the rest of them. I know. I've seen it happen there. I want to save you from that."

And, Devona thought bitterly, how desperately she wanted to be saved! But not by Macias.

Right as he was—much as she loathed the prospect of a life as second, or even third, rate showgirl, still, of course, what Macias offered was no alternative!

"No, thanks. I like my life just as it is."

"No, you don't," he contradicted, flatly. "You hate it down there. You're above the whole damned outfit, and you know it."

Trying to Be Brave

"That's not so——" trying hard to make it sound convincing. "I'm perfectly happy to be independent and on my way to——"

"Sweetheart, you're not on your way to anything except what I'm offering you. Girls in your line don't last long," he reminded her, brutally. "You know that."

"You're kind of beauty can't take it, either. You've got circles under your eyes right now, and the night life hasn't done anything for the pretty, natural color you had when I first saw you. Another couple of years and you'll look old enough to be your own grandmother."

"Maybe," she flipped, lightly, her heart racing, "but that's the way I want it."

He smiled slowly, but, to her infinite relief, made no move toward her. "You're a strange little bundle. I've had lots of girls hand me different 'lines,' but this is the first time I've had one go 'coy' on me."

"Is it 'coy' to want independence?"

He reached for a handsome, tooled leather cigar box, selected a long, black cigar, lit it carefully.

A New Bribe Offer

Grateful for this chance to recruit her wits, Devona didn't answer. When, after a telling little silence, Macias looked at her, he smiled, knowingly.

"Better drop this pose, Dona. Nobody believes it. Not even you."

She shook her head with determined briskness. "Sorry, mister, you've got the wrong number."

"I don't think so." Plunging one hand deep into his coat pocket, he drew out a long, blue velvet jeweler's box, snapped it open, pushed it toward her across the table. "Maybe this will help you decide."

For a moment, Devona stared, fascinated, at the glittering rainbow of blues and yellows and purples as the magnificent four-strand diamond braclet caught the lamplight, shattered it into exquisite prisms. Only once in her life had she seen so many perfect stones gathered into one shimmering strand. And that had been a rainy morning in London when she followed a kind-faced English bobby around the iron-clad Tower chambers to see the royal crown jewels. A king's ransom, this, she realized with renewed terror. And unmistakable evidence of the strength of Macias' determination to have his own way.

She Turns it Down

He was still waiting, quietly. Turning a cool smile toward him, she snapped the box, shut, pushed it back to him. "Lovely—but it's still—no, thanks! And now—please, I think I must go."

That last calm little request was really only a desperate stab into darkness. But—to her amazement and infinite relief—Macias actually crossed the long room to the hall, spoke crisply into the house phone. "Have my car brought around at once."

Then, as he helped her into her coat, he laid heavy hands on her shoulders, forced her to face him. "I'm not giving up, Dona. You know that. But I can wait. And I'll wait patiently enough, unless —" the dark eyed blazed suddenly, "unless I catch you giving me the run around for some other guy. I don't go in for any competition, you know."

"Well——" she tried to shrug a laugh at him. 'I'm not promising——"

"I don't need promises. Young Brasher's out of the picture. That was plain enough tonight. From now on—there just won't be any one else. I'll see to that."

An hour later back in the narrow barrenness of her tiny hotel room Devona paced restlessly. Play the game with Jose Macias and be "taken care of." That prospect certainly wasn't encouraging. But what could she do?

Back and forth she pursued the question. She could leave now of course, before it was too late. Leave, but for what? Another job? But Macias held her contract, and while as a legal document it was probably worthless, still Jose Macias would use it to boycott her every effort. She'd seen that work out before. Just his word to the musicians' union and there wouldn't be a single job in Los Angeles open to her. Only last week the nice young boy who'd played the drums in Macias' band had tried to defy him. He hadn't found a job yet.

His Will of Iron

She knew now why Manuel had only smiled at her, shook his head. "You don't know Macias. Once he makes up his mind about anything, there's no changing it—or beating him out of getting his own way. You watch. That boy will be on relief before the week is over."

And he was—at least a candidate for the bread line. It was the discouragement, the frustration mostly. The boy was licked and he knew it. It wasn't a very —happy—example.

But if she stayed on — then what? Macias would wait, he'd said. Tirelessly, persistenty, he would wear down her resistance, binding her hand and foot until she bent to his well. Until she—Devona Raebourne—accepted the destiny that poor, silly little Freda Camp, and the others before her, had accepted.

Shuddering, she slipped out of her clothes, into the hard narrow bed, and snapped off the light. She wouldn't accept that fate, of course, her tired brain assured her doggedly. But it refused to find a way out.

Tomorrow, she told herself, she'd think of something. Tomorrow she'd think of a plan, a course of action. Tomorrow——

The word broke on a sob. Tomorrow and tomorrow and tomorrow! What was to become of her? Always the sinister future. Always haunting fears stalking right beside her—fear that she couldn't pay the rent for this miserable room, fear that again she'd know the torture of being hungry and penniless, fear that in all the world no one would care if she did starve. That was the worst one. The loneliness.

Why was it that she must fight on, thus, alone? And what would become of her, she asked her pillow miserably as she released the tears that choked her, scalded her eyes. What could become of her now that her puny strength was challenged by ruthless persistence like Jose Macias'?

Fighting With Herself

She could fight, a stubborn remnant of her old courage, told her calmly. She could use her every wit, her every last shred of intelligence, of skill to outwit this man. She could! She'd have to. No skirmish was won by accepting defeat first.

Sitting bolt upright in the cool darkness, she dried her tears, thumped her tear-wet pillow back into shape. They couldn't get her down—not Manuel's cynical warnings, not Dale's indifference, not even Macias' bold determination. She wasn't beaten yet. There was a way out of this and—somehow—she'd find it.

She fell asleep finally, exhausted. But her dreams were tormented and she tossed feverishly, waking often. So that morning found her still pale, still hollow-eyed and still groping for a solution to this new problem life had presented.

"And what will today add to complicate that problem?" she wondered aloud as daylight crept in at the window, pushing the new day and new decisions toward her ruthlessly, relentlessly.

Wearily, she pulled herself out of bed. There was no turning case of—holding out a little while back. Ever! It was always just a longer!

Like Father, Like Son!

By Garry Cleveland Myers, Ph.D.

As we parents bring up our children well, we ont only make of them good citizens in the home and community and agreeable companions to live with in our family, but we also bring them up to become good wives and husbands, good mothers and fathers.

Please allow me to give a concrete example concerning a young father.

Phil grew up in a home where he was wanted, loved and understood. He learned in his early years the alphabet of citizenship, respect for the right of others and regard for authority. He got some spankings in his early years though not many, by parents who planned and agreed upon the few things he would not be allowed to do without getting immediate punishment. Though he learned early to obey, he rarely was commanded. Also he learned to cooperate for, excepting the few routines, he was not commanded to do things during his early years and seldom later. He was requested and allowed to choose in regard to these requests. When he was requested he really was requested and not commanded in disguise.

Childhood Training

Since his parents were human like all other parents, they were not perfect but they tried hard to do their best and won the growing lad's esteem, companionship and cooperation. As far as possible they treated him as a sacred personality, answering all his questions as well as they were able, listening attentively to what he had to say, never laughing at his queries and remarks. They read to him daily from the time he was about 18 months of age.

The father spent considerable time with the boy and helped in his physical care, even during his infancy. The father also shared in the household cares and when the lad was old enough to help he also shared the chores. Playmates came to his home and the child was allowed to engage in the rough-and-tumble of the neighborhood.

That lad is a father now. His wife and he aim to work and plan together for good guidance of their own children, as his parents had done for him.

Phil helps his wife with the household chores. Since the first baby was a year of age, Phil has bathed and put her to bed. While he tends her now he talks to her and has been reading to her daily for many months. Phil evinces beautiful insight and understanding of this two year old and seems to enjoy every minute with her.

While the second baby was being expected, Phil took on still more of the care of the house and the tot. As soon as there were two he proved an artist as reducing and preventing jealousy in the older one.

He has an appreciative wife. Both are skillful parents and they are boon companions. Phil has a full-time job. The time he spends helping in this lovely little family is leisure time, recreation as a rule, for he has a right philosophy and a series of good family habite, attitudes and ideals he acquired in his earlier years.

Fine young parents like these reassure me that by taking thought and practicing good skills at parenthood it is possible to see good results in succeeding generations.

Tricks With Hot Breads

By BETSY NEWMAN

DON'T you get a yearning, once in a while, for a real gooey hot bread? I do, so I'm giving you a couple of recipes.

Today's Menu

Finnan Haddie (Smoked Fillets)
Baked
Scalloped Potatoes Greens
Green Onions
Upside Down Orange Biscuits
Coffee or Tea

Upside Down Orange Biscuits

1-4 cup butter, 1-2 cup orange juice, 1-2 cup sugar, 2 teaspoons grated orange rind, 2 cups flour, 1-2 teaspoon salt, 3 teaspoons baking powder, 4 tablespoons shortening, 3-4 cup milk, 1-4 cup sugar, 1-2 teaspoon cinnamon.

Combine butter, orange juice, 1-2 cup sugar and orange rind and cook 2 minutes. Pour into nine muffin tins. Sift flour, measure and sift with salt and baking powder; cut in shortening, add milk gradually and stir until dough follows fork around bowl. Knead for 1-2 minute, then roll 1-4 inch thick. Sprinkle with 1-4 cup sugar and cinnamon. Roll as for jelly roll, slice 1 inch thick and place on orange mixture in each muffin tin. Bake in hot oven (400 degrees Fahrenheit) 20 to 25 minutes.

Remove skin and put fish in baking pan, sprinkle with pepper, salt and parsley. Add 1 inch layer of potatoes and put buttered crumbs on top. Bake 1-2 hour in hot oven (450 degrees Fahrenheit), basting with fat that the fish may not dry. Place on hot platter and pour sauce over fish. Serves six.

Roll 1-2 inch thick on floured board, sprinkle with maple sugar or brown sugar and cinnamon, and roll into long roll. Press edges closely together and cut into 3-4 inches slices with sharp knife; lay cut side down on greased pan. Bake about 20 minutes in hot oven.

Cream Out Facial Lines

Betty Grable advocates using soap and water for facial cleansing

By HELEN FOLLETT

LADY Long-face with the crepe-hanging disposition and devotion to the worry habit isn't the only one whose countenance takes on fine lines, whose facial tissues go blooey. Ill health, loss of sleep, nervousness and overwork will do their part toward dispelling youthful contour and putting in accordion pleats.

It is discouraging to see the lines digging in deeper. And it does seem, these disturbed days, that many women are beset with premature lines. It is just no fair and there is no sense in it. The thing to do is to muster up all the courage one can to face present conditions and get busy with beauty aids.

Use Creams

Use creams faithfully; they do feed the skin, no matter what anybody says. The gentle patting and tapping hustles up the blood streams that bring nourishment to the fibers and tissues. Once or twice a week have an egg facial; it acts as a tightening astringent.

Begin by washing the face gently with a bland soap and warm water. Rinse with warm water. Dip a heavy cloth in ice cold water, press against the flesh until the surface begins to glow. Dry gently.

Beat the white of an egg to a stiff foam. Spread it on with your fingers or a patter which can be bought at any cosmetic counter. If the skin carries discolorations add a little lemon juice to the egg.

Second Step

The albumen in the egg white acts as an astringent, tightening the flesh. Let the mask remain on for twenty minutes, longer if you desire. Lave away with warm water and dry with gentle upward pats, starting under the chin.

Spread on a massage cream, heavy enough to offer resistance to the fingers, always using the upward, outward motion, never folding up the flesh around the eyes Do some quick tapping and slapping. Tap very lightly around the eyes. Do up and down strokes over the neck.

Say prayers and go to beddy.

British Housewife In War

From the Manchester Guardian

Less than two years ago our grocer or butcher presented his weekly account with a little note at the bottom: "We solicit the favor of your continued custom." How remote it sounds, an echo of a vanished world!

The tables are turned indeed. We now enter their shops with a deprecating smile. "Could I have a little cheese this week? You did say you would try to get me a tin of golden syrup. Biscuits! Oh, could I have half a pound? Your tinned jam was delicious. Might I have one this week? You have kept me some toffee. Oh, thank you so much. Would the chops be bigger if I had the Canterbury lamb?"

It is certainly we who solicit the favors now and depend on the good will of our tradesmen. Butcher, grocer, fishmonger— we eat out of their hands.

When two or three housewives are gathered together it will not be long before the conversation turns to food. We boast of our little triumphs, the success of our potato cakes, the excellence of our carrot cream.

We learn discretion, for friendship may be imperilled if you had half a pound of cheese last week and your next-door neighbor none. Everyone looks coldly upon you if you were in time to secure a pound of herrings at sevenpence and the late-comers had to buy cod at 2s 8d. I gained a brief popularity when a friend gave me from her garden store a basket full of large onions, so that I was able to make an offering to intimates of a specimen of this precious vegetable each wrapped in tissue paper.

A visitor uttered a thriek of joy when we gave her a boiled egg for breakfast. "An egg!" she cried, "I should like to photograph it!"

The Ministry of Food begs us to subsist on oatmeal and carrots. We cut out their recipes and proffer them to the cook, but as apparently the whole country, in a glow of patriotic fervor, is living on porridge, oatmeal is most difficult to obtain. We trail from shop to shop and stagger home exhausted with half a pound.

Carrots, on the contrary, abound. "What did you do in the last war?" I ate carrots—raw, stewed, boiled, grated, mixed up with everything I am prepared to believe that a raw carrot may be a substitute for chocolate, but following a dinner of carrot soup, stew (chiefly carrot), and savory (grated carrot on toast) it makes no appeal.

Fresh or tinned, carrots meet your eye in every shop. You are hypnotized into buying them.

Men Admire Dainty Women

SAY that a woman is dainty and you've said something pretty nice about her. Never was a sweeter word applied to a member of the sisterhood. There are women who are always dainty, even when they're digging out dusty closets or overhauling the kitchen range. They never look fussed or blowsy. It is a gift.

To be dainty a woman has to close her eyes to the size of the week's laundry bill. If a frock has a single spot upon it, into the hamper it goes. She hates dirt, can't abide it. Every day, a fresh pair of stockings. Gloves always just so, hat brushed, no stray fuzzers on the collar, finger nails in perfect order. All the small props of the sartorial scenery in prime condition.

Unless she has her morning bath she is unhappy. Can't start the day without it, because it makes her look as fresh as a crisp lettuce leaf. Maybe her buttons drop off and her stockings do a run, but nobody would ever suspect it.

Keep Calm

She keeps calm. When guests arrive for dinner they don't find her with her face flushed. She started preparations early, has a method.

She does her mending when the laundry work is finished, never puts away an article that needs a few stitches. She has a sense of order, which is a fine quality in man or woman. It makes for orderly thinking, a peaceful and comfortable home.

• • •

The woman who does her work well, has a carefully planned routine, does it with little effort, and so saves herself unnecessary fatigue.

Men admire a dainty woman. They enjoy looking at a well arranged head of hair, a complexion that has been carefully made up, not smudged and blobbed with rouge and lipstick. They get gooseflesh at the sight of a slip showing beneath a skirt hem, a messy pocketbook, nail polish that has gone patchy, collar and cuff sets that need washing and pressing.

The standard of appearance is high these days. We must watch our beauty steps.

ROYAL EXILES ARRIVE IN BERMUDA

Exiled from his own country, ex-King Carol of Rumania, is pictured (LEFT) as he arrived in Bermuda on his way to a haven in the western hemisphere. With him is Lieut. Edward Cameron, who was appointed his escort by the Bermuda authorities. Accompanying the ex-king into exile is Madame Lupescu, who is pictured (RIGHT) as she left the ship which brought them to Bermuda.

ANOTHER SIDE TO A KING'S COMPANION

Simply dressed in tailored suit and turtle-neck sweater, Mme. Elena Lupescu, who has been making headlines for more than a decade as the sharer of the vicissitudes of Carol of Rumania, is shown playing with a little refugee boy and a dog aboard the SS. Excambion, as the ship crossed the Atlantic from Lisbon. Mme. Lupescu and the former king left the American Export liner at Bermuda, having made many new friends on the voyage. Their fellow-passengers were unanimous in declaring Carol and Mme. Lupescu "the nicest people."

AT THE BELLE

"Reaching for the Sun"

What has been heralded as one of the most unusual comedies to be presented this year, Paramount's "Reaching for the Sun" will have its local premiere next at the Belle Theatre.

This picture has been the subject of much anticipation, for it is announced as a new departure in the art of making screen comedies. Although the picture is designed essentially to create laughs, nevertheless, it is reported to have a scene in it that for thrills would do justice to any top-notch action drama. Having as its background a Detroit automobile factory, with all its roaring mechanisms, it is obvious that, with Producer-Director William A. Wellman, at the controls, these two elements, comedy and drama, will be mixed in a thrilling combination.

The new comedy stars Joel McCrea and Ellen Drew, who can easily be visualized as a smooth-working team. Her recent hits were scored in "The Mad Doctor" and "The Monster and the Girl". But the gal is versatile, and by now she should relish a comedy role. So a zestful, gay performance can be expected of her. McCrea has been seen recently in a couple of epic Westerns, and in "Reaching for the Sun", he is once again an outdoors-lover—only this time as a comedy character.

Eddie Bracken, who boosted his comedy reputation in the Aldrich Family in "Life With Henry" and "Too Many Girls" plays his most important screen role as a laugh-getter in the new picture. He is cast as Joel McCrea's pal. Albert Dekker who swings easily from the dramatic to the comic, also plays a featured role in "Reaching for the Sun" in a combination comedy-dramatic role. Billy Gilbert, the screen's famous sneezer, is another laugh-getter who appears in the new film.

The story concerns a clam digger who leaves his native Michigan woods for the Detroit automobile factories in order to make enough money to buy an outboard motor. The motor is an obsession almost with him, for with it he hopes to be able to dig more clams and so make more money. Joel McCrea plays this role. Ellen Drew is the girl he marries, who becomes jealous of her husband's love for the outboard motor and his constant yearning to return to the woods.

Much of the talk concerning this gay comedy, paradoxically, is about the thrilling scene in which two monster machines in an auto factory battle each other, with Joel McCrea and Albert Dekker at the controls of each.

"The Cowboy and the Blonde"

"The Inside Story of Picture Making" is revealed in "The Cowboy and the Blonde" featuring Mary Beth Hughes and George Montgomery, announced as the added feature comedy attraction.

This light breezy picture reveals a fascinating piece of entertainment that will appeal to all screen lovers and features Allan Nowbray, John Miljan, Richard Lane and Fuzzy Knight.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Back in the Saddle"

Once again Gene Autry, Film Cowboy Number One, rings the bell in his latest picture, "Back in the Saddle", a Republic musical western opening next at the Capitol. The film set a new high for confirmed Autry fans and won him countless followers from among the curious ones who had come to see why he had been picked as one of the ten top stars of 1940 in the Motion Picture Herald Poll.

Autry is seen as a courageous, two-fisted ranch foreman who is leading the ranchers against Blaine, a rascally mining magnate whose miners poison the streams of the valley by allowing copper sulfate to be dumped in them. Gene goes to a neighboring town to get an injunction against Blaine, whose young ward, Tom, leads the ranchers in a raid on the mine, and is jailed.

In order to save Tom from being lynched Gene agrees to withhold the injunction if Blaine will protect Tom in his jail cell; and will promise to divert the sulfate from the streams. Tom and his sweetheart, Taffy, do not understand Gene's reasons and turn against him. In due time Gene learns that Blaine has lied to him, and goes to remove Tom to a neighboring city where he will receive a fair trial. Blaine has his men surround the jail and open fire. How Gene extricates Tom and himself from this situation is what provides the film with its exciting climax.

As the fighting foreman, Gene turns in one of his best performances to date. Also distinguishing themselves are the old reliable—Smiley Burnette — Edward Norris, Jacqueline Wells, Mary Lee, and Addison Richards. Much credit for this fine production goes to Associate Producer Harry Grey and Director Lew Landers.

The added feature on the same program "Meet The Chump" in a lively laugh riot starring Hugh Herbert in a slap happy comedy, loaded with comical situations. The "Universal News" and the 5th Chapter of "King of the Royal Mounted" complete this swell entertaining Family Bill.

AT THE McCARTHY

"Penny Serenade"

Ecstatic romance is the major theme of George Stevens' "Penny Serenade", new drama at the McCarthy Theatre with Irene Dunne and Cary Grant starred. Two of the most exciting stars on the screen today, in a love story which is everything a love story should be—sentimental, rapturous, filled with laughter and with tears—"Penny Serenade" possesses as well a warmth and tenderness which makes it one of the year's immediate selections for the vaunted "ten best."

As a casual, irresponsible newspaperman and his wife, Grant and Miss Dunne bring to the screen characterizations which are intrinsically human, filled with sympathetic understanding so that their romance becomes one that not only belongs to, but becomes a part of every member of their audiences. The stars surpass anything they have ever given the screen.

Based upon Martha Cheavens' magazine novel, adapted by Morrie Ryskind, "Penny Serenade" carries its principals through a ten-year period. It traces their hectic courtship and impetuous marriage, and describes their rapturous honeymoon which ends in near-disaster. Despondent and despairing because of the loss of their baby, the couple settle down to life in a small country town, where he attempts to run a newspaper. The struggle for existence straightens the newspaperman out, so that he becomes an attentive husband and, when they adopt a child, a loving and responsible father.

When tragedy hits them again, the boy finds himself unable to face the future; he reverts to his former reckless disregard of life. His drinking makes the situation even more intolerable and his wife, unable to halt this wreckage of their high romance, finally plans a divorce. "Penny Serenade" reaches a smashing climax of laughter and tears in a surprise ending.

Supporting the stars are Beulah Bondi, as the spinster superintendent of an orphanage, who helps the couple through legal and financial entanglements. Edgar Buchanan is equally effective as a lovable "friend of the family," the linotype operator whose human understanding helps Grant and Miss Dunne through their difficulties, and Ann Doran is seen to advantage as the music store salesgirl who brings the couple together.

That "Penny Serenade" is one of the year's "must see" pictures goes without saying. It is playing the entire week at the McCarthy Theatre.

Bobby Feller Still Learning After Six Years In Big Time But Rated Best In The Loop

Cleveland Hurler Scores Fifth Win Against Two Defeats by Beating Yankees 2-1

REDS GOING DOWN

By JUDSON BAILEY

Associated Press Sports Writer.

Bob Feller came to Cleveland Indians six years ago labelled a marvel. He was 16 years old and fresh off a farm at Van Meter, Ia.

Instead of undergoing a seasoning process in the minors like, say Lefty Grove, who spent five years at Baltimore, Feller's first step in organised baseball was in the big arena of the American League.

Because of this it took a little time for this big, earnest boy to absorb the polish expected of a Major League pitcher. He had an amazing fast ball, a minimum of control and only a vague idea that games could be won with less than a dozen or 15 strikeouts.

He still is learning, but there no longer is the faintest doubt that he is the best pitcher in the Major Leagues and the only question is what ultimate goal he will reach—whether some day he may be considered the greatest of all time.

Feller Scores Fifth Victory

He led the Indians to a 2-1 10-inning decision over New York Yankees yesterday. It was his fifth victory against two defeats this year.

Five of the first nine strikeout victims were called out on curve balls, which Bob couldn't throw when he came to Cleveland but now can break with the best in his league. He also showed great courage in getting out of jams.

The Indians scored off Marius Russo in the second inning but an unearned run by the Yanks in the sixth tied the score. Feller just clamped, down till Lou Boudreau hit a homer in the 10th win.

White Sox Now Second

Chicago White Sox nosed out Boston Red Sox 3-2 and took over second place.

Washington Senators squeezed past Detroit Tigers 5-4 by rallying for all their runs in the fifth and sixth innings, knocking Buck Newsom out of the box on the way.

Philadelphia Athletics hammered out a 7-3 victory over St. Louis Browns behind the seven-hit hurling of Jack Knott.

In the National League the speeding Brooklyn Dodgers cut down Cincinnati Reds 4-3 for their sixth straight victory. Chunky Hugh Casey limited the weak-hitting World Champions to six hits in achieving his fifth triumph without defeat. The Dodgers got eight off Bucky Walters.

Reds in Second Division

This defeat, sixth in eight games, dropped the Reds into the second division as the rejuvenated Chicago Cubs bumped off Boston Braves 4-3 to take fourth place. Hank Leiber hit a home run with one on in the first inning and in the seventh waited out a walk from slow-working Tom Earley to force across the deciding run.

St. Louis Cardinals punched out a 3-2 triumph over the third-place New York Giants for Mort Cooper's fourth victory.

Pittsburgh Pirates broke their losing streak in a 6-3 farce with the Phillies. Each team made 10 hits and four errors, but the Pirates had better luck with theirs.

Pro Golfers Invade Hallowed Turf Of The County Club

Brookline, Mass., May 14.—(AP)—Professional golfers invade the hallowed turf of The Country Club today for the first time since 1913 as eight top money winners of the winter pro circuit compete in the first Massachusetts big eight tournament for the British War Relief Fund.

Not since Francis Ouimet—then a spindle shanked youngster who had often caddied over the same course—turned aside the challenge of Harry Vardon and Ted Ray, two of England's greatest professionals, in the 1913 National Open have the "money" players competed here in tournament play.

Arrayed in 36 holes of medal play are Lawson Little, the National open champion; Byron Nelson, the P.G.A. titlist; Ben Hogan, the leading money winner of the winter tour, and Craig Wood, who brought several years of heart-break to an end with his uphill victory in the recent masters.

There are the two longest hitters in the game in Jimmy Thomson and Sam Snead. Topping of the octet are colorful Jimmy Demaret and Harold "Jug" McSpaden, the Winchester pro who is New England's contribution to this all-star spectacle.

As the professionals march over the par 71 layout today, there will be a nostalgic touch for Francis Ouimet. His competitive days are over but he's to be an active figure in the tournament as referee.

The net proceeds go to the British Relief Fund but there will be a $1,500 purse in which each of the eight pros will share.

Softball League Pries Off Lid

With two new clubs in the fold, the Belleville City Softball League opens a thirty-game schedule at Coleman Flats Park this evening. The two new teams are the Reliance Aircraft Company nine, of hockey fame, and the Stephen-Adamson Company team, while the remainder of the five-club circuit is made up of clubs with many years service in softball in Belleville, headed by Corbys A. C., Point Anne "Cementmen" and the Esquire Juniors.

Preparations for a gala opening, with civic dignitaries participating in the opening ceremonies, and all the trimmings were announced today by President Clem Bowler. The league executive employed workmen to groom and level the Coleman Park diamond in preparation for the league opener tonight and all is in readiness for that long-awaited cry of the umpire—"Play ball."

The league will continue with its next scheduled game on Friday night when the two top-ranking clubs last year, Point Anne and the Corby A. C. teams meet at the Flats. Tonight it's Reliance versus Esquire Juniors.

WARRIGAN LIKELY TO GET BIG PLAY IN KING'S PLATE

Parkwood's Stable Entry Has Beaten Undisturbed in Two-Year-Old Form

LIKES THE MUD

By SCOTT YOUNG
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, May 14 (CP)—Warrigan is the black gelded son of Osiris 2nd out of War Vixen, a distant relative of the famed Gallant Fox, and if it turns up mud for the 82nd running of the $8,000-added King's Plate at Woodbine Park here next Saturday he likely will get a heavy play in the betting.

Owned by R. S. McLaughlin's Parkwood Stables of Oshawa, Warrigan is one of the two horses who has beaten Undisturbed, the "big" horse of this year's Plate. He took Undisturbed in the stretch of Mrs. Orpen's Cup and Saucer last autumn and finished 1 1-2 lengths on top to amass the major portion of the $8,000 he won as a two-year-old.

Warrigans' record is none too impressive. Some Ontario horsemen like his chances less than those of his stablemate, Skyliner. But Warrigan has shown in workouts this spring that he likes to run, and last year he showed that when he liked to run there was no horse could beat him. He has filled out well from his juvenile season, during which he won twice, with one second and one third, in nine starts.

One angle on Warrigan's victory over Undisturbed was that Undisturbed carried an impost of about 10 pounds more than the Parkwood Stables Pride's 112. But Warrigan's training this spring has been better than that of Undisturbed, who faded badly in the last furlong of nine—the Plate distance—in a workout yesterday.

About 12 horses are expected to start in the plate of the 38 nominated April 10.

BILLY MARQUART EVEN WITH ROTH

Winnipeg Boxer Scores Technical Knockout in Seventh Round

Brooklyn, N.Y. May 14.—(CP)—Billy Marquart, clever lightweight from the Canadian West, is all even with Al Roth of New York.

Avenging a previous defeat, the Winnipeg belter punished Roth consistently in the main bout of a boxing card at the Broadway Arena last night and scored a technical knockout in the seventh round. The fight physician ordered the contest stopped when examination between the sixth and seventh rounds disclosed that Roth had suffered a fractured rib. The fight was scheduled for ten rounds.

Before a crowd of 4,000, Roth began impressively but broke away when Marquart, weighing 137 3-4 to Roth's 139 1-2, found the range with a terrific body attack. Roth looked beaten from the second round on and only avoided being knocked out by cagey ringwork.

Marquart is a former Canadian Olympic games fighter.

YESTERDAY'S STARS

Lou Boudreau, Indians: His home run in 10th inning beat Yankees.

Hank Leiber, Cubs: Hit two-run homer and waited out walk that forced in winning run against Braves.

Sid Hudson, Senators: Pitched three-hit ball to beat Tigers.

John Rigney, White Sox: Held Red Sox to four hits and scored two runs himself.

ROYALS SECOND BEHIND NEWARK BY HALF GAME

Montreal Unleashes 21-Hit Attack in Winning Fourth Straight

LEAFS DEFEATED

(By The Associated Press)

The two Canadian members of the International Baseball League, battling at opposite ends of the standings, can help each other improve their positions by winning today.

Neither can do it alone, however, because each is playing the club directly ahead of the other.

Montreal's Royals, in second place by half a game, clash with the seventh's place Baltimore Orioles, while Toronto Leafs, last by four percentage points, oppose the league-leading Newark Bears.

Newark maintained its margin over Royals yesterday by shutting out Leafs, 5-0, while Montreal swamped Baltimore, 13-7.

The only change in the tight race yesterday came when Syracuse defeated Rochester 4-1 in the season's first night game to go a half-game ahead of Jersey City Giants in fifth and drop the Wings behind Buffalo Bisons in fourth. Buffalo rallied for five runs in the eighth inning to nose out the Little Giants 6-4.

21-Hit Attack

The fast-stepping Royals unleashed a 21-hit attack in winning their fourth straight game from Baltimore. It was the 13th victory in their last 16 starts.

Hank Borowy turned in a four-hitter against Leafs for his fifth triumph of the campaign. Toronto's Vallie Eaves was the victim of poor support in the early innings but when he was lifted for a pinch-hitter in the eighth he had permitted only three singles.

Tall Tom Sunkel notched his fourth straight pitching conquest for the Chiefs, limiting the Red Wings to four safeties.

Losing a player in the middle of a rally did no harm to the Bisons' chances against the Little Giants. Bob Patrick was ejected from the game in the big eighth but Ollie Carnegie, who replaced him, delivered a sharp single, which scored two runs.

Houston Company Trundlers Win Bowling Title

The Houston Company trundlers were crowned champions of the Major "B" bowling league at the Recreation Alleys last night following a fortnight of championship play. The final standing of the Major "B" league was as follows—Houstons; Corbin Lock; Corbys A. C. and Ontario-Intelligencer.

Upon the completion of the league play-offs, it was announced that Frank Fortune, of the Ontario-Intelligencer quintette, had won the league high three-string title with a score of 813; while Maurice Callaghan, of the champion Houstons, won the high single score honors with a score of 347.

The championship Houston team was composed of Stan Joslin, G. Jenkinson, M. Storms, J. Marton, W. Reynolds and M. Callaghan.

Sports Roundup

(By Eddie Brietz)

(Associated Press Sports Writer)

New York, May 14.—(AP)—Favorite topic of conversation when American and National Leaguers meet is whether Del Baker or Charlie Dressen is the best signal-snatcher . . . Chicago scribes are hinting that Lou Novikoff and his bale of press clippings are to be shipped back to Los Angeles . . . One more appeal to Henry Armstrong: Please see Tony Canzoneri before you attempt that comeback.

Some folks just don't care what they do with their dough— Mutuel tickets worth $5,203 were not cashed during the Jamaica meeting . . . The rumor Foundry now says the Tigers canned Dick Bartell because he was feuding with Del Baker over the number of cuts he was to get in batting practice. Sounds silly, but there you are. . . . If Buddy Baer feels like it, he can give Joe Louis as tough a time as the champ has had since the "bum-of-the-month Club" was organized . .

Some of Harry Martone's ten children will act as his seconds when he boxes an exhibition with Benny Leonard tonight at Jersey City. Philly fans are drumming up a "day" for Pitcher Hugh Mulcahy, now doing an army hitch.

One of the Coney Island joints will promote a fight between Midgets, and advertise it as being for the underweight championship of the world.

The annual wool clip of Tibet averages about 19,000,000 pounds 80 per cent of which is sold in markets in India.

With the only resemblance of the diamond game to be played in Belleville this season when softball is scheduled to open at the Flats this evening between the Reliance and Esquire Juniors, perhaps Al Graham's poem, "Browning at the Opener," published in the N.Y. Herald Times recently, would be timely for the occasion:

The year's at the spring,
The crowd's at the gate,
The inning's at seven
The apple is hurled,
The fly's on the wing
The run's at the plate
The fan's in heaven
All's right with the world.

As we reported yesterday, Ralph "High-pockets" McCabe former Belleville pitcher who was signed to the New York Yankee farm system and sent to Norfolk, Va., is now with the Easton Club in the Eastern Shore League. This loop is a class "C" league that operates southeast of Philadelphia and Baltimore in cities along the Atlantic Coast region. Such players as Mickey Cochrane, Jimmie Dykes, Jimmie Foxx and several other stars of Connie Mack's great 1929-'30 world champions all got their start in the Eastern Shore loop. McCabe pitched three innings for the Easton Club the other day and uncorked one of his fast ones with the result the pitch broke his catcher's finger. The only remark the catcher made to McCabe was: "Son, you don't have to fire 'em that fast in this league." In a letter to his parents, Ralph says the younger pro. hurlers don't cock the leg up and fire with might and main but rather are coached in the matter of control, which, after all, is the greatest attribute a pitcher can possess. Easton is also in the Yankee chain.

Remember Bill Calladine of hockey, baseball and softball fame from Peterborough? Well, Willie is back in his old haunts along the shores of the Otonabee after a successful season with the Philadelphia Ramblers, a New York Ranger farm team. Bill started to work at the Quaker Oats plant on Monday and is being suggested as the Quaker's playing manager. Jim Ellis, playing-coach of the Petes senior puck team last winter, is slated to play first base for the Westclox "mushballers" as softball takes a more firm foundation in Fred Craig's fair surroundings.

Organizing a softball league in Oshawa isn't being any pink tea party this year either. According to Brother Campbell the Motor City "mushballers" are trying to interest Bowmanville and Whitby entries into their league. Last year the Oshawa softball mentors spurned a Whitby application for affiliation, but today it's a story of a different tune, as a matter of fact the fiddler is doing the dancing this time.

District anglers are caressing fondly their fishing tackle these days anxiously awaiting the opening of the pickerel and pike season on Thursday. The Department of Game and Fisheries have placed a limit on pickerel this year, the minimum length shall be 13 inches and the day's limit eight fish of legal size. The bass season this year is scheduled to open on Saturday, June 28th, instead of July 1st, thus giving local fishermen that extra week-end seeking those battling black beauties. The same opening date applies to maskinonge in this area also. There is also a bag limit placed on perch by the Department this year, no more than 25 perch can be taken by angling in any one day. This is a newsie, but should not seriously affect local anglers who customary go in for the more game type of elusive fish, such as trout, bass, 'lunge, pickerel, etc. Americans and other non-residents of the province serving in the Canadian Navy, Army or Air Force will be afforded the same angling privileges as a native of the province and no permit is necessary for these fighting men.

Bill Atwood, the Philadelphia Phils' catcher, likes his base hits as much as any player, but there's one hit of which he has nothing but a painful recollection. It happened, as might be expected, in the old Baker Bowl before the Phillies moved to Shibe Park for their home games. The Phillies were playing the Dodgers, I believe.

Somewhere along the line, Philadelphia was five or six runs behind and put a man or two on the bases. Atwood was called in from a busy bullpen as a pinch-hitter. Rushing to the dugout, Bill yanked out his favorite Louisville Slugger and strode to the plate. On the first pitch he rammed the ball against the right field barrier.

That, of course, always means to dust for second, slide and hope to beat the right fielder's throw to that station. Atwood followed this program, but it wasn't until he slid that he realized his error. In hurrying from the bullpen, he had failed to remove two baseballs from his hip pocket.

It was the first "ball-bearing" slide in baseball, but also the last, as far as Atwood was concerned. He carried a pair of Ford Frick signatures on his anatomy for the rest of the season.

Congratulations were the order of the night at the Recreation Bowling Alleys last eve' when the Houston trundlers were crowned champions of the Major "B" League, following a two-week roll-off, total scores to count. The champion Houston team is composed of S. Joslin, G. Jenkinson, M. Storms, J. Martin, "Wimp" Reynolds and M. Callaghan. Corbins were second, Corby's A.C. third and our little "printers' devils" down in the cellar.

SPORT SPICE — A sample of the classy windbreakers to be given the Reliance Hockey Club is on display at the Esquire haberdashery. . . . The jackets are white, trimmed with gold and scarlet, the club colors, plus a large Reliance crest, which makes a really natty windbreaker. . . . Chuck Barnett tried to get an exhibition game for his champion Big-Z softball lassies in Trenton but the gals in Harry Moore's adopted town haven't completed their organization as yet. . . . Trenton will definitely have a girls' softball league however. . . . Some tall pitching was seen yesterday when Bob Feller chalked up his sixth consecutive victory by pitching a one-hitter as the Indians beat the Yankees 1-0. . . . At that Russo hurled a two-hitter and lost as Lou Boudreau's home run was the only score registered. The Dodgers continued to dominate the National League as they pushed the Reds well into the second division with a 4-3 win at Redland Field. . . . Hockey continues to push well into the southland the Washington Eagles being admitted into the American Hockey League the other day, thus giving the big minor league a ten-clubbed circuit. . . . As the Major League Clubs approach the player-limit date many former big league greats are finding themselves being pushed out in favour of the up-and-coming youngsters . . . and the next is "And the batteries for tonight's game . . ."

DIZZY DEAN ASKS TO BE RETIRED

Baseball's Sensational Character Probably Sees End of Road

Chicago, May 14 (AP)—James Gallagher, General Manager of Chicago Cubs, announced today that Dizzy Dean, one of baseball's most sensational characters of the last decade, had requested that he be placed on the voluntary retired list.

Gallagher said Dean was sending him a letter to that effect, and that the letter would be forwarded to Ford Frick, President of the National League.

He added that the Cubs would accede to Dean's request.

That once great pitcher wants to step out of active baseball at the end of today's game.

Tomorrow is the deadline for cutting the Cub's squad to 25 players. Manager Jimmy Wilson is carrying 28 players, and until Dean's request came through today he was in a position of having to decide whether this one time battery mate would be one of those cut adrift.

Joined Navy In Days Of Sails, Still Serves

Alexandria, May 14 (AP)—Admiral Sir Walter Cowan, who joined the Royal Navy in the days when sails, instead of turbines, drove the fighting ships, is again serving at sea with Admiral Sir Andrew Cunningham, commander-in-chief of the Mediterranean fleet.

Sir Walter, who once gave orders to Admiral Cunningham, now takes them from his one-time subordinate. The commander in chief, who was a destroyer captain under Sir Walter's command in 1926, welcomed him to the Mediterranean fleet, where he will serve as a liaison officer.

MUSICAL DAY AT KIWANIS CLUB

John Deacon and Leo Riggs Gave Varied Program of Piano and Song

A musical program by two of Canada's outstanding musicians was the treat enjoyed by the Belleville Kiwanis Club at their weekly luncheon at the Queens Hotel on Tuesday. It was the celebration of Musical Week in Kiwanis and the after program was in charge of Leo Riggs the capable and always willing to help pianist of the club. Leo had as his guest Jack Deacon and the two both born in Belleville, gave a program that will long be remembered by the members. In moving the vote of thanks to the artists, Reg Anderson stated that Belleville was indeed fortunate that two such outstanding musicians should be heard on the same program.

Varied Program

Mr. Riggs gave two delightful piano solos, "Prelude in C Sharp Minor" and "Rustle of Spring" and both numbers displayed the broad artistry of that fine pianist. John Deacon chose for his program, a patriotic theme and his numbers were greatly enjoyed. At the request of the club he closed with "Rule Britannia," the whole club enthusiastically joining in the chorus. Mr. Deacon sang a song, the music being written by Reg Hinchey and the words by George Carver, a member of the Ontario Intelligencer staff and it was an instant hit. He also sang "Danny Boy" an Irish favorite and the Scotch were not forgotten in "McGregor Clan." The entire program was a delight and will bear repeating anytime the chairman of entertainment can secure the services of these fine artists.

Birthday Celebrated

Jack McIntosh's Kiwanis birthday was celebrated at the luncheon, the member being introduced by Ted Willing. Jack is a charter member of the club and served as president in 1927 and also completed the part term of Rev. Mr. McCutcheon, who was moved west in 1931. Jack McIntosh has been a very worthwhile and energetic member of the club for many years and his enthusiasm has not been dimmed even by the fine game of golf of which it is his hobby. Jim Cowan won the prize donated by the member. The club will visit Oshawa on May 28 but there will be more particulars at a latter meeting according to Jack Trudeau in charge of the visit.

Poultry Project Launched

On Tuesday afternoon, under the direction of Charlie Tripp, Chairman of the Agriculture Committee, the Poultry Project among the pupils of the suburban schools was launched for the coming year.

The members of his committee and helpers from the club distributed 2,000 baby chicks in cartons of 25 to a pupil, this being 500 more than was placed out last year. Each pupil was also given 25-pounds of chicken feed and a feeder to assist them in taking care of their chickens. Ten pupils from each school took 25 chicks each and eight schools are participating in the project. This is one of the finest projects ever instituted by the Kiwanis Club and has surely fostered a better feeling between the city and urban dwellers and at the same time made the children interested in a work that will bring financial returns if followed to a conclusion. At the end of the year so many pounds of chicken are returned to the Kiwanis Club, while the pupils are allowed to keep the remainder. Prizes are awarded by the Kiwanis Club and the Swift Packing Company for the best chickens produced and also for the most number raised.

President James Barclay presided at the luncheon with Bernard Collins as sergeant-at-arms and Harold Carruthers song leader, with Leo B. Riggs as usual at the piano. It was an enthusiastic meeting and largely attended.

HARDLY KNEW HIMSELF

Camp Barkeley, Texas, May 14 (CP)—Private Thomas Sutton suffered a shock when he scanned his United States army induction report. The carbon had slipped and his physical characteristics were noted as: "Frame—red; color of hair, blue; color of eyes, ruddy; complexion—no comment."

Grant Longwell, Foxboro, Honored By Presentations And Addresses

Attesting to the high regard which an appreciative community holds for one of its most popular members of the younger set and who has worked unselfishly for the betterment of worthwhile district organizatins, the members of the Foxboro Presbyterian Church and Sunday School, the community and Sidney Junior Farmers paid tribute to Mr. Grant Longwell of Foxboro on Tuesday evening when he was signally honored at a community presentation party held in the Presbyterian Church. Having enlisted with the R.C.A.F., Mr. Longwell will leave shortly to enter training at Manning Pool, Toronto.

During the course of the evening's program many prominent citizens, in impromptu addresses, paid well-merited tribute to Grant, expressing heart-felt appreciation for the work and unselfish interests exerted toward the betterment of the community. Speakers included, Rev. E. M. Cooke, of Foxboro United Church, Mr. Sam Nicholson, Deputy Reeve of Sidney Township, and Mr. Seldon Homan of Thurlow Township, while Mrs. Donald Longwell and Miss Muriel Milligan also spoke briefly.

Three presentations, all attesting to Grant's popularity, were made, the first, from Foxboro Presbyterian Sunday School of which Grant is Superintendent. Miss Isobel McCullough, on behalf of the Sunday School made the presentation of a beautifully-bound New Testament, while Mr. George McCullough read the address. Sidney Junior Farmers, of which Grant is past-president, honored their former leader with a lovely military brush and shaving set, Ralph Campbell reading the address and Allan Finkle making the presentation. On behalf of the community, Gordon Walt presented Grant with a wrist watch, bill fold and Waterman pen and pencil set. Jack Ketcheson read the presentation address.

Expressing his appreciation, Grant wholeheartedly thanked his friends of the community for the honor bestowed upon him and for the thoughtful gifts he had received. Entertainment during the evening was provided by Mr. Frank Tummon who rendered a delightful solo, and by Misses Ann and Isobel McCullough with a piano duet. Demonstrating her ability as an elocutionist, Ann also delighted with a reading. Mr. George McCullough acted as chairman.

CHURCHILL VISITS PLYMOUTH RUINS WITH LADY ASTOR

Prime Minister Winston Churchill accompanied by his wife and Lady Astor (RIGHT), are about to make a tour of inspection of the areas in Plymouth most damaged by Nazi bombs. Plymouth, a port nearest to the shortest U.S. shipping lanes, was subjected to an unmerciful air attack, as if in a German effort to stop U.S. aid. Lady Astor, incidentally, is now Lord Mayor of Plymouth.

Training Of British Pilots In U. S. Under Discussion In Washington

By J F SANDERSON

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Washington, May 13 — (CP)— Hundreds of British pilots will be trained in the United States for service with the Royal Air Force, if plans under discussion here between the British Embassy and the War Department are put into effect.

Under the plan, American planes and American instructors will be used to give primary training in six flying schools in California, Florida, Texas, Oklahoma and Georgia. The pupils will be civilians from Britain and possibly Americans of Polish, Czech and Netherland descent who wish to join the forces of their homelands.

The men will be civilians to comply with the neutral status of the United States

2,000 Men Could Be Early Training

It is hoped that 2,000 men will receive primary training this year, the classes to start in mid-summer.

The required training planes, instructors and school facilities will come under the lend-lease act. Under the present plan the men, after receiving primary training in the United States, will return to Britain for advanced training although it is admitted this may be changed in time and Canadian facilities used for final instruction.

The scheme will supplement, rather than compete with the commonwealth air training in Canada which is turning out 25,000 to 30,000 trained pilots a year, most of them Canadians. It emphasizes the advantages that surround air-training schemes on this side of the Atlantic, far from the daily turmoil and dangers of war.

It has been suggested here that in time all R.A.F. training will be done outside Britain particularly in Canada and the United States. This would free fields and air bases for intensified offensive work against Germany, a phase of the plan that has started already.

Ottawa —(CP)— Should plans now being discussed in Washington for training British civilians as pilots, in the United States, be put into effect they would have no bearing on the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan now established in Canada for training Empire airmen.

"Such a move would be quite apart from the joint air training plan and purely a British-American matter," one source said.

Already, this source pointed out, Britain has schools other than those of the training plan, in which she is training fledgling fliers. Any schools established for training British civilians in the United States would serve to augment the pool of flying men the United Kingdom may draw upon.

Strong Home Market Absorbing Most Of Canada's Cattle

By JAMES McCOOK
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Ottawa, May 14 (CP)—A strong home market is absorbing most of Canada's cattle and estimates that it will be impossible to supply the United States with all the beef it is prepared to buy are probably correct, agriculture department officials said today.

Figures available here show a small increase in cattle shipments across the border in the first quarter of 1941—26,506 head against 24,732 in 1940. Shipments of calves were also slightly higher, with 12,333 against 11,172.

The quarterly quota for heavy cattle granted Canada by the United States is 51,720 head. Last year the annual quota of 193,950 head was not filled.

Agriculture department officials gave these reasons for inability to meet United States cattle import requirements this year

1. The home market for beef is stronger than at any time since 1929.
2. Cattle herds depleted by the Prairie drought of 1937 are still in process of rebuilding.
3. More employment, improved wages and the requirements of military camps have increased beef consumption.
4. In providing food supplies to Great Britain the emphasis has been on bacon and other cured or easily-transported products rather than beef. Where cattle might have been raised, the tendency has been to increase the numbers of hogs.

Cattle and calves on Canadian farms December 1, 1940, numbered 8,316,000, an increase of only one per cent over the low point reached in 1937 and three per cent. under the December, 1934, estimate of 8,539,000. Indicative of the increased demand for beef was the increase in the number of beef cattle from 3,483,000 in 1939 to 3,622,000 in 1940 and a decrease in milk cattle from 4,741,000 to 4,694,000

Because of the demand of the United Kingdom market for bacon and other cured products, Federal officials said it is probable the increased production of feed grains made possible by the 1941-42 wheat acreage reduction plan will be fed more to hogs and poultry than to cattle and sheep although all livestock production should be encouraged by the program.

Butter Trading Comes To Standstill

Toronto — Dealings on the local wholesale butter market were brought to a halt yesterday afternoon by the announcement that a minimum price of 29½ cents a pound had been fixed on May first-grade creamery solids. This price will be scaled up month by month to reach a top of 32 cents a pound in October. Dealers here said early Ottawa despatches lacked vital details, it not being known the day of each month on which the minimum is to be raised.

Prior to the announcement yesterday, buyers purchased for their current needs No. 1 grade Ontario creamery solids at 29 cents a pound, the level to which the product had sagged on the combination of seasonally increasing receipts and quiet trading. Recently buyers had been inclined to stay out of the market while awaiting official news in regard to the anticipated minimum price. The price for today's trading is expected to be at least 29½ cents a pound, and it was believed that buyers will display more interest in supplies offered now that a fixed price has been established.

The egg market maintained a fairly steady tone here yesterday, with current receipts sufficient to satisfy local requirements.

Toronto— Butter: The wholesale market was confused owing to the setting of the price at 29 1-2 first grade delivered. No definite price was set today, it being reported buyers were willing to pay 29 1-2 first grade solids but sellers claiming to have sold out supplies yesterday. The quotations were purely nominal at: First grade solids 29 1-2 to 30, second grade solids 28 to 29.

All this including $307 in bills and $10.75 in silver, was ordered confiscated by Magistrate D. M. Brodie. Sixteen men, including five Toronto men and one Detroiter, pleaded guilty to frequenting the place, and were each fined $10 and costs of $6 or 30 days in jail.

SOLUTION TO ENIGMA LIES IN HESS' MIND

Some Sources Think Hess Had Policy Which He Tried in Vain to Have Hitler Adopt

1555 PROPHECY QUOTED

London, May 14 (CP)—Some London sources, casting aside German reflections on the mental state of the unexpected prisoner, Rudolf Hess, declared that the No. 3 Nazi must have had a clear view of policy which he believed would help the German people and tried to persuade Hitler to adopt it.

"Only when he saw there was no hope of this did he adopt the desperate expedient of flight," they added.

But on one point these British quarters and the Germans agreed: That if Hess thought peace could be arranged between Britain and Germany short of a military solution, Hitler's ex-deputy was under an "illusion." The Germans called it "hallucination."

Why Did Hess 'Change His Mind?'

Britons said Hess was convinced that the war must be ended this year if the interests of the German people were to be served. He said that peace in 1941 had been Hess' objective, recalling his New Year's Day broadcast predicting peace this year.

"What made him change his mind in five months?" Britons asked. "The answer lies inside England inside the mind of Rudolf Hess and will be divulged to people permitted to talk to Hess."

Prophecy of 1555 Recalled

Indianapolis, Ind., May 14 (AP)—The Indianapolis Central Library, anent Rudolf Hess' flight to Britain offered without comment the following from a book written in 1555:

"A captain of Great Germany shall come to yield himself through pretended aid to the king of kings ....so that his revolt will cause great shedding of blood.

Tom Hutchinson, assistant librarian, found the passage yesterday while leafing through the "centuries" of Nostradamus, French seer.

Warns Against Hess

Butte, Mont., May 14 (AP)—Rudolf Hess was sent from Germany "to fool England" Carl J. Hambro, one-time President of the Norwegian Parliament and of the League of Nations Assembly said in an address last night.

It isn't reasonable to suppose, Hambro added, that Hess deserted Hitler.

"It is of course impossible to know exactly what the game is," he said. "But Hess may be a fanatic willing to sacrifice even his own life if it could help bring about the downfall of England."

Says Hess as Bad as Worst

London, May 14 —(CP)— Die Zeitung, anti-Nazi German paper published in London, inveighed today against "the easy sentimentality of some British people" which may tend to "convey the impression that this Hess is not so bad."

In an editorial headed "The Maggot in the Apple," it said:

"Hess is as bad as the worst of them . . . his hands are stained with the blood of thousands of innocent people."

The Germans themselves, the editorial contended, have supplied Britain with munitions for propaganda with the story that Hess has been mentally deranged for years.

"Are we to hear perhaps tomorrow that the Fuehrer himself has for years been notorious for being mentally deranged?" it inquired.

The editorial, signed by Sebastien Haffner, joint editor of the paper, which was founded two months ago, raised this interesting possibility:

"Make It Resound to Earth's End"

"Maybe this 'most loyal of the loyal' has been designated only to simulate treason and really make a last desperate attempt at creating confusion among the one-time friends of the Nazis in England. If this is the case, we may rest assured it will be foiled by the vigilance of the British government."

But the editorial advised Britain to make the most of the case in any event, saying:

"All that now has to be done is to make it resound to the remotest corner of the globe. For goodness sake, no discretion and no manners this time. This is the moment to make all the noise in the world and turn every available searchlight on the self-revealed corruption and core-rottenness of the Nazi state."

GERMANY CLAIMS

ing.

(The Nazis apparently thought up this explanation on the basis of Hess' landing on a farm which forms part of the Duke of Hamilton's estate).

Germans sought to ridicule reports that Hess had run to Britain with important documents and that he was betraying military and state secrets of the greatest importance.

"What he'll report about Germany will give the English no comfort," a Nazi official said. "He'll undoubtedly present a picture of Germany with an undeviating will to victory and of a powerful state about to strike an annihilating blow at its foes.'

Had Purpose of Crashing Plane

Nazi propagandists asserted that even the manner of his landing in Scotland showed Hess remained "a soldierly, loyal German." They asserted that the obvious purpose of crashing the plane and coming to earth by parachute was to make sure that the plane would be of no use to Britain.

"He seriously believed he'd come back to Germany triumphantly in a few weeks, in his pocket the documents of peace which he had conceived in diseased hallucination," a spokesman said.

"But I assure you that the Hess incident will be well forgotten in a few weeks, completely overshadowed by events of vast importance. New, world-shaking matters will occupy us all.

"But I caution you," he interjected, "not to construe this last remark as being a prediction of any great military action. Germans don't predict."

Documents Explain Mission

It was asserted the documents left by Hess were numerous and fully explain his "crackpot mission." It was not disclosed to whom the messages were addressed, but informed quarters claimed they outlined rambling notions about international co-operation named the Duke of Hamilton, and indicated that Hess "dreamed of a peace without Churchill or other English leaders whom the Germans regard as warmongers."

(The Duke of Hamilton before he succeeded his father last year was known as the Marquess of Clydesdale. He was chief pilot in the British flight over Mount Everest in 1933. At present he is believed to be serving with the R.A.F.)

Informed sources said Hess had lately been occupied at Augsburg, where he took off, with translating Hitler speeches into English.

A commentator on German foreign relations claimed the Hess case was unimportant to the foreign office. He asserted that in Britain and America it was acting as "a narcotic which lulls Germany's foes into a false sense of security and detracts attention from increasingly urgent dangers."

STRASSER

"He would say: "I have no opinions—I am only the private secretary.' They have called him the Saint-Just of the German revolution. Saint-Just was the closest friend of Robespierre in the French revolution."

Dr. Strasser said that although Hess always was watchful against telling Hitler "disagreeable things," it was likely he had often told him:

"You will see, the generals are against you. You must be careful of the generals."

If it were possible there had been a falling-out between Hitler and Hess it might have resulted from such repeated warnings, for which Dr. Strasser said there was good cause.

He said he had "many reports from Germany that in the last few weeks the German General Staff doubt that Germany can win the war.

"They know Germany can win on land—but they doubt that Germany can win over water."

He suggested that the army which he said was supreme in Germany may be seeking peace with Britain although embarrassed by the knowledge that Britain "would not make peace with Hitler—that no one would make peace with Hitler."

"The Prussian Generals don't want to lose with Hitler. They have used Hitler as long as he has been useful. But the old struggle between army and Party rises again. The army hopes they can make peace by sacrificing Hitler."

ECONOMIC BARS

Determination in Policy

"To this I must add that I have now instructed His Majesty's Ambassador in Tokyo to reply to Japanese complaints of economic restrictions in British territory by saying that, while our main objective is to conserve supplies for our war effort and prevent those supplies from reaching our enemies, we naturally are influenced in deciding our economic policy by the attitude of the Japanese government towards our interests in China."

Sir J. Wardlaw Milne, Conservative, said the House would be "very grateful" for his statement on Japan as showing "determination in policy which is very desirable."

Then, he asked, "will he give us assurance that policy will be pursued with determination in the future?"

"Yes," Mr. Eden responded amid cheers. "The Honorable Gentleman may be quite sure we will do our best. Our position is quite plain. The Japanese government complained to us of our economic policy. They cannot expect any help in that direction until they treat our interests in China with proper consideration."

Cordial Relations With China

Asked about relations with China, Mr. Eden answered:

"Relations between our two governments remain, I am happy to say, on terms of the closest cordiality and co-operation.

"Engaged as we are in a life and death struggle against aggression in Europe and the Middle East, the efforts of China to resist foreign domination and preserve her independence have a natural appeal to the people of this country.

"His Majesty's government have done what they could in the past and they will continue to do what they can in the future to help China maintain her independence."

Mr. Eden said British military action in Iraq is being carried out vigorously and added that the government is convinced that Rashid Ali Al Gailani is "not upheld by the country as a whole."

Of France he said that whatever concessions Vice-Premier Jean Darlan made to Hitler, "I find it hard to believe that the French people helpless though they may be to prevent the Germans' spoliation .... will be so false to their noble traditions as to work actively for the German cause and thus....postpone their day of liberation."

M. P.'S INSPECT TRAINING UNITS AT CAMP BORDEN

Driven to Huge Military Camp From Toronto in Bren Gun Carriers

FIRE MACHINE GUNS

Camp Borden, May 14 (CP)—A party of Members of Parliament fired machine guns and rifles and took a bumpy ride in a Lloyd carrier in the morning half of their tour of this huge military camp today.

Driven to the camp from Toronto in army vehicles convoyed by motorcycles, the 40 members in the party were taken to the firing ranges in Bren carriers.

On the ranges Revenue Minister Gibson and John Diefenbaker (Con. Lake Centre) handled Thompson sub-machine-guns.

When the members had finished firing a young warrant officer dared some of them to ride in a Lloyd carrier—a two-seater machine that the soldiers call "a puddle-jumper"—and the dare was taken up.

W. C. Macdonald (Lib. Halifax) was one of the first to take the ride but his was a mild one compared to the ride given three Western members—W. A. Tucker (Lib. Rosthern), D. C. Abbott (Lib. St. Antoine-Westmount) and T. C. Douglas (CCF-Weyburn).

They were taken up hills at great speed and down an almost perpendicular cliff face and afterwards their clothes were covered with dust.

The members went for a swim in the big pool before taking lunch. This afternoon they will inspect men of the 1st Canadian Armored Division and the technical wing of the Canadian Armored Corps' Training Centre.

CAPT. L. MASSEY A PRISONER

London, May 14 (CP Cable) — Hon. Vincent Massey, Canadian High Commissioner, has been informed that his son, Capt. Lionel Massey, has been wounded and taken prisoner in Greece, it was learned today.

Details are not available. Capt. Massey was a battalion Adjutant.

LOW-LEVEL RAID

Barracks Target of R.A.F.

In the Heligoland attack, an Air Ministry communique said that bombs fired jetties and buildings, and that barracks were the targets of machine-gun fire from a "very low level."

The island's defenders were surprised, the communique added, and the raid was over before the ground defences could act effectively. All planes returned safely.

At St. Nazaire, a supply ship of 12,000-tons was hit amidships and set afire. Other explosives damaged dockside buildings. Two planes were missing in this raid.

Another German supply ship of about 2,000 tons was left in sinking condition after an attack near the island of Ushant, off the Britanny coast.

HITLER-DARLAN

Not in Final Stage

Usually informed French sources also described the negotiations as going beyond the economic and into the political field.

Belief was expressed, however, that they had not yet reached a final stage.

In the exchange, France was reported scheduled to receive varied advantages as, for example, the return of a number of prisoners who are primarily farm workers and a northward revision of the demarcation line, putting Paris in the zone not German-occupied and leaving the Nazis in control of only one-fifth of France.

What France is giving other than full economic and, perhaps, full political collaboration is not officially indicated here.

This morning's communique was considered in some quarters to be more than anything a warning to the United States that France is committed to collaboration.

Vichy Cabinet Meets

All it said was:

"The cabinet met under the presidency of Petain. It heard a report from Darlan of French-German negotiations. It unanimously approved the terms. The effects of these negotiations will be felt soon."

One semi-official source said Darlan was expected to return to the occupied zone "very soon" to meet a "high ranking German figure."

This was interpreted in some informed quarters as a sign that detailed terms still had not been settled despite the wording of the cabinet communique.

Radio Highlights For Tonight

Army Greetings from Nursing Sisters will be heard on the air tonight at 8.30 (D.S.T.) over CBL and at 10.30 (D.S.T.) a Norwegian-Canadian program with Arthur L. Phelps as speaker will be heard over CBL. "Britain Speaks" program is on the air tonight also at 11.15 (D.S.T.) over CBL, with H. L. Beales of London, addressing the radio audience.

"At the present hour, after the Balkan campaign which eliminated the presence of British troops from the European continent—Gibraltar excepted—everything indicates that Germany is thinking more and more of the organization of the continent," said the semi-official Paris Mondial Agency, which formerly was Havas.

"The problem is to find out what place is to be reserved for France in this new organization."

Papers Barred

Berne, Switzerland, May 14—(AP)—The Swiss telegraphic agency said today that the Vichy government has banned Swiss newspapers from unoccupied France, effective Friday. Since the French collapse the neutral Swiss newspapers have had a large circulation in that zone.

Soviet Russia Starting To Buy Colombian Coffee

Bogota, Colombia, May 14—(AP) Soviet Russia, which failed to buy Colombian coffee in the last 25 years, suddenly has started heavy purchases.

Ships' manifesto showed today that 56,000 bags were loaded aboard one freighter alone for movement by way of San Francisco and Vladivostok.

An announcement from Vancouver, B.C., April 28 that 11,000 bags of coffee were seized while en route to Germany led some quarters to believe that the Nazis were making purchases of the bean for shipment via Russia. A spokesman for the coffee federation said, however, that he had no information of any German purchases in Colombian markets.

(A. Armichael, collector of customs at Vancouver, said last April 28 that a shipment of coffee believed destined ultimately for Germany had been seized at Vancouver. The shipment of 11,000 bags of coffee beans totalling 1,500,000 pounds was loaded at Cristobal, Canal Zone, he said, and was scheduled to be transhipped at San Francisco for a Japanese destination but the ship was ordered to continue on to Vancouver. When it put into port there its cargo was seized as a prize of war, the collector said.)

PROPAGANDA

Talks Freely With Guards

Ivon Kirkpatrick, former Charge D'Affaires of Britain's Berlin Embassy who definitely identified the mysterious parachutist as Hitler's lieutenant and second designated political heir, still was with him. He was said to be talking freely with his guards.

Hess' reading material includes light English literature, including short stories.

Details of arrangements for the proposed Churchill-Hess conference were as carefully guarded as the whereabouts of Britain's prize prisoner of war.

BBC declared in its broadcasts today that preparations for the flight "could not have been made in a day, or carried out by one individual".

"Hess wasn't a mere politician", BBC declared, "but the most intimate friend of the Fuehrer, who knows him in his intimate mood."

"What facts did he know which led him to betray the friendship of a lifetime and endanger the structure of the Reich which he helped build?" asked the British Broadcasters.

New Statement Promised

Observers expressed belief that the Churchill-Hess meeting might provide food for the "further statement" which Mr. Churchill yesterday promised the House of Commons would be made "in the near future".

BBC gave a detailed description of the flight, one broadcast adding "we regard the Hess action as a symptom of the deep internal emmities and strains in the leadership of the Third Reich

"These diseases are disguised from Germany by German propaganda and German military power, but the outside world has always, even in the darkest days, felt confident that the 1,000-year Reich will not last ten years—as Mr. Churchill commented briefly, 'There is maggot in the apple'."

The reference to a 1,000-year Reich was taken from the latest Hitler speech May 4, in which he forecast glorious future for Germany.

BBC concluded that nothing precise would be known of Hess' disclosures until Mr. Churchill "divulges as much as he thinks fit of what Rudolf Hess has been reading and writing in the military hospital where he lies".

BBC kept secret the exact technique of getting the broadcast to German listeners.

Had Specific Destination

The fact that Hess had a specific destination—he had a marked map for the flight from Augsburg, Bavaria, to Scotland—indicated there were things behind the flight which are so important it may be a long time before they are revealed to the public.

Hess admittedly is in position to give the British Government valuable information about Germany's political economic and military affairs, but how far his statements could be trusted was a problem.

The caution of authorities in bringing out Hess' statements was credited to two things: a professed desire to spare embarrassment to Hess' family and followers in Germany and the natural suspicion of Hess' motives.

Reliable sources recalled that two British Government agents who thought they had received a peace bid on behalf of a dissident Nazi faction were seized by the Germans when they went to a Netherlands-German border rendezvous early in the war.

MEETING BETWEEN

Will Test Authenticity of statements

"It is believed it will be much more demoralizing to keep the Nazi leaders guessing how much Hess might have told and how much of their future strategy and plans he might have revealed," one source said.

Any information obtained from Hess, it was said will be treated with the greatest skepticism until its authenticity can be tested.

"We want to be sure we haven't a 'Trojan Hess' on our hands," one informed source joked, alluding to the famous "Trojan Horse" trick by which the Greeks effected the fall of Troy.

Despite mystery veiling the reasons for Hess' fantastic flight there was no doubt British officials are making every effort to exploit its propaganda value.

The British Broadcasting Corporation filled the air with news and speculation concerning the Nazi Deputy leader's arrival in Britain. Broadcasts have been made in Czech, Spanish, Norwegian, French, German and other languages as well as English.

Morning newspapers, in which the Hess story still occupied the most prominent place, reiterated suggestions that Hess be given an opportunity to broadcast to the German people the reasons for his flight.

They said Hitler's Deputy for Nazi party affairs always had been respected by the German people and anything he might say would have great influence.

Hess himself was said to be resting comfortably in the undisclosed refuge to which he was taken from a Glasgow hospital. The Daily Mail said high army intelligence officials and a nurse were in the party which left the hospital with him.

The Senate will meet for the second time since before the Easter recess.

YESTERDAY

The House approved Budget resolutions providing for increased taxes on beer, malt and malt syrup and discussed income tax changes without making progress; heard Agriculture Minister Gardiner announce the establishment of a maximum price on butter; heard Trade Minister MacKinnon announce that the United Kingdom Food Ministry has contracted for 120,000,000 bushels of Canadian wheat futures, delivery to be completed by July 31, 1942; and dealt with some Agriculture Department estimates.

The Senate met briefly; Government Leader Dandurand and Conservative Leader Meighen paid tribute to Senator J. D. Taylor (Con. British Columbia), killed in a fall from a train en route to attend the session.

McLean Recounts Capture Of Hess

Glasgow, May 14.—(CP) —David McLean the Scottish farmer who confronted the parachuting Rudolf Hess with a pitchfork only to serve him later with a glass of milk in his thatched cottage said today:—

"You'll hae tae wait until I feed the horses".

After that chore was finished he hitched his belt and again recited the capture of the unresisting Hess.

"I served in France in the last war but nothing like this ever happened to me then," he said.

"If Hitler or Goering are thinking of coming this way, though, there'll be a hot welcome for them."

Mother McLean, 64, put in a few words:—

"I liked his (Hess) uniform, his fur collar and shiny boots. His clothing seemed to be all zip fasteners. Such a handsome mon, too . . . he had grand teeth.

"I asked him 'are you a German,' and he said 'yes'.

"I said 'what a life'."

'HESS GOOD NEWS FOR ENGLAND' SAYS N.Y. TIMES

'He is Sign Enemy is More Vulnerable Than Appears on Battlefield'

SCHISM FATAL

New York May 14 (CP)—The New York Times touching editorially upon the various reasons advanced for Rudolf Hess' flight to Pritain, said today that "whatever he is, Hess is good news for England."

"He is a sign that the enemy is more vulnerable than he appears on the battlefield," the paper added. "He is a sign that the schism in the high priesthood of the secret sect governing Germany is as deep and deadly as it ever was so deep that even victory cannot heal or cover it. He is a sign that the formidable monster that terrorizes Europe is still abnormal, preposterous and marked for self-destruction.

"Whatever he is, moreover, the escape of Hess worries Hitler and must spread and deepen the doubts that eat into the secret heart of Germany."

The Herald Tribune, saying it is possible that Hess "converted for whatever reason, is about to put his knowledge and the power of his voice into a crusade against the whole gang with whom he rose," said the incident could "easily mark one of the great turning points of the war."

Significances Of Hess' Flight Incalculable

(By KIRKE L. SIMPSON)

Washington, May 14. — (AP) — Hunting for a needle of truth in the haystack of conjecture about Rudolf Hess's motives is a profitless if interesting pastime at this stage.

However, his flight from Germany has inescapable significances tending to influence the trends of the war, regardless of Hess' motives or his mential condition. They sum up into a definite break for Britain—a much-needed tonic for a people who have suffered serious reverses.

With a third-ranking Nazi a voluntary war prisoner in Britain, Britains' hope that a major rift is brewing within the German leadership is natural. It may not be well founded. There has been no other sign of friction in Hitler's inner circle or between the Nazi military wing headed by Goering and the political or party wing which Hess captained.

Nevertheless, Berlin's explanations of the Hess flight are conflicting and subject to question. The mere fact that Berlin thought it essential to be the first with the news that he was missing and to cast doubt on his sanity indicates that Nazi high authority knew where he had fled and why.

Fantastic Suggestions

It is within the bounds of possibility that Hess had been under disguised restraint for undisclosed reasons. Hitler's orders denying him use of planes for "health" reasons alone do not sound convincing. The beneficiary of that Hitler solicitude proved himself a competent airman in his flight to Scotland, sound in mind and body. It took a good head, a good heart and good nerves to achieve his purpose.

The Berlin version that he fled to attempt a personally conducted one-man peace campaign in Britain is even more fantastic than the rumor that he was a Hitler peace missionary catapulted into Scotland. By claiming Hess was suffering from a temporary mental derangement which led to hallucinations, Berlin promptly disavowed him. And his behavior on arrival clearly showed he hoped and expected to be treated as a distinguished war prisoner. That would afford him no opportunity to operate a peace campaign among his British "friends," as suggested by Berlin commentators.

Nor can the timing of the Hess escape to Scotland be left out of the picture. It came just as many signs indicated that Hitler was planning pressure politics victories both East and West to exploit his recent military victories in the Balkans.

Has Invaluable Information.

Nazi-French negotiations which could spell peril for Britain in Africa and the Mediterranean seemed close to completion. There were straws in the diplomatic winds hinting that Berlin expected some appeasement moves from Russia and Turkey.

Yet the Hess flight incident must have startled policy-makers at Vichy, Moscow and Ankara. Their natural course would be to stall off German pressure long enough at least to form some reasonable judgment of what the Hess desertion actually means.

There is no doubt that Hess has information of a military, political and economic nature that could be of incalculable value to Mr. Churchill. He stood high in the Nazi organization too long for it to be otherwise, even if he has been a virtual prisoner more recently.

The history of this war already includes an astonishing series of incidents in which the seemingly impossible was what happened. None of them is more dumbfounding than the Hess flight, whatever its real explanation.

Minimum Butter Price Will Protect Producer In Period When Production Is At Its Highest

Ottawa, May 14 (CP)—Effect of the minimum prices for butter established by the Dairy Products Board yesterday will be to increase prices paid by the housewife during summer months, officials said today.

The order makes obligatory an increase of one-half cent a pound a month for butter from May to October and it is provided that this additional price must be paid the producer at the point of delivery to the wholesale purchaser.

The view here was that these increases would be passed on to the consumer.

Officials said one effect of the order would be to protect the butter producer in the period when production is at its highest and prices are apt to decline.

They recalled that similar protection was given the consumer during the winter and early spring period of low production and consequent higher prices through application of a Wartime Prices and Trade Board order setting the maximum price of butter at 35 cents, basis Montreal.

Maximum Peg Removed

The maximum price peg on butter was removed recently, but Wartime Prices and Trade Board officials said that their authority remained if it became necessary to protect the consumer in the coming winter and a maximum price could again be established.

The hope was, however, that stabilization of the butter market throughout the year would make any such peg unnecessary in the future.

The maximum price peg was removed when butter prices in general remained about 30 cents a pound, five cents below the maximum allowed under the order made effective in 1940.

The application of the minimum price order was not expected to cause any general increase in cost to the Canadian housewife in the present month.

The May fixed prices which must be paid the producer at the point where he delivers his butter are 26 1-2 cents a pound in Saskatchewan, 27 1-2 cents in Alberta and Manitoba and 29 1-2 cents in British Columbia and Eastern Provinces. These prices are for first grade creamery solids, and creamery prints and rolls are fixed at one cent a pound higher.

In October, the producers will be receiving 2 1-2 cents a pound more than in May for their butter—and the consumer will probably be paying 2 1-2 cents a pound more.

Says Hess Knew Britain Only Place For Safety

Whitby, Ont., May 14 (CP)—Gottfried Treviranus, former German Cabinet Minister now operating a farm near this town, 26 miles east of Toronto, said in an interview last night that Rudolf Hess "went to Britain because he knew it was the only place he would be safe."

Mr. Treviranus, who escaped from Germany under sentence of death and came to Canada from England shortly after the outbreak of war, said the only matter of significance in Hess' flight from Germany to Scotland was that it might give courage to others who disagree with the Nazi principles.

"Hess was the last man, not the first, you would think of turning against Hitler," he said. "He was a modest, unassuming man and for years wanted nothing more than to be Hitler's shadow."

WHEAT PRICES SOAR

Chicago, May 14 —(AP)— Wheat prices soared three cents today to above $1 a bushel in the Chicago futures pit, highest quotation posted here since the market's sensational collapse a year ago.

Drydock Strike Quickly Ended

Washington, May 14.—(AP)—A strike which stopped a $30,000,000 construction project at the Boston Naval Drydock was ended today and in another case Mayor Thomas P. Spellaky sought an immediate reopening of the Colt's Patent Fire Arms Company at Hartford, Conn.

Errors were redoubled at Washington during the day to avert a threatened strike against General Motors Corporation.

Ernest A. Johnson, secretary treasurer of the A.F.L. building and construction trades council at Boston, announced differences had been "ironed out successfully" upon his return from conferences with Federal Officials in Washington. The 900-odd strikers went out in protest against use of Works Progress Administration workers at the naval base.

Mayor Spellaky asked Colt's employees to return to work at once pending a national labor relations election. Representatives of Federal and State agencies, the management and officials of a C.I.O. Union mat to try to settle the dispute.

General Motors officials and United Automobile Workers (C.I.O.) Union officials met with a defence mediation board panel for 90 minutes then reopened direct negotiations without Federal mediators.

There was a new threat of a tie-up in the Appalachian soft coal fields, and 11 shipyards of San Francisco Bay were still closed by strikes.

SHADE AHEAD OF ENEMY

London, May 14.—(CP)—Herbert Morrison, Minister of Home Security, told a luncheon audience today "those who knew best think that in night interception we are rather more than a shade ahead of the enemy".

Mr. Morrison said a "steady, consistent rise in the curve of victories since the dark times of winter" was significant.

ROME COMMENT ON HESS

Rome, May 14 —(AP)— Political circles here "learned with profound sorrow of the sad case of the mental confusion" of Rudolf Hess, Hitler's deputy, foreign correspondents were told today. Fascist spokesmen did not elaborate.

REMANDED A WEEK

Toronto, May 14 (CP)—Phyllis Burnett, Toronto, charged with murdering her baby, was remanded another week at the request of the Crown in court here today.

The woman was charged after allegedly throwing the child to the pavement here last week during an argument with her husband. She claims she dropped the child.

RUDOLF HESS, NO. 3 NAZI, LANDS IN SCOTLAND

In one of the most amazing incidents of the war, Rudolf Hess, Germany's No. 3 Nazi, parachuted from a German Messerschmitt 110 fighter over Scotland. Close confidant of Hitler, Hess (RIGHT) was named as the Fuehrer's successor, following Herman Goering, should anything happen to Hitler. He followed Hitler with a blind devotion from before the unsuccessful beer hall putsch of 1923. He was sentenced to jail with the Fuehrer, and is credited with editing Hitler's "Mein Kampf." At all public gatherings, Hess was close to the Nazi leader. He is pictured (ABOVE), at the extreme right, when Hitler met with King Victor Emmanuel and Premier Mussolini.

THE WAR TODAY

By DON GILBERT
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

The Vichy Government apparently has committed itself to the principal of continental solidarity and co-operation with Germany in its efforts to keep the United States out of the war.

The agreement negotiated by Vice-Premier Jean Darlan during his week-end visit to Hitler was approved today by Marshal Petain's cabinet and it was stated the effects of the accord "will be felt soon."

Diplomatic circles in Vichy described the Hitler-Darlan understanding as representing "the accomplished fact" of European co-operation in opposing United States entry into the war.

Press dispatches from Vichy are closely supervised by the Petain government, with correspondents liable to punishment for making statements distasteful to the authorities. This would indicate that the diplomatic reports concerning today's developments are well founded, if unofficial.

The extremists in French politics, mainly those more directly under German influence in Paris, recently have been emphasizing more and more the idea of continental solidarity against the "Anglo-Saxon world."

But Vichy's adoption of an idea will not help the Germans much unless it is accompanied by material assistance, such as transit rights through French metropolitan and colonial territory for German armed forces.

The Middle East and the Battle of the Atlantic are the two centres of German action. They are the two theatres of war affording the Nazis the best chances of choking off American aid for Britain. In both Vichy, France could play an important part.

In the battle of the Atlantic the Vichy French could lend the Germans enormous aid by facilitating German occupation of the west and northwest Africa coasts, which would threaten the British sea routes to South America, to South Africa and to the Far East by the Cape route. Such aid also would be vital in the event of a German assault on Gibraltar.

In the Middle East the French mandated territory of Syria offers the Germans the best opening for thrusts in the direction of Suez and Iraq. Last night the Germans declared the Red Sea a zone of war operations and pointedly commented that there would be no exemption for United States shipping.

This is an important challenge to Washington, but it was indicated that President Roosevelt had not overlooked the possibility of this German action when he recently opened the Red Sea to American ships. There seemed to be little possibility that the Nazis would be successful in forcing the President to rescind his order. In fact, Mr. Roosevelt has strongly hinted that naval protection will be provided, if necessary, to see that American supplies reach the Allied armies in the Middle East.

Expect New Move By German Armies To Counteract The Hess Scandal

(The following is by Wade Werner, who spent many years in Europe for The Associated Press. He was stationed at Berlin for four years, before becoming Moscow bureau chief in 1938.)

By WADE WERNER.

New York, May 14 — No matter why Rudolf Hess fled from Germany into the arms of Hitler's enemies, the world can be rather sure of one thing:

The German military machine will be galvanized into action. There will be a new drive in some direction soon.

That is what happened after the Blomberg scandal of 1938, when Hitler's defence minister, Field Marshal Werner von Blomberg, was ousted after his marriage to a woman regarded by army officers as his social inferior.

That scandal precipitated a major shakeup in the military establishment with Hitler himself taking over the supreme command; but even that could not quell the rising tide of rumor and conjecture which finally had the German army "in open revolt" at certain garrison towns.

Something had to be done to show the world the German army was as strong and well disciplined as ever; that it would march in any direction at the leader's command.

While the rumors of its collapse were still circulating something was done. The German army marched into Austria, occupying the whole country.

The world forgot about Blomberg scandal and the rumors of German military collapse. It was too obvious that the army had not collapsed.

Now a far more fantastic and ominous scandal has shaken the pillars of Germany's military prestige. In countries fighting Germany hope has flared up that this, at last, may be the first sign of that long-awaited inner collapse of the Hitler regime.

Certainly it was only natrual to assume that if Rudolf Hess, Hitler's close friend and the synonym throughout Germany of absolute devotion to his leader, had to jump into a Messerschmitt and make a wild dash for Scotland, something must be awfully wrong in the heart of Nazidom.

Even Germans willing to accept without question the official Nazi explanation that Hess was "mentally deranged because of physical illness" when he fled, could hardly escape being deeply perturbed over the event.

Even in Germany, no conjecture advanced in foreign countries as to the reason for Hess's flight could seem any more fantastic than the circumstances of the flight itself.

The surprise in Britain was greater than a full-scale invasion attempt could have achieved; for Britain was expecting an invasion, and 4,000,000 men were under arms in readiness to repel it

Instead, one Scottish farmer with a pitchfork was all it took to capture the No. 3 Nazi.

The jubilation in Britain over this surprise turn of events would be bitter enough for Hitler's Germany to swallow; but its effects on German prestige in such countries as Turkey, France, Spain and Russia could be damaging in the extreme.

There was only one thing to do after the Blomberg scandal; put the German army into action and show the world.

Today there is an even greater urgency. If the Hess scandal continues to echo and re-echo through the world—regardless of whether Hess talks and tells all or sulks and says nothing—the doubts created in Turkey, Spain, France and other countries whose "collaboration" Germany is seeking, may hamstring Hitler's whole program of a "new order" in Europe.

Therefore Germany must launch a new drive in some direction with the least possible delay. Only new and smashing victories can kill the doubt that has been created as to the internal solidity of German military power.

It is equally true if Hess' escape to Scotland turns out to have been the prelude to a basic shift of authority from Nazi party hands into military hands.

Shift to Army Control

Such a shifting of power into military hands long has been expected by some observers as a natural consequence of the war in which Germany is engaged. They have argued that the longer a war lasts and the greater the strain, the more irresistible becomes the tendency—especially in a country with a strong military tradition—for the people to turn to generals rather than politicians for salvation. In other words, the longer the war lasts the easier it becomes for generals to take control

If such a shifting of power were taking place against Hitler's will, the very fact that Hess has been so close to Hitler and reputedly so devoted to him for so many years might be enough to put him in an extremely dangerous spot.

In other words, it is possible he had to flee the country because he was too loyal to Hitler. Or maybe he was merely suffering from "hallucinations" that something was afoot against Hitler which he could not frustrate.

Speculations at this juncture, however, only deepen the mystery; for Hess himself was a rather mysterious person. He was close to Hitler, but always in the background. For years he was Hitler's private secretary, and as deputy leader he continued to be a good private secretary. He ranked No. 3 among the Nazis, but as a personality he was far down the list.

During my own sojourns in Germany I must have seen Hess hundreds of times, for he was nearly always at Hitler's elbow. But I only remember distinctly two occasions when I noticed definitey he was there. Once was when he made a speech—not a single word of which I can recall now; the other time when I was introduced to him. Of this occasion I remember nothing he said, but only his sombre face and bushy eyebrows.

One could never come away from Hitler or Goering or Goebbels, or even Jew-baiting Julius Streicher, with such vague impressions as that.

Even the former British Ambassador to Germany, Sir Nevile Henderson, after a rather comprehensive opportunity to get acquainted with Nazi leaders, reported to his government that he never got beyond first impressions with Hess. He sized him up as "aloof and inscrutable, with a strong fanatical streak which would be produced whenever the occasion required it."

Perhaps Sir Nevile now will have a better opportunity to chat at leisure with Hess, and to learn the secret of his mysterious personality as well as the secret of his fantastic flight.

BRITONS RECALL GESTAPO TRICK

Two British Agents Seized on Nov. 9, 1939, as They Probed Purported German 'Peace Bid'

(By the Canadian Press)

A painful experience early in the war, when two British agents were seized by the German gestapo while on a mission to investigate a purported "peace bid," lingers in the British mind as a footnote to the Hess affair.

Britons are wary of voicing the theory that Rudolf Hess brought a peace "feeler" on his airplane flight to Scotland, lest it turn out to be a trick like that strange, never-fully-explained Netherlands affair of Nov. 9, 1939.

The two British agents were Capt. Richard Henry Stevens and Sigismund Payne Best. Their capture by the Germans was described in London as a "kidnapping," the gestapo crossing The Netherlands border to do it.

Stevens and Best were said by a British government spokesman to have gone to the border rendezvous to investigate a "German peace proposal," though it never was adequately revealed from what faction in Germany the asserted proposal had come. Germany denied any knowledge of such negotiations.

At any rate, the two British agents were acting on behalf of their government when they went to The Netherlands town of Venloo in the expectation of meeting a German envoy on then-neutral grounds.

Instead, they ran into a nest of gestapo agents, were grabbed and whisked across into Germany. Their fate since has not been disclosed and doubt has been expressed that they are alive.

Germany announced Nov. 24 that Stevens was being held as a British "spy chieftain" on charges of direct connection with an attempt on Hitler's life at Munich on the previous Nov. 8, when a bomb exploded in a beer cellar after a meeting of old Nazi comrades.

Defence Minister Visits Camp Units

Camp Borden, Ont., May 14 —(CP)— Defence Minister Ralston landed at Camp Borden by plane today on a surprise visit that coincided with a tour of inspection of the huge military camp by 40 members of parliament.

The Minister's visit was not known until an hour before he landed but a guard of honor was recruited in double-quick time from the Ontario regiment.

"I would like to express my appreciation of the way you have turned out," Col. Ralston told the guard. "This is a war in which the unexpected is always happening and you have shown yourselves ready for the unexpected. This is a tough war and a long war but I know the armored division and the army tank brigade to which you belong are both going concerns...

"Carry on and you may be sure we will be carrying on along with you."

Food Is Examined Before Given Hess

By WILLIAM HUMPHREYS
Associated Press Staff Writer.

At Rudolf Hess' Retreat Somewhere in Great Britain, May 14—(OP)—Rudolf Hess is fussy about the food Britain is giving him.

A visit to the hospital where physicians and nurses care for the No. 1 prisoner-patient behind guarded walls brought this one comment from an otherwise tight-lipped staff.

"He's cranky about what he eats," a member of the staff confided. "And guess he has reason at that. He made the flight with only compressed food tablets."

The Nazi has no individual nurse, this informant added. Instead, there is a Captain of a famous regiment to keep him company and make conversation when Hess is not engrossed in one of the many mystery novels from the hospital library.

outside the door there are soldiers of the same regiment standing guard.

Ever dish of salmon, chicken or eggs upon which Hess insists on having passes a most rigorous examination before it is admitted to his convalescent chamber.

HELD FOR FRAUD

Hamilton, May 14 —(CP)— A widely-known figure skating star who once toured Canada and the United States, 25-year old Evelyn Jeffrey of Toronto, appeared in court here today to face six charges of false pretences.

Hugh F. Brown, Assistant Crown Attorney, sought and was granted a week's adjournment in the hearing of the charges.

The Crown alleges that cheques presented to deliverymen of large local stores were worthless.

DEATH TOLL NOW THREE

Toronto, May 14 —(CP)— The death toll of an accident last Sunday in which a group of pedestrians were struck by a car was raised to three today with the death in hospital of James Kusen, 41, Toronto hotel owner.

Theodore Barabaish, 43, died last night and 11-year-old Shirley Mitchell died Sunday night.

Mrs. Emma Passarello of Buffalo, N.Y., is being held on a charge of manslaughter arising from the accident.

Destinies Of Freedom Loving Peoples Depend On Use They Make Of Navies

London, May 14 (CP)—John Winant, United States Ambassador to Great Britain, told the English-speaking union today that "freedom loving and peace loving people of this earth are coming to realize that this is not Britain's fight alone" and that their destinies may depend on the use they made of their navies.

He expressed hope that in debate over losses at sea of goods manufactured in the United States both Britons and Americans "realize that the mere statement of sinkings of ships from America does not tell the whole story."

"It only proves, as does the successful transport of troops to the Middle East, the protective power of adequate convoy," he said.

"Such figures do not show the necessity of selection. They do not disclose what food may have been taken from the children of Britain to give her soldiers arms.

"They tell only a small part of the Battle of the Atlantic and of the shipping problem to be faced in the prosecution of total war. In total war, it is total strength that counts."

The ambassador declared that "so far, the totalitarians have been appallingly successful" in "keeping their threats and breaking their promises," warning that "when dictators conspire together, men and women of good will everywhere must act together."

Speaks of Bombings

In speaking of bombings of Westminster Abbey and the House of Commons, Mr. Winant said:

"Across the street from the wreckage of these two great historic buildings of state and church the statue of Abraham Lincoln was still standing. As I looked at the bowed figure of the emancipator and thought of his life, I could not help but remember that he loved God, that he defined and represented Democratic government, and that he hated slavery.

"As an American I was proud that he was there in all that wreckage, as a friend and sentinel of gallant days that have gone by, and a reminder that in this great battle for freedom he waited quietly for support for the things for which he lived and died."

Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden, speaking after Mr. Winant declared that "overthrow of Nazi tyranny is the first condition for all progress in the world, but there is something more than that."

"In the growth of understanding between our two peoples," he said, "lies the greatest hope for the future of the world that will emerge after this ordeal is passed.

"Between your government and ours there are no treaties, there are no sealed deeds and documents.

"There is something much deeper than that. We at heart, care strongly for the same thing."

Delay Adds to Difficulties

"We are engaged in the greatest struggle in history to preserve freedom in the modern world," the Ambassador said. "We have made our tasks infinitely more difficult because we failed to do yesterday what we gladly do today."

He declared that "the longer the delay the more protracted will be the war and the greater the sacrifices which will be required for victory."

Britons and Americans must stop asking themselves if it is necessary to do more today, the Ambassador continued.

"Let us, all of us, ask ourselves what more we can do today so that we may have less to do and sacrifice tomorrow," he urged. "If we will only not put off for tomorrow what can be done today, victory for freedom will come sooner than we dare to hope."

Referring to the naval experience of President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill, Mr. Winant said, "A kindly Providence at this time of stress and danger has placed at the head of the two great English-speaking peoples two men whose knowledge of the sea is probably greater than that of any statesmen of any kind."

Letters From the Troops

The following letter from Private W. G. Sexsmith, now somewhere in England with his regiment, was received by his mother, Mrs. George Sexsmith of Marysville, Ont.—

Dear Folks:

Here it is Sunday, 11 o'clock and we just came back from church so thought I'd drop you a line and let you know I received your cable and was very glad to get it and know that you had got my letters. I went on my five days landing leave last Monday, 31st and got back yesterday at noon and the Corporal gave me the cable at dinner time. A lad named Shud and I went up to Wales with Scotty Roberts to his home there. He hadn't been home in fourteen years so it was quite a celebration. We had a good trip, changing trains six times and waiting for trains took quite a lot of time so we didn't get to Hollyhead till 8.30 Tuesday morning. We went through Crewe the largest rail terminal in the British Isles, also Birmingham, a very large city. We stopped over night in Birmingham coming back. Scotty's mother, his sister and husband and their two little girls live outside of Hollyhead at a little place called Ty Croes, a real Welsh name. They live in the country but only have a house and garden, as Scotty's brother-in-law is the game warden. The Welsh have a dialect of their own and the older people, like Scotty's mother, can't understand or speak English, although the younger ones can. You can't understand a word they say in Welsh. We had our breakfast about 10 o'clock the morning we got there and while we were eating, two boiled eggs each, etc., Scotty's mother came in and gave him a pound note and laid a ten-shilling note between Shud's and my plate. I looked at her at first and then at Scotty as I didn't know what she meant so he told us the 10s was to get cigarettes with, can you imagine! Before we left to go home his mother and sister gave us, Shud and I, three ten - shilling notes ($2.25 each) and Scotty four pounds for spending money, around $25, altogether. It was the greatest place I ever was. They eat five times a day, 6 o'clock in the morning, 10, 1, 5 and 7 o'clock at night. The 10 o'clock meal in the morning and the 5 o'clock one in the evening are large ones and the other three are mostly tea, biscuits and cakes. You couldn't eat enough to suit them and I ate plenty. One noon meal consisted of three fried eggs each with bacon and all the trimmings. They are good cooks. Their home is a nice old-fashioned stone affair with a hedge around it and a nice flower garden. The daffodils are in full bloom now and are like gold. Like all the houses over here, each room, even the bedroom, has a fire-place. The dining room had a lovely fire-place with a big leather chair on each side of it; a great place to spend an evening sitting around talking. When I go back I'm going to introduce them to Ontario, because they'd be a nice thing in the winter time, don't you think? We went into Hollyhead, a place the size of Belleville one day and had a good time. Very few of the people had ever seen Canadian soldiers before so we were quite freaks. I run into a fellow there that used to live in Belleville. He sang over C.F.R.B. for some time and was known as the "Wandering Welshman." He was tickled to see us. Hollyhead is on the ocean and there's lots of sailors there with full beards. All we lacked was to go from camp to London and we'd have gone clear across the Isles, just 28 miles. We have three invitations to go there again on leave and as they used us so well, I might. I never was made as welcome any place before and all the people here are friendly. Art went to Chatam with Jack Rogers on his leave.

Well I suppose by the time this letter gets to you, you'll be into the spring's work. I suppose there's lots of mud now. Well I must close as it's dinner time and I wouldn't want to miss the beefsteak and pie. Next Sunday is Easter but I'm afraid I'll have to let the eggs I had this week do for my Easter, but I hope the hens are laying for you and that you all have a happy Easter. I must close now, hoping you are all feeling fine as we are here. Bye bye for now, love.

MYSTERY SURROUNDING HESS' FLIGHT DEEPENS

Bombings In Reich Causing Distress Alleged By Hess

Letter Written By Hess To Duke Of Hamilton Sometime Before Flight Turned Over To Gov't

HESS SEES DUKE

London, May 15 (CP)—The riddle of Rudolf Hess was complicated today when authoritative quarters declined to confirm the Press Association's report that Hess parachuted onto a Scottish moor last Saturday night on a self-constituted mission of peace.

Prime Minister Churchill apparently wants more information from the erstwhile No. 3 Nazi before laying the whole affair before Parliament and public. An extensive Churchill statement had been expected today, but by late afternoon it became certain the Prime Minister had decided to postpone it. When it will come is uncertain.

He is still nursing his ankle fracture at an unidentified military hospital.

Has Full Report

Mr. Churchill is known to have a full report on a meeting in Scotland between Hitler's long-time collaborator and the Duke of Hamilton, an old acquaintance of Hess. The Prime Minister himself may possibly have seen him.

The Duke of Hamilton confronted Hess within 48 hours after he parachuted out of the night seeking the Scottish peer presumably as a hoped-for go-between on the peace plan he is supposed to have carried.

It is understood that the 38-year-old airman-duke met Hess on his way to a military hospital apparently after he received first aid

Tribunals Unravel Tangled Affairs Due To Occupation

Brussels, (via Berlin), May 15 —(AP)—Belgian tribunals, a year after the fall of Belgium, still are busy unravelling civilian affairs tangled in the confusion of May 1940, when 3,000,000 of Belgium's 8,000,000 population fled.

Here is a typical case:

Evidence presented in a court at Uccle showed that a Polish boot dealer fled shortly before the German occupation leaving the keys to his bootshop with a woman friend.

The next morning she opened the shop and displayed a sign:—

"Any boots for five francs".

Bargain hunters stormed the place. But the owner returned unexpectedly. A policeman told him to queue up and wait his turn.

"But I'm the owner of this shop", the Pole declared.

"And I'm Napoleon", the policeman retorted.

A Brussels judge decided the woman who had the keys, backed up by a forged bill of sale for the store and the stock of goods, would have to go to jail for a year, pay a fine and indemnify the Pole 60,000 Francs.

Await Clarification Of Role To Be Played By French Colonies

Washington, May 15 (AP)—The United States, it was learned authoritatively today, has sent two shiploads of badly-needed supplies to French North Africa, but further shipments are being withheld pending clarification of the colonies' role in the event of any closer "collaboration" between the Vichy Government and Germany.

(Diplomatic talks were reported under way here earlier this month, looking to a resumption of normal trade between the United States and Morocco, Algeria and Tunisia.)

While there has been no official statement, it was made clear in informed quarters that if Germany obtains direct or indirect control of the French African colonies, no additional shipments will be made or permitted to pass through British blockade.

Fire In Lumber Yard Causes $1,000,000 Loss

Philadelphia, May 15 (AP)—Philadelphia's most disastrous fire in a decade early today destroyed a block-square Port Richmond Lumber Yard half a dozen neighboring homes, and ate its way into the newly-rehabilitated Cramps Shipyard before being brought under control.

Loss to the lumber yard alone was estimated by firemen at well over $1,000,000.

A physician was killed in a traffic accident while hurrying to the scene. A score of persons—firemen, spectators, and occupants of the burned homes—were injured, but none seriously.

Four hundred firemen were mobilized quickly after the first of the six alarms. The flames leaped a hundred feet into the air.

The fire broke out in the heart of the lumber yard. Its cause was not immediately determined.

For the first time, the communique said, the South African Air Force went into action in Cirensica, May 12. The same night, the communique added, Malta was attacked. Suda Bay, British naval base at Crete, was attacked "continuously" during May 12 and 13 without damage.

HEAVY BOMBERS MAY BE ANSWER

200 Bombers Capable of Flying 3,000 Miles Would Ease Convoy Problem

New York, May 15 (CP)—The New York Times says today in a dispatch from Washington that James V. Forrestal, Under-Secretary of the Navy recently returned from a mission to Britain, had told President Roosevelt Britain's immediate needs are heavy bombers to eliminate the convoy problem, heavy tanks and ships.

The dispatch said it was believed in administration circles that if the United States could send to Britain soon about 200 heavy bombers, capable of flying up to 3,000 miles, these planes "could practically eliminate the threat to vital British shipping from Axis surface raiders and submarines." It added that it is believed in Washington "that at least that many could be sent by the end of the summer."

The Times story added:—

"Mr. Forrestal also was represented in these quarters as having advised the President that the morale of the British people was so high, despite persistent bombings, that there would be a revolution if any British Government tried to negotiate a peace, and that the position of Prime Minister Churchill was stronger than at any time."

S.A. HEADQUARTERS IN LONDON WRECKED.

NAZI AIR RAIDS DAMAGE HISTORIC LONDON SHRINES

Lambeth Palace, Old Bailey, Queen's Hall and St. Clement Danes Church Specifically Mentioned

RELICS DESTROYED

London, May 15—(CP)—Lambeth Palace, St. James' Palace, Queen's Hall, St. Clement Danes Church, the Old Bailey and Salvation Army Headquarters were among historic landmarks or well-known places damaged in recent Nazi air raids on London officials permitted it to be stated today.

The Church of St. Clement Danes, designed by Sir Christopher Wren and built in 1681, in the middle of the Strand, was gutted. It was feared its famous bells may never ring again.

The Old Bailey was damaged for the third time by a high explosive bomb which shattered the Newgate Street end of the famous criminal court. Though the gilded figure of Justice still stands with outstretched arms on the dome, one of its four courts is ruined and the remainder are littered with debris. Two porters inspecting the upper part of the building were killed when the bomb struck.

Famous Queen's [illegible] a for music lovers, was damaged severely and valuable musical instruments of the London Philharmonic Orchestra were destroyed.

Orchestra members arriving to give a concet surveyed the scene of destruction, held a hurried meeting in the street and left their man-

SEN. HUGESSEN HEADS LIBERALS

Succeeds Senator Norman Lambert as National Liberal Association President

Ottawa, May 15.—((CP)—Senator A. K. Hugessen, 49-year-old Montreal barrister who has represented Quebec in the Upper House for four years ,today is acting president of the National Liberal Federation, succeeding Senator Norman Lambert (Lib. Ontario.)

Prime Minister Mackenzie King's office announced last night that Senator Hugessen had acceded to Mr. King's request that he take the office pending the organization's next annual meeting, date of which has not been set.

The official announcement gave no reason for resignation of Senator Lambert, president for nine years, but it was learned the resignation was no recent development. Before the 1940 general election Senator Lambert had indicated to Mr. King that he wished to resign to devote more time to his own interests.

The Federation co-ordinates the work of Provincial Liberal party organizations and Young Liberal Clubs and is responsible for distribution of party literature and other similar work.

In announcing Senator Hugessen's appointment, the Prime Minister's office said it was the intention "At this time of war to confine the Federation's work almost exclusively to a study of economic and social problems".

3 HUDSON PLANTS, ONE G. M. FACTORY OUT ON STRIKE

Stoppage at Flint Takes Place Before Word of Postponement Arrives

CONSIDER DEMANDS

Washington, May 15.—((AP)—R. J. Thomas, president of the United Automobile Workers (C.I.O.), today directed all General Motors Corporation workers who are members of his Union, to return to their jobs on this afternoon's shifts.

Thomas said that the stoppage of work at four Flint, Mich., plants of the corporation had been caused by misunderstanding which resulted from the postponement of the scheduled strike early this morning.

Washington, May 15 (AP)—The United Automobile Workers (C.I.O.) Union called a strike against three Hudson Motor Company plants in Detroit today and General Motors Corporation reported a walkout at its Flint, Mich., Chevrolet works despite agreement to postpone a strike against G. M. until Friday.

The Defence Mediation Board early today, only a few hours before a strike was set for 60 plants of General Motors in 22 states, announced a postponement for one day in the walkout. Congress of Industrial Organizations Union officials said they thought the stoppage at Flint took place because word of the postponement got there too late.

The Hudson walkout applied to three plants, with 8,500 employees, but Union officials said work on a $10,000,000 defence order for airplane parts was not affected.

The Union demanded a 15-cent-an-hour wage increase in unrevealed curret scales at the Hudson Company. The Board of Directors considered the Union demands. Claude E. Bland, President of the local Union, said "the Company refused any decent wage offer."

Robbins made the statement during a House Bank Committee discussion of corporation loans to other farm agencies for purchase of farm crops.

"Some emergency needs of the British have arisen for supplies that could only be met by the surplus marketing agency", Robbins said. "They were placed very promptly and were sent to ports.

"Reimbursement will come from lease-lend funds in case the British will not be able to pay out of their ordinary dollar exchange".

TORPEDO-PLANE SINKS CONVOYED SUPPLY VESSEL

Attack Carried Out In Daylight And Plane Escapes Unscathed

BAD FLYING WEATHER

London, May 15 —(CP)— Attacking an escorted German convoy off the Netherlands coast in broad daylight yesterday, a British torpedo-carrying plane sank a supply vessel and slipped away unscathed, authoritative sources said today.

Bad flying weather gave the British Isles a respite from Nazi bombing during the night. The Royal Air Force also was inactive during the night.

The Air Ministry news service said the ship sank off the Netherlands, a 3,000 tonner, was one of a convoy of seven vessels which opened fire on the plane when it moved within range.

The pilot released the torpedo and the navigator hurried to the observation cabin "to see a large column of smoke rising through the mist where a 5,000-ton ship had been," the service said.

For the first time in six weeks the Air Ministry issued a "there is nothing to report" communique.

Eden Claims Vichy Granted Transit Rights To Germany

London Source Says German Planes Will Be Bombed In Syria

PAPEN VISITS TURKEY

London, May 15 (CP)—Germany has moved into Iraq by way of French-mandated Syria, using Syrian airfields for stopovers, the British government announced today.

The scope of the infiltration was not known but a British Middle East headquarters announcement said the German planes answered 'an urgent appeal by Rashid Ali Gailani to his Axis partners" and bore "propaganda agitators and other similar Axis specialists" to Iraq.

Despite the German move the communique said "the situation in the Basra and Habbaniyah areas remains quiet." Most of the Iraq-British fighting has been at Habbaniyah where the Royal Air Force has an airfield.

At the same time the prospect of the French mandate's involvement in the struggle over Iraq was read into a declaration by Foreign Secretary Eden that "full authority" had been given to British forces to attack German planes in Syria.

Clear Breach of Agreement

Mr. Eden declared that the transit of German planes through Syria was a 'clear breach" of the armistice agreement between Germany and France.

Iraq scene of sporadic guerilla fighting between native rebel troops and British forces since May 2 is one of the world's richest oil producers and a possible back door route to the Suez Canal.

A Reuters News Agency dispatch from Cairo quoted a "well informed traveller" as saying that two Axis military missions had arrived in Baghdad Iraq capital a few days ago after flying over Syrian territory.

A "high German personage" was reported at Beirut, Lebanon, in conversation with the Italian Armistice Commission and French authorities.

Reuters said the Iraq-bound German planes using Syrian air fields has disquised markings.

BEVIN BELIEVES HITLER KNEW ALL ABOUT HESS PLAN

'From My Point Of View Herr Hess Is a Murderer' Says Labor Minister

HIS PERSONAL VIEW

London, May 15.—(CP)—Labor Minister Ernest Bevin declared today his belief that Rudolf Hess flew to Scotland with the full knowledge of Hitler.

"From my point of view", said the Minister, "Herr Hess is a murderer".

He added that he was not going to be "deceived" by the flight which he called the sort of stunt he had seen tried over and over again "by totalitarian gentlemen and communists".

Mr. Bevin called Hess "No man I would ever negotiate with" and said "I do not believe that Hitler did not know Hess was coming to England".

"For a good many years I have had to deal with these totalitarian gentlemen and communists and I have seen this kind of stunt over and over again," Mr. Bevin asserted.

Not Going to Be Deceived

"I am not going to be deceived by any of them.

Amateur Cook On Corvette Turns Out Delicacies That Please Crew

(Foster Barclay has just completed a long voyage aboard a Canadian-built corvette in the North Atlantic, sharing with the crew the dangers of wartime life at sea. In this article he tells something of the life and work of Canadians serving aboard these sturdy ships.)

By FOSTER BARCLAY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Aboard a Royal Navy Corvette in North Atlantic, May 15—(CP)—Canadian sailors aboard this corvette have stopped complaining about lack of delicacies while at sea because a pastry "expert" now has charge of the galley. They're getting all the "dainties" they crave.

The "expert," 21-year-old Ken Hollefriend of Kitchener, Ont., was attached to the vessel as cook's helper, but when the ship sailed with the Royal Navy he was promoted to replace the regular cook who was sick.

Ken's work was not at first appreciated, particularly on the second day at sea when he battered together luscious-looking slices of apple pie which met with disapproval.

"The pastry was tough as shoe-leather," complained Leading Seaman Frank Stinson of Kingston, who summed up the crew's reaction.

Undaunted and absorbing good-natured jibes, Ken promised something "really nice and tasty." The sailors agreed that the raisin pie he made two days later was something to boast about.

"Best hunk of pie I've had since I joined up," chortled Johnny Bain of Toronto as he smacked his lips.

"I'll bet the army doesn't get treats like this," chirped Frank LeBlanc of Montreal.

"We want more," chanted Chuck Runacres of Hamilton.

Ken didn't say anything, but winked at his helper, Don Banks, of Toronto, who hadn't even boiled water or fried eggs before joining the navy. Now he's quite an expert—at least at peeling potatoes and preparing bacon and beans.

The pair don't spend all their time in the galley because they have to man action stations like everyone else on the ship. When the warning sounds Banks rips off a splotched apron and climbs the stick to the crow's nest. Hollefriend exchanged his cook's cap for a tin helmet and races to his post beside a depth charge.

200,000 Pelts Taken By Trappers On Muskrat Preserve In Manitoba

By R. K. CARNEGIE

Ottawa, May 15 (CP)—The muskrat harvest on the 135,000-acre Summerberry Game Preserve near The Pas, Man., has been completed and 200,000 pelts are on their way to Winnipeg for the fur auction this month.

It took 700 trappers, mostly Indians and half-breeds, to gather the harvest in four weeks and each trapper finds he has earned more than $300. The trappers were divided into groups of seven each led by a head trapper who will get $385. The money will be paid the trappers during the next year in equal monthly payments so each trapper will get $25 or more a month.

This big rat farm is a joint undertaking of the Dominion and Manitoba Governments with the greater interest and most of the administration in the hands of the provincial officials.

Resources Minister Crerar, whose department has charge of the Dominion's end of the venture, is expected to give the House of Commons a full review of the developments. Two more rat farms will be brought into production in the same area in a year or two, the Twin Island rat development project comprising 160,000 acres and the Connelly Lake area of 100,000 acres.

An extensive program of decoration, painting, general cleaning up and landscaping will be done to make the camp as attractive as possible. The usual facilities such as hot water, cooking utensils and stoves will be available to tourists.

Five soldiers of the C.A.S.F. in convoy from Camp Borden to an Eastern Canadian training camp, narrowly escaped serious injury when the automobile in which they were riding was struck by a passing motor car driven by H. J. Cordy, of Sulphide, Motorcycle Patrolman H. McKellar reported today.

The collision, which occurred three miles east of Shannonville late Wednesday, resulted in considerable fender and body damage to the car driven by Cordy and the vehicle carrying the soldiers, driven by Allan Mahew, of Pembroke. Mahew was proceeding easterly in the line of traffic and with a military convoy, while Cordy was coming west and is alleged by the officer to have sideswiped Mahew's car. No personal injuries resulted, however.

CITY ASSESSMENT EXPECTED TO INCREASE $150,000 THIS YEAR

Satisfactory progress, due in no small part to the fine co-operation being given by residents of the city, in the compilation of city assessment is being made, City Comptroller Harold Bateman stated today.

The work of assessing city properties, which is being done by the comptroller with the assistance of Miss Catharine Williamson, was started on May 1st, and is expected to be finished by the end of August.

Argyll Chapt. I. O. D. E. To Hold Tag Day Next Saturday

To maintain their wartime policy of keeping a steady flow of money, material and supplies to various war organizations, members of the Argyll Chapter, Imperial Order of the Daughters of the Empire, are holding a Tag Day here on Saturday, May 17th.

Long known as one of the most energetic women's organizations in the city, The Argyll Chapter, has covered a wide field in its efforts to raise funds to furnish supplies and comforts for not only the "boys" overseas and in Canada, but war-victims, refugees, the Red Cross and other well-known organizations.

The success of former Tag days, officials of the Chapter believe, is an evidence of the faith in their efforts, by the public in general. They feel that on Saturday, as heretofore, the residents of the city and district will again support them in a cause that is vital to the Empire's needs.

POLICE COURT

Magistrate E. J. Butler, K.C., was quite indignant when he was presented with a letter of indignation received by the court from High McCracken, Ottawa, in today's police court. McCracken had been charged with speeding by Motorcycle Patrolman J. H. Hatch and enclosed a money order for $4.50 admitting his guilt, when the fine and costs really amounted to $7.50.

McCracken's letter was "rather insolent and surly" as His Worhip termed it, as the writer made inferences regarding "the town of Belleville exacting fines when the government was seeking money for war efforts."

"We are not paying Mr. McCracken's war debts. Enlarge this case for one week and summons this man to appear in court in order that we may ascertain his feelings," ordered Magistrate Butler after reading the letter tendered by Assistant Crown Attorney S. Gordon Robertson.

Seven Traffic Cases

Today's court consisted entirely of traffic cases, there being seven heard.

Although she failed to answer to her name when called in court, Bertha Brady, Hoard's Station, was convicted of driving a motor car without a driver's licence. Motorcycle Patrolman Hatch testified he had stopped the accused woman while driving on Highway No. 2 on April 29th last, at which time she admitted not being in possession of a driving licence. A fine of $10.00 and costs was imposed with a 15 day jail sentence added in the event of default thereof.

John McGuire, Belleville, paid $5.00 and costs for careless driving and L. Dobberman, R.C.A.F., was assessed the same amount after pleading guilty to a charge of failing to produce his driver's permit. Sergt.-Pilot Harold Pitt, R.C.A.F., was fined "ten and costs" after being convicted on a charge of driving a motor car without due care and attention and without reasonable consideration for others. Samuel Fingold, Mount Forest, found it costs $5.00 and costs if convicted of unlawfully passing another vehicle in the face of oncoming traffic.

Conditions For Maximum Rental

According to official instructions issued to Rentals Administrators, the maximum rental at which housing accommodation may be rented or offered for rent shall be as follows: Clause (a)—For any housing accommodation for which there was a lease in effect on January 2nd, 1941, the rental charged or demanded shall not exceed that in effect on that date. Clause (b)—For any housing accommodation for which there was no lease in effect on January 2nd, 1941, but for which there was a lease in effect at some times during 1940, the rental charged or demanded shall not exceed that payable under the latest lease in 1940. Clause (c)—For any other housing accommodations (new houses—houses occupied by owner, then leased) the Rentals Administrator of his own motion, or on application in writing by either landlord or tenant may determine the maximum rental.

In addition, the Rentals Administrator, in his discretion, of his own motion or on such application in writing by either landlord or tenant, may vary in respect of any specified housing accommodation, the maximum rental fixed under Clauses A. and B. above.

Special Circumstances May Be Considered

No application, it is pointed out, for a variation of the maximum rental fixed by, or under, the provisions of any order of the Board shall be considered unless the variation applied for is by reason of one or more of the following special circumstances affecting the particular housing accommodation to which such maximum rental applies:—

(a) A substantial change, since the basic date (Jan. 2nd), in the taxes on real property, in mortgage interest rates, in insurance premiums, or in the costs of services payable by the landlord;

(b) A substantial change, since the basic date, in the cost of heating, if the landlord supplies heat;

(c) A substantial expenditure, since the basic date, upon a structural alteration or addition, or upon an improvement;

(d) A substantial increase, since the basic date, in wear and tear, for which the tenant is responsible;

(e) A substantial difference between the rental in effect on the basic date and the rental generally prevailing on the basic date for similar housing accommodations in similar localities of the particular municipality; provided that, in an application under this clause for an increased maximum rental, it is shown that such difference is due to the fact that rental in effect on the basic date was a concession of an exceptional nature to the tenant in occupation on that date.

(f) A mutual written agreement between landlord and tenant entered into heretofore by reason of the existence of one or more of the circumstances referred to in the above clauses.

In respect of applications to increase maximum rentals owing to special circumstances already enumerated, no such applications received after June 30, 1941 by the local Rental Committee will be considered except in respect of special circumstances arising after June 30, 1941.

Tenant May Recover Sums Paid Over Maximum Rentals

Any sum paid as rental on or after May 1st, 1941 in excess of maximum rental as fixed or determined under the procedure laid down, may be recoverable by the tenant. Various orders provide for the necessary procedure to be taken in order to bring the matter before the local committee.

Mr. J. D. O'Flynn, clerk of the Hastings County Court, has in his office in the Court House here, the various orders of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board. Forms and full information as to the procedure to be taken, may be obtained there.

An important order, Number 37, which has to do with termination of leases and right of renewal, times at which they must be applied for, and procedure to be followed are also available there.

Sudden Lowering Of Water In Trent R. Destroys Many Fish

The sudden lowering of water levels in the Trent River during the spawning season is slowly but surely destroying the fish in these waters, according to a news report in the Campbellford Herald. It is urged by this paper that some drastic steps should be taken at once by those who have the interests of fish conservation at heart, to have this situation corrected. This must be done if it is to prevent the destruction of valuable fishing grounds, it is stated.

Hydro employees of the Trent Valley system have in several instances discovered dead pickerel, averaging about six inches in length, lying in small depressions in the river, from which the water has left. Hundreds of fish were known to be dead, but the men were able to release many still alive. This was caused by the sudden lowering of the water, leaving the fish high and dry.

WARNING AGAINST MAILING CIGARETTE LIGHTER FLUID

Despite the recent caution given against including inflammable substances in the mails, Hon. William P. Mulock, K.C., Postmaster General, states that this dangerous and illegal practice is still continuing.

Although the Canadian Postal Corps authorities report that the recent warning against enclosing matches in soldiers' parcels has evidently had the desired effect, cigarette lighter fluid is still being mailed in considerable quantities, and on one single day this month, eight tins which had been listed on the accompanying Customs Declaration forms, were removed from parcels at the Base Post Office, Ottawa.

The Public are advised that cigarette-lighter fluid must not be sent through the mails. The danger of doing so, especially under war time conditions must be apparent, for should this substance ignite it might cause great loss to the mails or postal premises, and if in transit, to the mail train or the ship; as well as injury to postal employees. Some weeks ago attention was directed to the fire hazard caused by matches which ignited in a parcel already sorted into a mail bag at the Base Post Office.

Postal Regulations prohibit the mailing of any inflammable, explosive, dangerous or destructive substance or liquid, or any matter, etc. likely to injure any letter or other mailable matter, or the person of any officer or servant of the Post Office. Public co-operation is solicited in helping the Canadian Postal Corps safeguard the mails.

ON ETHIOPIAN THRONE

Emperor Haile Selassie is on his throne again in Addis Ababa.

Five years ago Italy was fighting along with the boaster Mussolini in the preliminary to the present war. Italy looked fairly strong because she was fighting a race which had no mechanization and did not know militarism or modern means of defence. But today that is all changed. Italy is all but out as an ally of any importance to the enemy. Britain's war in the Mediterranean and the war which Italy forced on Greece shattered Mussolini's dreams of glory. Let the Italians look and they see signs even now of Hun domination of Italy, a logical consequence of alliance with the sinister Nazi state.

Emperor Halle Seiassie has been a devoted ally of Britain and he has received his reward for his courage in battling the Italian invaders. The Emperor in his turn will continue to help Britain in her war of liberation of stricken lands from the blight of the Germans and the Italians.

The man whom the bluffer Mussolini ejected has the honor of not only being true to the spirit of freedom but also of making his contribution to the clearing of Europe from the poison of Fascism and Nazism. This old nation of Ethiopia is but young in the ways of the modern world and it is a distinct honor she will have of associating with Britain in this task.

A BOY'S OPPORTUNITY

It was disclosed this week that a thirteen year old boy, Robert D. Scott, discovered near Bear Mountain, N.Y., in a centuries-old cliff shelter, rare specimens of Algonquin pottery, arrowheads and fishing eqipment which show beyond dispute that the Algonquins preceded the Iroquois as inhabitants of the Hudson River basin. That is a scientific find of importance.

This boy is a student of nature, wild life and archeology in his own right. He is the first white ever to set foot in the shelter, which held the treasure which dates from before the coming of Columbus. His discovery reads like a romance. Scott and another boy were walking along the Hudson and the former saw a small opening almost hidden by boulders about ten feet above the water level in the steep cliff that overhangs the river. With a boy's and student's curiosity he investigated and wormed his way through the opening and dropping four or five feet found himself in what he recognized as an old Indian shelter used by the ancient inhabitants when on fishing expeditions. Scattered on the floor were fragments of Indian pottery and other relics.

This boy with the keen eye and the spirit of adventure had been for several years almost daily companion of an archeologist of the museum nearby on his explorations and at once knew the value of the find.

The shelter entrance was widened to permit adults to enter. The original opening had been six feet wide, having been lost sight of in an earthquake centuries ago which all but closed the cave by flinging three massive boulders across the entrance.

Such an event is just what fits into the boy's notion of adventure. To have made the discovery was possible only because he was mentally prepared. Had not young Scott known the importance of such he might have passed by and so missed a great opportunity to be the first to prove something of real value in the prehistoric life of that section.

TROOPS AT GARDENING

It will be an inspiration to Canadians at home to do more work in their gardens to know that overseas Canadian troops have turned to gardening, in an army-back-to-the-land movement, the men becoming part-time gardeners to help increase the food production of Britain.

Canadians should make good gardeners "over there" for in Canada where land is associated with almost every house and where there is a lawn in front of the lot and a garden or a place for a garden at the rear, the Canadian boy should have some knowledge of vegetable growing and be able to lend his co-operation to the British people to defeat the Hun shipping menace.

OURSELVES AND OTHERS...

BY

BEAUTY AND THE BEASTS

While the Arch-Wolf may have intervened in Frau Goebbels request for a divorce from his club-footed propagandist minister, Hitler could not suppress the buzz of scandal that swept over Berlin following Goebbels attempt at conquest of the popular German film star, Lyda Barova, wife of Germany's popular matinee idol and film actor, Gustav Froelich.

Froelich heard of the lustful advances made by Goebbels to his wife, and that they were the talk of the town. Gustav discovered the Nazi rat in his apartment one night and what actually followed will never be known. However, Goebbels emerged with several teeth missing, his repulsive countenance made more repulsive by the addition of a pair of "shiners," his body bruised and his dignity ruffled. Goebbels spent a few weeks in a clinic more to hide from the public eye than to recover from injuries.

But even that lesson did not effect his taste for beautiful women especially those of the actress type. Lesser lights than Lyda Barova have since commanded his attention, and woe betide the chorus girl who dares refuse his advances.

The blimp-like Goering is torn between his love for a dead and a living woman. Infatuated with a wealthy beautiful Swedish girl after he was demobilized from the German Air Force after the last war, he married her in what has since been believed to be a case of true love. But Karin Von Kantzow, his bride, never lived to see her husband accumulate rolls of fat about his middle; or high Nazi honors. She died before he became totally saturated with Hitlerism.

Goering was heartbroken. He built an impressive mausoleum in his summer retreat which he called "Karinhall" after her. The retreat has since been the scene of many historic meetings between the Number 2 Nazi and foreign representatives.

But the bemedalled Nazi did not remain in single bliss for long. Through what is known here and in the United States as "pull" the overweight, untalented actress, Emmy Sonneman, was brought to Berlin and given a contract for parts in the Berlin State Theatre. She had about as much ability as a goldfish and she steadily put on weight. Berlin theatre-goers, and the house-manager in particular, heaved huge sighs of relief when Goering eventually married her and installed her as mistress of Karinhall.

While outwardly their life appears to be a happy one, rumors persist that the shadow of Karin Von Kantzow hovers in the background. And Emmy has lost none of her alleged dramatic ability, in fact she is developing into a much finer actress in real life than she was in the land of make-believe. For she brandishes new diamond tiaras every week and exhibits huge quantities of jewels to the gasping eyes of hungry and impoverished German women.

Other German women have tried to shine in the glare of publicity, Frau Von Ribbentrop, wife of the former Ottawa banker, is said to be even more tactless than her Hitler-fawning husband. While he was German Ambassador to London she attempted to dabble in politics and diplomacy and at times even tried not only to tell her husband what to do, but also British statesmen.

Her successor in London, Frau Dirksen, was not much better. Recently Lady Rhys Williams, daughter of the famous author, Elinor Glyn, related how Frau Dirksen wanted to recruit her as a Fifth Columnist, pressing her to admit that "Wales was seething with revolt." She tried these tricks on many other people, without success.

And London has not forgotten Hitler's "dear friend" as he called her, Princess Stephanie Hohenlohe, who was peacemaker all over the world for his secret emissary, Captain Wiedmann. Recently the United States withdrew her permit to stay in that country.

"We Go To Bed Hopeful And Wake Up Thankful, —Ain't Life Grand"

Relative of Fred Hart, District Inspector Weights and Measures Here, Writes Cheerful Letter of Conditions in England—Appreciates What Canada is Sending Overseas for War Victims

"Well, we are still O.K., happy and chins up and full of hope and determination.

"At the moment Adolph is trying to scare us again with his bombing, there is a lovely moon to light him on his way, the 'alert' has gone each night for the last two nights and we've heard old 'nasty' zooming overhead, some poor souls got it. It sure is a nasty feeling when they pass over, that they are loaded with bombs and everybody is going to get the full effect of them, aged folks, invalids and wee kiddies. Then we hear them come back and wonder what hellish disaster they have wrought. They generally pass this way when the Midlands are bombed. So when you hear that the Midlands have got it, you'll know they passed over our way. When London 'gets it' we can see the flashes of bombs and anti-aircraft in the sky.

"As I walked down our avenue this afternoon there were three explosions not far away. I presume they were delayed action bombs from last night. I couldn't help laughing. I was walking with a friend when the first bomb exploded and a dog which was walking up the road just took to his heels and really 'flew' past us as if he'd a firework tied to his tail. We have to look at the funny side and shut out the tragedy as much as possible. So far we have been fortunate here, so we do all we can to help the less fortunate. We have taken in 75,000 people from bombed areas and housed them here and organized feeding and entertainment for them. When I tell you that the pre-war population was 100,000 and now is nearly doubled, you will see that there has been the need of a great deal of organizing here. However, everything seems to be going well. The main thing is the difficulty of adjusting the food problem. Naturally, for a while, we hadn't sufficient food in the town to cope with the increased demand, but now we are getting our fair share.

Plenty of Humour

"Anyone with a sense of humour can get a good deal of amusement out of shopping these days and most of us over here have plenty of humour. Can you imagine a fruit shop with no oranges, no bananas, in fact the only fruit one can get are one or two apples, but we've got used to the idea and don't bother. The kiddies are eating carrots instead and the doctors say they are awfully good for them.

"We have an increased ration of butter as from this week, 4 ozs. per person per week instead of 2 oz. so that will be fine. Eggs are rather difficult but we shall soon have more now the summer is coming on and then everything will be o.k.

"Yes, I think silk stockings will be an unknown thing soon. I went into town this afternoon and there were hardly any in the shops. They are being replaced by lisle hose. Thanks awfully for offering to send me some. Yes, I believe one would have to pay duty on new goods, the only thing is, you'd better send along your old ones, they would be o.k. I shall certainly miss silk stockings, as lisle ones seem to lose their shape so, and I have such thin anckles that they hang around a bit 'baggy.' Still, we could have worse worries than that, couldn't we? I'll paint my legs, if necessary. I have quite a few pairs of shoes. I hear there will be no more high heeled shoes made. Knitting wool is scarce too, it is being used for the troops you see.

Now, enough of what we can't get — here's what we have got. Plenty of excitement, plenty of grand fellows in the forces, plenty of good comradeship and plenty of work to be done, so what the heck have we to grouse about, and gee think of the thrill we'll get when we've won this war and give such plucky folk as the Poles, etc., their country and their freedom again. We've got a warrant officer at the office who says when we divide up the world again after we've won the war, he's going to have the Isle of Capri for his little place. Going to do himself well, isn't he?

Winston, a Great Man

"Yes, Winston is a great man and just the one for the job—the real British bulldog—and doesn't Adolf hate him, but does Winston worry? Harry was waiting at a barrier to have his pass examined with a couple of other R.A.F. lads when a car came to a halt by them and who should be in the car but Winston. Harry and the boys came to a smart salute and Harry said that Mr. Churchill gave them a return salute and such a saucy smile from behind his cigar.

"Do you listen to Sandy McPherson broadcasting to Canada? I always enjoy listening to his program. A girl friend of mine is going to speak over the radio to her brother in Egypt. It must be a thrill to hear a voice from so far away, although I think that I would be so deeply touched that I should want to weep.

"What did you think of the pluck of the lads who landed on the Norwegian Islands, set the oil tanks alight and took off some Norwegians and some prisoners. Great stuff, these lads, eh?

"'Twas 8.10 last evening and the 'alert' wailed forth—Moaning Minnie we call the siren—and I had to down pen and up telephone and do my stuff. The wardens started reporting for duty and I had to enter their names and times of reporting in the log book. They then go off in pairs to patrol their allotted sectors in case any incendiaries or high explosives drop—they are then on the spot to report on the happenings—also we can render any first aid necessary until the arrival of the ambulances. We haven't had any big real test yet, but believe me, the wardens, A.F.S. and rescue parties have done some marvellous work in parts of London and other cities which have had a blitz. Curiously enough, the civil defence have been in the front line more than the soldiers, at present.

"Ain't Life Grand"

"Well, to get back to my duty last evening, I handed over the post to the post wardens and went on patrol—and believe me, we had four different 'alerts' during the night. The 'all clear' would go and then over would come the Jerry planes and on would go 'Moaning Minnie' again. There were plenty of bangs and bumps around. But we are still here today. We always go to bed hopeful and wake up thankful over here. Ain't life grand!

"Well done, Peterborough, Ont., for your splendid effort in the County Chest Fund. We do appreciate all this help an awful lot. It was announced over the radio that Peterborough, Canada, had made a grand effort in this fight for freedom.

"We had a 'War Weapons Week' here and endeavoured to save enough for a battleship and believe me, we got enough for two, so we were pleased with ourselves. With part of the money we bought one of the destroyers from America.

"My brother pops home occasionally. He's got a pretty rotten job at times. Driving all over England and Wales with all kinds of necessities, guns, etc., for the troops. Sometimes he and his mate are driving day and night—one has a sleep while the other drives on—and believe me, it is no joke driving in the black-out with dimmed lights. On one occasion on his way through London at night there was a lorry in front of him which managed to get across a cross-road before the traffic lights changed—but Reg. had to pull up—the lorry which got across the road was hit by a bomb and the driver killed—so Reg thought his luck was in. At another time he was driving and a German plane swooped down and started machine gunning. Reg and his mate hopped off the lorry and got underneath it—and so they are both still here! I could tell you of heaps of such incidents, but won't do so, in case this should get into enemy hands on the way across.

London Still O.K.

"One thing I would like to tell you—don't be led to understand that London is nearly wiped out—there are patches which are badly hit, but one can go on a bus for miles and see no sign of damage at all. The poorer classes seem to have the worst of it—in the East End. Coventry has had the worst of all and even then it was the residential area which suffered and their historical cathedral.

"Should you or your friends feel inclined at any time to send over any clothing they have finished wish, for the homeless mothers and children and you care to send them to me, I'll see that they are distributed among the most deserving cases—and believe me, there are some very needy cases. The majority only came with what they were wearing. The mother and the kiddies I have taken in had noyl time to put a few odds and ends in a bag and rushed from their house when the bombs fell in their street. I've turned out what I could for them—also I've a friend, a school teacher, who is one of the women in charge of the Rest Centre [illegible] mothers and children bombed out of their homes.

There goes the sirens again—so I must report for duty.

Just Spite

"Wednesday night:—I will try to finish this letter now. Did we have a hectic night last night. Hun planes zooming over all night long, and as there were low clouds the planes seemed to skim the chimneys at times. Some bombs were dropped at the country village of Burghfield about five miles from here. Quite needless and no excuse for it. The 'Alert' has just gone again—but I am not on duty tonight—I'm on every other night—the odd dates in the month 1st, 3rd, 5th etc. And fancy the 'blighter' bombing Buckingham Palace again—and that's no military objective, is it? It's just spite. I think our Royal Family are wonderful to stay there. Have you heard the song 'The King is Still in London'—it's very good. Also, the latest is—'London will rise again'.

"Well, thing I've run out of news now. So cheerio for the present—I'll write again soon—and please thank all the folk over there for their help in every way—and tell them the things they send for the bombed families are all very much appreciated and needed, and we have some wonderful organizations which distribute the goods to the needy".

Showdown Expected Between Russia, U. S.

Washington, May 14—(AP)—A show down in the uncertain relations between the United States and Soviet Russia was believed imminent today as an afternoon conference was arranged for State Secretary Hull and the Soviet Ambassador, Constantine Oumansky—their first in more than a year.

Both American and Russian circles were silent as to the purpose and significance of Oumansky's call on Hull, scheduled for 4.30 p.m. EST. That it was important for the future of Russo-American relations was taken for granted in well-informed quarters.

Oumansky has conferred frequently in recent months with Sumner Welles, Under-Secretary of State, primarily in connection with Russian purchases of machinery and other products in this country.

A gradual tightening of export restrictions on most materials sought by Russia has led recently to a virtual suspension of Soviet buying in the United States.

British Columbia produced 3.7 billion board feet of lumber last year, an all time high record, ten per cent greater than the previous record set in 1939.

A FOWL DRINK

Cocktails are being drunk in Berlin under a German name because zealous Nazis object to the use of English words.

Nobody knows for sure how the word cocktail in the sense of a mixed drink originated, although many fantastic stories to account for the term have been published.

Literally "cocktail" means a tail like that of a cock or a tail that cocks up.

The devil's coachhorse, a beetle that cocks up the posterior end of its body when excited, is popularly called a cocktail.

Cocktail is also the name of a horse with its tail docked.

Even a kind of cirrus cloud is known as a cocktail.

It is believed that the cocktail in the sense of a mixed drink originated in America about the time of the Revolution.

In his "Knickerbocker's History of New York," published in 1809, Washington Irving wrote:

"They lay claim to be the first inventors of those recondite beverages, cocktail, stone-fence and sherry-cobbler."

More than 80 years go John R. Bartlett, in his "Dictionary of Americanisms," defined cocktail as "a stimulating beverage, made of brandy or gin, mixed with sugar and a very little water."

According to one story, cocktail is a corruption of the Aztec Indian word "octel," one of the Mexican names of the liquor generally known as pulque.

Another story has it that a New York bartender, in the time of the Revolution, accidentally invented the cocktail by pouring the dregs of his various bottles into a slop jar.

Still another account traces the slang term to the cockpit. Spectators at cockfights, it is said, used to toast the cock with the most feathers left in his tail after the fight, and the number of ingredients in the drink equalled the number of feathers in the winning fowl's tail.

The modern cocktail may be a very simple or an elaborate mixed drink and preparing the beverage is regarded as an art in certain quarters.

Application of the term cocktail to appetizers of chilled fruits, fruit juices and sea foods served with sauces is of more recent origin.

Nowadays the number of beverages and foods to which the term cocktail is applied runs into the hundreds.

Bridge was played during the earlier part of the evening, and in place of the customary prizes, a donation was made to a charitable fund. The guest of honor was presented with many beautiful and useful gifts for which she graciously thanked her friends. Dainty refreshments were served, the tea table making a lovely picture with its decorative scheme of pink and white, and large white bell. The hostesses were assisted in serving by Mrs. I. E. As this was the grandmother's meeting each grandmother present was asked to make a few remarks on being a grandmother.

It was decided to send $20.00 to the British War Victims' Fund. Collection taken amounted to $2.15. The meeting closed by singing God Save the King. The hostess, assisted by several ladies served a delicious lunch and a social time was enjoyed by all.

SURPRISING and unusual developments in all business and private relations are probable on this day judging by the exciting planetary figures. Matters of entirely strange, curious and unexpected aspect may descend with whirlwind and sweeping force to reorient the life and its affairs with unpredictable and perhaps unprecedented denouements. There may be sudden uprooting from old environs and interests, with happy fulfillments more romantic than commonplace. In fact the romantic interest may reach a sensational or public interest but not without certain disagreeable features. Be alert to subtle entanglements.

Those whose birthday it is may anticipate a year of unusual, spectacular and surprising events which may literally sweep them off their feet with breathtaking swiftness and precipitancy. It is difficult to predict the nature of this sudden visitation, but good fortune far-reaching benefits joys, adventure and romance should result. Thrills and dramatic denouements may sweep them into the public eye. Use discretion in public dealings.

A child born on this day should have talents and traits of character which may lift it into the realm of high adventure and romance, with public acclaim. It will be highly intellectual and original as well as charming, magnetic and of an unusually intriguing personality.

Medicinal Herbs

By LOGAN CLENDENING M.D.

Long years ago in the homes of our ancestors in their more or less scanty libraries, one book was almost certain to be there. It was a book describing the plants which had medicinal properties. These were called herbals and they have now become, in many instances, the object of treasured collection by book collectors of all kinds, particularly in the history of medicine. One—Gerarde's Herbal —is often praised as an example of sixteenth century English prose and will be found mentioned in most histories of English literature.

It is easy to see why in primitive days these books were treasured. I am speaking now of two or three hundred years ago when most of our ancestors lived in the country and wild plants that they found were regarded as objects of reverence and awe. Many superstitions grew up around them, as around the mandrake. They were, of course, useful, but this depended on a considerable knowledge of their qualities. In all primitive countries herbals are found, even among the Aztec Indians.

In an old Chinese herbal, dated about 1289, there is the first representation we have of the banana plant. The Chinese used the banana for many purposes, which were strictly medicinal and not dietetic. Curiously enough, they used it in all states of depletion and in convalescence from long illnesses, and although they did not know it, the properties of the banana are very well adapted for these purposes. In all such conditions, no matter what the cause, a high calorie, high vitamin diet is indicated, and this must also include food that is easy to digest. Bananas, when fully ripe, meet all these requirements. They are very nutritious and their palatability, for one reason, makes them very digestible.

As far as vitamin content is concerned, there are vitamins A, B1, C and G to a considerable extent in bananas.

Loss of Voice

What is the reason for a man's occasionally suffering from complete or partial loss of voice for days and weeks at a time?

I don't know whether my correspondent wants me to express an opinion about Mr. Ace, or not. Sudden complete loss of voice which lasts for days or weeks and then as suddenly returns, raises a strong suspicion of its being hysteria—hysterical paralysis of the vocal cords. Mr. Ace's domestic difficulties indicate to me that this is exactly the cause in his case.

Both the loss of the voice and its return are the result of emotional shock in hysterical paralysis.

Treatment is entirely by psychological methods.

Questions and Answers

M.A.H.—"Is a hernia in a small child dangerous? My little girl is one year old and has a hernia on her navel, which causes it to swell up and get hard and blue when she cries. She is just beginning to walk and when she stands it protrudes considerably."

Answer—Small hernias in the navel are very common and usually close up without any special treatment. The way you describe the present case, it seems to me it is a rather severe and advanced type and it might require surgery. It is well, however, to wait until a little later when the muscles are more mature, at which time the chances of permanent relief are better. However, I would advise you to take the advice of a surgeon.

DR. DAFOE'S COLUMN on the Quintuplets and the Care of Your Children

Which Eye You Use Most Found Important Factor In Your Life

It may be surprising that at this late date, important new facts are still being learned about what is probably the most used of man's senses, sight, but such is the case. For example, that whether an individual is "right-eyed" or "left-eyed" can be of great importance in his whole life.

Most persons in using their eyes favor one or the other, and "right-eyed" simply means that eye is used most in vision. Why it makes a big difference whether you're "right-eyed" or "left-eyed" is indicated by tests conducted by Dr. H. R. Crosland at University of Oregon. These showed that being "right-eed" makes reading easier—"right-eyed makes reading easier — so much that being "left-eyed" largely accounts for many persons, particularly children, being defective readers.

Remembering how often defective reading has made a child a poor student and perhaps a "problem child," it can be seen how this tendency can start being an influence early in life.

What makes a person right-eyed or left-eyed? Probably hereditary factors to some extent, and certainly eye defects that develop in one way or another in early life, as a result of neglect of cataracts, infections, etc.

Eye cataracts are nearly always associated with old age, but we find them sometimes in children. In fact, babies are sometimes born with them.

In the cases of children they often are neglected because the child may not realize until an acute stage that there is anything wrong with his eyes, so gradual is his vision cut down.

When a cataract begins to form, the pupil of the eye, which normally is black, takes on a grayish hue. This grayish growth prevents the light from passing through the pupil to the retina. Any unusual coloring of the retina of an eye ought to be examined at once by an expert because a change in color is often a symptom of tumors or other eye abnormalities.

Excessively red eyes in children are a warning sign of the condition commonly called conjunctivitis, which occurs when the conjunctiva or delicate membrance covering the eyeball and the inside of the eyelids becomes inflamed.

There are many causes for this inflammation of the conjunctiva, such as exposure to wind or dust, foreign bodies in the air, excessive light, eyestrain and infection.

Some infections of the conjunctiva are serious, some clear up within a few days. When serious they may lead to loss of sight unless skillfully treated. These infections can be transmitted from one child to another, and one may be more susceptible than another. It's wise for a child to use only his own towel. I remember that we had an old-fashioned roller towel where I went to school. An eye infection struck the school and it went right through it with scarcely missing a single person.

Heredity, diseases and reading habits are by no means all factors influencing the child's or the adult's eyesight. We are still learning a lot about the relationship of diet to good vision. We have found, for example, that both vitamin A and B are important in the development and functioning of the eye.

Training a Child Maid Has Spoiled

By Garry Cleveland Myers, Ph.D.

Hundreds of American mothers who can afford to have domestic help might have written the following about a 19-month-old child.

"Because he was our first child and because we had domestic help, in my ignorance I spent and am still spending every waking moment with him. Now when I attempt to leave him in a room by himself he cries, and since it is impossible to interest him in a toy before I leave the room or to persuade him to stay of his own accord, he consequently follows me. He doesn't mind in the least when I leave the house entirely, and the maid advises me that he is usually a much better boy than when I am at home! Any of the few household duties that I perform are only accomplished with great struggle and with many interruptions. He never permits me to sit down quietly to read or sew for over two minutes at a time. This is an actual fact. Now that he expects this constant attention what can we do to discourage it?"

Demands Ceaseless Attention

Please notice the "because we had domestic help." The mother who has not is compelled to leave the little child to do for himself from five to twenty minutes, or longer, at a stretch. From 8 months to a year or more of age the child's cries and complaining may drive the mother almost frantic as she tries to finish this job or that about the house. Nevertheless, she tends to harden to it and to extend the periods of letting him wait as she grows more absorbed in getting the potatoes on to cook or the pie in the oven to bake. But if the mother has a maid to do the work about the house it is easy for the child to demand her ceaseless attention and harder for her to resist his demands. She feels that since she has domestic help all her time should be at the disposal of her child, for his best education. Her conscience hardly lets her do as she would like while this little child bids for her attention. Before she realizes what has happened she has made him entirely dependent on her for his amusement and she has made herself his slave.

What to Do

Since she has no pie to bake, fish to fry or potatoes to put on to cook for a certain time, nor anything else compelling her to leave this child for a definite period, she will need to create work for herself. Let her, therefore write out a program which will provide for intervals of time (short at first and gradually longer later) during which she will be busy—sewing, knitting, reading, playing the piano or at solitaire. Let her refuse to give any attention to the child until the end of the definite period. It might be well to have a clock near to show the child just where each hand must be before she will amuse him again.

By and by the child will discover that his cries will not bring his mother to him. Having ample toys, he will amuse himself. Let her show great appreciation of his crudest creations as she turns her attention to him.

As soon as the child can move about it will be necessary, of course, for him to have learned that there are some things he can not have.

Solving Parent Problems

Q. Can jealousy by one child of a brother or sister cause serious sleep problems?

A. Yes; and all sorts of other problems of behaviour and personality as well.

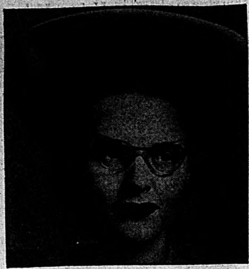
Give Eyes a Beauty Break



Smart new glasses with plastic frame.

"I SUPPOSE," says a woman who can't read with comfort because the type is dim, "that I should get glasses." But does she? She does not. She buys herself a new spring outfit and she gets herself the best permanent wave she can buy. She lugs home perky hats by the dozen. She is out for decorative helps to make her look attractive, when she should be giving her eyes a break. Tired eyes are sick ones. To neglect them is to do oneself an injustice and to set back all beautifying efforts. Impaired eyesight has a depressing effect upon the nerves and the spirits. It creates turkey tracks for which there is no magic cure.

Eye Strain

The eye specialist will tell her that, many times, eye strain will cause violent headaches and irritability. Why put herself completely out of form by postponing the day when she puts on specs? It is senseless. Yet thousands of women are precisely that silly.

Makers of frames and lenses have improved their wares, have a large number of designs to offer. Some make the long nose look shorter, others make the nubby one look longer. If you are out for your first pair of glasses, the obliging optician will explain all about the matter, help you to make the most becoming selection.

Inflamed eyelids must have medical attention; unless something is done there is a chance that the lashes will fall, the papillae becoming so weakened that no new little silky shafts will appear. Sties are a menace, too. If you are afflicted, don't meddle with them. Apply hot boric acid compresses until the little yellow point breaks, then press out the pus gently. Keep the fingers covered with gauze; if you don't you may spread the infection.

When applying any darkening agent to the lashes be careful to keep it away from the eyes. Even the most harmless substance may set up an irritation.

Fashion Flashes

NO MATTER how warm the summer may be, there's always plenty of use for a lightweight coat. Nice for dress wear is a shirt-waist coat of black jersey, made with deep neckline and easy armhole. White pique for the rolling revers. Black patent belt.

IT'S FUN choosing a hat, for never were hats so pretty and so flattering. Gleaming white pique is used for a smart little sailor trimmed with upstanding rose and brown tulle veiling.

AT LEAST one print should be in every wardrobe since the printed silk frock carries through Spring and Summer. Gray silk crepe makes a charming frock with a design of tiny red hearts and blue flowers with green leaves. Ruffled jabot from throat to hem.

CAN'T LIVE without the indispensable black dress. Nice for now and through the Summer is a black silk crepe frock made with a low, scalloped-V neckline, natural shoulders and deep armholes.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Fairfax Urges Girls to Write Sensible Letters

This is not a letter-writing age. Usually we telephone, telegraph, or scratch a line or two, and half our acquaintances have no idea of what wretched letter-writers we are. In this light, several young draftees have confided their surprise to me at the poor letters they receive from girl friends.

"Positively, Miss Fairfax," one writes, "I never knew what a goose she was until I got a couple of letters from her at camp. I couldn't make out more than half of them, and what I did make out wasn't worth reading — just mush, misspelled and silly. Not that she didn't send love and plenty of crosses for kisses. But why can't a girl who's had at least one year in high school know how to write a decent letter?

Why, indeed! The day is past when people used to write long and beautifully composed letters, volumes of which may be seen in our libraries. Still, one expects a girl who's had a year in high school to know how to write legibly, intelligently, even interestingly.

From time to time, this column has taken up the question of letter writing, and has urged young people to try to improve their handwriting; to borrow from libraries books on "How to Write Letters"; to curb their taste for poisonously colored stationery and to buy unlined cream or white paper. Last but not least, to invest in a five cent bottle of ink and not to write to anybody with pencil.

None of these rules, however, apply to me. I assure you that I'm always glad to get a letter written with, perhaps a stump of a pencil on a leaf torn out of a notebook and scribbled on the kitchen table. I say this because I hope you regard me as your mother-confessor and will write to me in any way you find convenient. But for goodness sake, don't write that sort of a letter to the boy friend or your husband at the camp! A pencil-scrawled address on the envelope might be just a little humiliating to receive.

Now, we'll agree that you've observed all these rules as to pen, ink and paper. What are you going to say to the husband or the boy friend? Write about him, ask him about camp life and tell him how much you miss him; mention any other things in which he would be interested. Don't tell him about some man of whom he might be jealous. Don't talk about any other man at all, unless he happens to be a particular buddy of the draftee and one you're sure he'll be interested in knowing about.

If your correspondent is your husband and you have children, he'll want to know everything the darlings say or do, particularly what they say about "Daddy," and how they miss him. If there's any interesting news in the neighborhood, you might tell him that. A homesick man likes to know everything concerning the home and the friends he's left.

If the correspondent is an army boy friend, don't be too goo-ey. If you have some particular name for him, you can call him that; "Dearest Red", if he happens to have red hair; "Dear Beanpole," if he happens to be tall and thin, or 'Dearest Harry", if that's his name. Don't copy wildly romantic stuff from old volumes of letters.

Don't write stuff like "words cannot fail to tell how the hours creep on without you——". Be practical.

GOOD MANNERS

MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Birthday Party

Dear Mrs. Beekman:

For some time I have wanted to invite ten or twelve of my closest girl friends to my house for a party. Since my birthday comes in a short time, I thought it might be a good idea to have them on my birthday. However, I don't want them to know that it is my birthday, because I don't want them to bring gifts.

1. Do you think these girls would be embarrassed if I tell them after they arrive that it is my birthday?

2. Which do you think would be better—an evening party or a Sunday afternoon party?

3. Should I serve buffet? Twelve people can just about be squeezed around the table.

4. I can't afford to spend much on food. Do you think that open sandwiches, sandy, nuts, fruit, cake, tea or coffee would be enough to serve? How is the beverage served at a buffet?

5. Can you suggest a novel way of arranging the birthday candles? I don't want to put my birthday-number on the cake.

Pamela.

1. I think your party plan is excellent. It's a charming idea to think that on one's birthday one is going to be happily surrounded by close friends.

I'm sure that they won't feel embarrassed at not having been told that it is your birthday. Keep the secret until the birthday cake is brought in—and even then treat the announcement lightly, perhaps saying something like this, "I wanted to have you all with me on my birthday and I thought it would be fun to surprise you! I think a birthday surprise party can work both ways!"

2. When you give this party depends on your own choice and convenience. If, however, you are going to invite only girls, and aren't going to give it on your birthday, perhaps Sunday afternoon would be more appropriate.

3. Since your table can accommodate your guests you could have a sit-down tea-party—very easy for conversation. Or you could have your dining room table set for tea, have the foods ready on it, and have the guests serve themselves.

4. These foods you have listed are quite enough for either a Sunday afternoon tea, or a middle-of-the-evening snack. Instead or serving fruit (which isn't usually done) you might take the fruit money and offer both tea and coffee, or tea or coffee and a punch of some kind.

If you're having a sit-down tea you might sit at one end of the table, with the tea service in front of you, and serve the tea. Opposite you might have a co-hostess to serve the coffee. At one end might be the punch service, to be served for the toast to your birthday.

5. One candle or sixteen candles may be used. Sixteen candles, small pink ones, are more gala.

HERE'S EVIDENCE YOU CAN'T DENY!

"KELLOGG'S WIN ON FLAVOUR"—declares Mr. John A. White, of Chateau Cheese—one of many distinguished taste experts who made a blindfold test of all four brands of corn flakes.

"THERE WAS NO DOUBT in my mind which of the four samples of corn flakes rated first for flavour—it was Kellogg's"—says Mr. A. S. Ferguson of Willards Ltd., chocolate manufacturers.

"FIRST CHOICE—KELLOGG'S," Mr. Donald McKay of Crosse & Blackwell, says: "After tasting all four brands of corn flakes, I chose the sample which proved to be Kellogg's."

"THERE IS A SUBTLE DISTINCTIVENESS in the Kellogg flavour," says Mr. Maurice Aquarone; chef of the famous Royal Connaught Hotel in Hamilton. "Kellogg's rate tops for flavour!"

"IT WAS EASY TO DECIDE which of the four brands rated first with me," says Mr. W. B. Cross, president of the W. B. Cross Co., proprietor of Mellocup Tea. "Kellogg's win hands down."

"I UNHESITATINGLY CHOSE for flavour the sample of corn flakes which later proved to be Kellogg's," records Mrs. Robbins, head dietitian of the famous Honeydew Restaurants.

"I DEFINITELY PREFERRED Kellogg's—they are certainly first for flavour!" says Mr. F. R. Baillie, taste expert for Verner's Ginger Ale and Cleo carbonated drinks.

"THEY'RE FIRST FOR FLAVOUR." Mr. George Mills, taste expert for Rowntree's chocolates; promptly gave his unqualified verdict for Kellogg's after sampling all four brands of corn flakes.

AND again last year, Kellogg's Corn Flakes were voted first for flavour in 4 out of 5 Canadian homes. And the public's preference for Kellogg's is confirmed by Canada's foremost taste experts ... by people whose livelihood depends on their skill in detecting fine flavours.

These experts tested the four brands of corn flakes blindfold. Samples of all four were completely unidentified—the only clue was ... flavour! One after another the experts carefully tasted ... and one after another chose Kellogg's first for flavour!

Here is complete proof, if proof were needed, of Kellogg's amazing superiority of flavour! But you've only to try Kellogg's Corn Flakes yourself to realize at once how extra delicious they are. And how fresh! And how convenient "the 30-second breakfast!" Treat yourself and your family to Kellogg's Corn Flakes tomorrow! Get several packages in whichever of the two sizes you find handier. Or if you are a breakfast-outer, ask for Kellogg's in the triple-wrapped individual package.

EXPERTS VOTE Kellogg's FIRST FOR FLAVOUR!

HOUSE CONTINUES CONSIDERATION OF TAX CHANGES

Finance Minister Gives No Encouragement to Proposals by Members

MUST HAVE MONEY

By FRANK FLAHERTY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, May 15 (CP)—Finance Minister Ilsley was firm and Conservative House Leader Hanson was philosophical as Conservative private members pleaded for extended exemptions under the Income Tax Law in the House of Commons yesterday.

Mr. Ilsley gave no encouragement to any of several suggestions for changes which would make the exemptions more favorable to various groups of taxpayers.

And Mr. Hanson remarked: "It would be nice to give exemptions to everybody but if you did you would not get any revenue. You have to draw the line somewhere."

Suggested changes were:—

1. Foster parents of British guest children should be allowed exemption for them as for their own children;

2. Commissioned officers in the armed forces serving in Canada should be exempt from Income Tax and National Defence Tax on their pay and allowances;

3. All persons caring for children not their own should be allowed exemption for them;

4. Exemption should be allowed for the support of parents-in-law as well as parents and grandparents.

Clashed With Ilsley

Harry Jackman (Con. Toronto-Rosedale) made the strongest plea for exemption on account of British guest children, and clashed with Mr. Ilsley when he suggested the minister was "reluctant to accept, and if I may say so, stubborn" regarding suggestions from outside the House, but that he was quite ready to adopt suggestions from outside the House.

He said the Minister changed the tax on interest and dividends payable to non-residents of Canada when "a handful of American corporations" asked for it.

"Is the honorable gentleman opposed to that change?" asked Mr. Ilsley.

"No," replied Mr. Jackman.

"Is he in favor of it?"

"I am in favor of it."

"Then," said Mr. Ilsley, "he should not suggest the Government is doing something it ought not to do because of outside pressure.

One Proposal Change

(Last Saturday Mr. Ilsley announced he had changed one of his Budget proposals so an increase from five to 15 per cent. in the tax payable on income from Provincial and civic bonds accruing to non-residents of Canada would not apply to income payable in foreign currency.

(He said representations had been made on behalf of various groups of United States investors who said they had purchased Canadian bonds in the belief such bonds would not be subject to Canadian taxation. Premier Hepburn of Ontario also protested on behalf of the Ontario Government.)

Mr. Jackman said he spoke mainly for a group of professors at the University of Toronto who had taken into their homes the children of English professors. They had expected to have a certain income and now found their taxes raised and no exemptions allowed them. The new taxes would force down their standard of living and perhaps deprive the British children of a reasonable standard of living.

"Surely if the Government is going to listen to the voice of a group of American Corporations... it should pay heed to the silent plea of little children from beleaguered Britain," Mr. Jackman said.

Mr. Ilsley said he was surprised at the member getting sentimental and added:—

"Little children are not crying for this exemption. That cry comes from gentlemen who have undertaken to support these children and who now are asking the Government to share a part of their burden."

Cannot Be Granted

The minister said the exemption could not be granted when the Government was taxing people with low incomes and when many people who had not even enough income to require them to pay tax were maintaining children in their homes for whom they could not claim exemption.

Replying to Hon. Earl Rowe (Con. Dufferin-Simcoe) who asked exemption for commissioned officers serving in Canada, Mr. Ilsley said private soldiers and non-commissioned officers now were exempt and so were commissioned officers serving overseas or whose duties normally took them into the air or on the water.

The Government had tried to draw a line between officers whose duties took them into unusual danger and those performing duties which were no more dangerous than those of civilians. The rule gave rise to some allegation of unfairness in borderline cases. Sometimes an officer who wanted to go overseas was ordered to stay in Canada and work in an office, and felt it unfair that he should have to pay the tax, while another officer who was doing what he wanted to do did not.

But the minister said he did not think public opinion would stand for exempting all commissioned officers from Income Tax. In Great Britain all members of the forces, regardless of rank or of their duties were taxed.

The House spent the whole afternoon on the Income Tax resolutions contained in the Budget and continues with the same resolutions today.

Suggested Alternative Plans

Mr. Hanson suggested there should be alternative plans for the instalment payment of income tax and that the final date for making returns should remain April 30 and not be changed, as proposed, to March 31.

The Minister said the March 31 date was chosen because the government wanted to balance the 12 monthly instalments, six before the due date and six after the due date, in order to be fair to the taxpayers.

Criticism of income tax proposals was voiced by T. L. Church (Con. Toronto-Broadview), who said he feared they would hurt the municipalities and lead to increased taxation on real estate.

"Nobody will object to paying every dollar that is needed for the war," Mr. Church said, "but 87½ per cent of this budget is not for the war and when the people know that they are going to object.

"Who ever heard of Home Defence being for war? If we fail in the primary theatre of war it is all over for us".

"If it is necessary to have this high taxation to carry on the war these schedules would go through in a minute because the people put the war first", he said.

"But when they know that 50 per cent of this budget is not for the war at all there is bound to be complaint".

There was further discussion of the suggestion made Tuesday by M. J. Coldwell, Acting C.C.F. House Leader, that new millionaires had been created in Canada since the war began.

Urged For Figures

Mr. Coldwell again urged that the Minister bring in figures to show how many persons receive income of $50,000 a year or over as disclosed by income tax returns, comparing 1940 with the previous year and showing details of how much they actually received.

The Minister said he would bring in more detail but not sufficiently fine to permit identification of individual taxpayers. He did not think that was proper procedure.

Mr. Hanson said he agreed with the Minister that if a man received a large income it should not be made public, so long as he gained it honestly.

But John Blackmore, New Democracy leader, disagreed. He said he did not believe any person should object to public knowledge of his income, nor should he be protected. There were many classes of public employees and school-teachers whose incomes were public knowledge and all should be treated alike.

James Hogg, In 1876, Purchased First High-Wheeled Bicycle In City

Evolving out of the prominence given the early model 'ordinary' bicycle which for the past few weeks has been on display at the Uptown Tire and Battery Service, and which has aroused considerable interest on the part of older residents of the city, comes information regarding the first person to own such a wheel in Belleville.

Reading the account of the old wheel in the Ontario Intelligencer, Mrs. J. Hawley, 30 Victoria Ave., recalls that it was her brother, the late William Hogg of New York City, son of Mr. James Hogg, then well-known clothing merchant of this city, who operated the first high-wheeled bicycle on the streets of Belleville.

In 1876, Mr. James Hogg, upon returning to the city from a visit to Philadelphia Fair, where he had become interested in the bicycle which was then gaining in popularity, at once determined to present his son with one of the models and forthwith ordered the bicycle from England. Six weeks after the order had been placed the wheel was received from Coventry, England and for several years this "ordinary" was the only bicycle to be seen on local streets. Including duty and shipping charges from England, the wheel cost approximately $300.

At no time were there more than a dozen of the high wheeled models in the city, according to Mrs. Hawley, who recalls that the streets of the city were anything but suitable for the operation of the tricky bicycles. Following the era of the "ordinary" bicycles, the "safety" models were introduced. In appearance "safety" models were quite similar to present day wheels, with the late Mr. Lester Larier being the first to own and ride such a wheel in the city.

SINGAPORE BASE REINFORCED BY BRITISH TROOPS

Supplies From U.S. and Troops Add to Growing Strength in Far East

CONFERENCE HELD

Singapore, May 15 (CP)—Several thousand British fighting men—soldiers, sailors and fliers—disembarked from a transport today while freighters were unloading heavy cargoes of war supplies from the United States.

The reinforcements of men from the United Kingdom and supplies from the United States added to the steadily growing strength of Britain's Far Eastern defences.

The new arrivals from the homeland, representing every branch of the Empire's fighting services, were sped to depots and garrison points to join British, Australian and Indian units already guarding this South Asian stronghold.

Members of a Chinese military mission nearing the end of a two-week tour of Malaya, during which they saw British defence preparations and conferred with military chiefs, witnessed today's debarkation.

Authorities would not comment on the significance of the Chinese representatives' visit, but a communique said "matters of mutual interest" were discussed.

Revise Junior Section Of Belleville Fair Bd.

Complete revision of the junior section of the Belleville Fair Board was made today by members of the Ontario Department of Agriculture and agricultural representatives of three counties.

The presence of Department of Agriculture representatives here, the first time in the history of the board, indicates the rising interest taken in the local fair by the government, a fair board official stated.

Officials conducting the revision included R. H. Graham, Live Stock Branch of the Provincial department, Toronto; A. H. Martin, Assistant Director, Agricultural Representatives Branch, Toronto; Ian McLeod, Northumberland County Agricultural representative; F. J. Webster and J. B. Matthews, Prince Edward County and H. L. Fair, Hastings County.

With the assistance of Secretary Arthur L. Burke, such departments of the junior section as live-stock judging, boys' clubs, including grains, calf, swine and others, home-making and other departments in which young women take part were completely revised.

With the revision making the junior section of the fair more attractive, fair board officials feel that this year's exhibit will be the finest held in the history of the fair, which falls this year on September 8th, 9th and 10th.

Two Kittens Ride Across Desert Above Freight Car Axle

Needles Calif. May 15 (AP) — The thin walls from under the freight car Larry Prather discovered came from two young kittens.

They had ridden 170 miles nonstop across the Mojave desert from Barstow to Needles and were a bit hysterical when Prather removed them from a 6-inch cubicle on the car trucks directly above the axle.

Prather, a Sante Fe railway employe, said the kittens must be offspring of "travelling Ophelia" the Barstow freight-house cat.

Only three weeks ago ,Ophelia was rescued from a freight car at Ashfork, Ariz. and was re-united with her Barstow-born brood. Ophelia originally arrived in Barstow from Parker Ariz. in a freight car.

The kittens are too young to have climbed unaided into the cubicle so Prather theorized.

Ophelia put them there at Barstow but missed the freight herself.

INDIAN BOY SUFFERS SEVERE BURNS

Phillip Claus, Belleville, sustained severe burns about the chest and neck, early Thursday when a gas stove, that he was about to light, exploded and the flames ignited the sweater he was wearing. Young Claus was rushed to the Belleville General Hospital, where he was attended by Dr. R. Ross.

Claus was employed at Tom's Chinese laundry adjacent to the lower bridge and was engaged in lighting a small gas range for heating purposes. In some unknown manner the stove blew flames backwards and ignited the sweater Claus was wearing. Before the flames could be extinguished young Claus had suffered extensive chest and neck burns, while his face was also scorched.

QUINTS TO LEARN ENGLISH SOON

Teacher Has Been Secured to Give Them Lessons Throughout the Summer

North Bay Ont., May 15 (CP)—Completion of arrangements for the Dionne quintuplets to begin English an Ontario government aurist approval of the Ontario Department of Education, Judge J. A. Valin, chairman of the Quints Board of guardians said today.

Judge Valin said he did not learn until Tuesday of the Quints refusal to speak in Englishr during an Ontario government tourist broadcast in which they extended greetings last Sunday to prospective visitors.

"I have been told they were prevented by their parents," he said. "I don't understand it. We took a lot of trouble and we thought everything was going all right".

Oliva Dionne, the Quints' father, was absent from his nearby Callander farm home today and could not be reached for comment. Mrs. Dionne declined to comment. Mrs. she would leave it to her husband to make any statement.

Teacher Now Engaged

Judge Valin said Miss Grace Morgan, Normal School teacher in North Bay, has been asked to give the Quints three half-hour English lessons a week, starting immediately and continuing throughout the summer. Arrangements for the English lessons were in collaboration with H. E. Amos, Director of Professional Training of the Department of Education.

"I think when the children grow up they would reproach us severly if we failed to provide them with adequate knowledge of English," Judge Valin said. "We want them to be able to speak both languages."

He said the matter of the Quints learning English first was brought up before they were a year old when the Department of Education asked the guardians what language the Quints would speak.

"Dr. Dafoe (the Quints' physician) and I both signed the return wire which told them that we intended they be taught both French and English," Judge Valin said.

Surviving her are her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward S. Maracle; four sisters, Mrs. Leonard Hill, Oshawa; Mrs. Jack Brant, Hamilton; Mrs. Leonard Brant, Tyendinaga Reserve, and Mrs. Walter Brant, Oshawa; one brother, Clifford Maracle, at home.

Bulldog Backs Away From Belligerent Mouse

The old newspaper idiom, "when a man bites a dog, it is news'," had another angle today.

The female of the species is expected to mount chairs, tables, chesterfields and even stoves when Brother Mouse starts on a tour of investigation, but when a full-grown bull-dog, grey in years, wisdom and experience, seeks the more or less comparative safety of that area between the ground and the chassis of an automobile, when Brother Mouse showed signs of belligerency, well, perhaps, it is something for the book.

Cornered in the waste-paper basket of a downtown office, the mouse was taken to a small parking space adjacent and given its freedom. The bulldog, hovering in the vicinity, seeing the little fellow dash across the area, took one look, chased it and when the mouse turned, immediately sought shelter underneath the car.

The mouse, before meeting its demise via a broom wielded in the hands of a member of the office staff, stood on its hind legs, rubbed its paws in a "That's that" gesture as the dog disappeared and calmly ran to its death.

The dog's name has since been changed to another more appropriate one.

ALD. H. J. CLARKE SPEAKS TO VETERANS

At the monthly meeting on Wednesday, May 14th, of the C.N.R. Veterans' Club, the guest speaker was Alderman H. J. Clarke, the chairman of finance for the city, who gave the members some interesting facts on the financial situation of Belleville.

Ald. Clarke was accorded a hearty vote of thanks by the members present. Those who were absent at the meeting missed quite a lot of information which as taxpayers would be well to know and appreciate.

WALL STREET

New York, May 15 (AP)— The stock market tried to work up a little rallying fever in today's market but the speculative thermometer rose only a shade above normal for favorite issues.

Small fractional gains had the best of it at the start and these were pretty well distributed near the fourth hour. Many leaders remained indifferent though, and refused to erase negligible minus signs.

Bonds improved mildly but buoyant commodities of Wednesday lost some of their steam.

Among stocks Continental Banking 'A' edged into new high ground for the year. Supported were N.Y. Central Pennsylvania, International Mercantile Marine, Atlantic Gulf & West Idies, Chrysler, Montgomery Ward, Standard Oil of N.J., Union Carbide, Aanaconda and Western Union.

Canadian issues were very quiet, Only one stock, Distillers Seagram showed any change, down 1-4. In the bond market Canada 4s were unchanged.

Butter Pushes Above Minimum Level

Butter yesterday stepped into the local butter market with confidence and pushed the price of the first-grade Ontario product 1-2 cent higher than the minimum level of 29 1-2 cents a pound in the most active dealings in weeks. Eggs showed no change.

With the fixed minimum level eliminating uncertainty of summer prices, good demand was in evidence all day on the butter market. No. 1 grade Ontario creamery solids sold early in the session at 29 1-2 cents a pound, latter it advanced to 29 3-4 cents and then, just before the close of the market when offerings began to dry up, buyers, in order to obtain supplies, were forced to pay 30c a pound for the product.

The situation remained unchanged on the egg market. Fresh receipts were adequate to cover local demand and prices on all grades held steady.

WILL REPORT ON HESS INCIDENT

Mr. Churchill Will Take First Opportunity but Choice of Opportunity Will be Guided by Public Interest

London, May 15 (CP)—Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons today that he would report at the first opportunity on the Rudolf Hess incident but that he would "be guided in the selection of that opportunity by the public interest."

Pressed to explain a delay of 48 hours in the original British announcement of Hess' parachute arrival, Mr. Churchill said, "It (the delay) certainly was not unfortunate, but if it had been unfortunate it would have been unavoidable.

"First of all we had to establish the identity of the injured German airman who had landed, and we only had evidence which, while it was very interesting, could not be considered conclusive in view of the surprising character of the information."

Officer Who Knew Hess

Mr. Churchill said:

"I did not believe it when I was told in the course of Sunday, I think it was, but I immediately sent an officer who knew the deputy fuehrer and was able to speak with him in fluent German.

"While that was still proceeding, the German announcement came out as to the insanity of the deputy fuehrer and his flight to Scotland. In these circumstances what had hitherto been a surmise of probability, merged into definite certainty."

Arthur Woodburn, a Scottish Labor member, asked: "Is there any truth in the inference suggested by the German wireless that the Intelligence Department has created the impression in Germany that Scotland is ready to make a separate peace with Germany?

Mr. Churchill replied, "Whatever delusions may exist, that is not among them."

Residence of Archbishop

Lambeth Palace for nearly seven centuries has been the London residence of the Archbishops of Canterbury. It was damaged earlier in the war also.

St. James' Palace, where the Duke of Windsor lived when he was Prince of Wales, is a picturesque brick building which at one time was the official London residence of the King. The British court takes from it the name it bears to this day, the Court of St. James'.

The Archbishop of Canterbury was spending the night at Lambeth Palace when a shower of incendiaries fell on the chapel roof, setting it afire and burning the building out. He supervised the rescue of thirty persons who had taken shelter in the crypt. Many of the most valuable books in the ecclesiastical library had been removed to a place of safekeeping at the start of the war, but thousands of other volumes were destroyed. The Palace staff prevented the chapel fire from spreading to other buildings.

Among the relics destroyed in the Church of St. Clement Danes was the pew in which the famous Dr. Samuel Johnson often sat and which was marked by a commemorative plaque. His statute still stands outside the church.

The General Motors postponement came shortly after settlement of a two-day strike at Colt's Patent Fire Arms Manufacturing Company at Hartford, Conn.

William S. Knudsen, chief of the office of production management, termed the G. M. situation "damn serious."

The Board in a formal statement announced that the General Motors management had been offered and had accepted the 24-hour period in which to act on accepting or rejecting the findings and recommendations made by the Board for settlement.

The 24-hour period will expire at 5.10 a.m. E.D.T. Friday.

Recommendations Accepted

William H. Davis, Vice-Chairman of the Board, stated that the Board's recommendations already had been accepted by representatives of the Congress of Industrial Organizations United Automobile Workers "without reservation" but subject to ratification by union members.

The announcement came as local officers of the union in 26 cities waited under union orders to "stand by" for telephoned instructions from their superiors in Washington on whether or not to call out approximately 160,000 workers.

The Board panel headed by Davis put in 18 1-2 hours of almost continuous negotiations before the announcement was made.

The union had demanded 10 cents an hour wage increase, a union shop, and revision of grievance machinery. The present wage scale has been estimated by the Company at approximately $1 hourly.

The General Motors counter-offer on wages was two cents an hour basic increase, with three to five cent raises in certain skilled classifications.

LESS WAR DISCUSSION IN JAPAN

New York, May 15 (CP)—Toyohiko Kagawa, whose work on behalf of world brotherhood has made him a leader of Christians in Japan, said in an interview yesterday that there is not nearly so much discussion in Japan concerning possible war with the United States than he has found in this country. He expressed surprise at U. S. apprehensions of war with Japan.

BOMBINGS IN REICH

treatment at a field station and after Hess had asked for him. The duke, a squadron leader in the Royal Air Force, was on active duty when Hess landed. On instructions he flew to Glasgow, later to meet the unexpected prisoner.

Met On Way To Hospital

Somewhere on the road to the hospital the duke and Hess renewed their acquaintance, in the presence of representatives of the Intelligence Service and the Foreign Office.

A report of the interview (in which Hess presumably outlined his mission) was sent to London and is expected to be the basis of Mr. Churchill's prospective statement, unless of course the Prime Minister has had personal contact with Hess.

The prize prisoner's hospital is now completely guarded against intrusion, it was reported today, with Scotland Yard operatives augmenting army regulars.

this morning, and it was generally

A highly-placed United States source, meanwhile, was quoted by the Associated Press as saying the Hess incident had created the possibility of false optimism which might hamper the war effort.

The way the authorities have handled the incident, he said, according to the Associated Press, "has spread too rosy a glow, and this, combined with German emphasis on the angle that Hess came to the British Isles with suggestions for a peace understanding, may lull people into a letup and soften them for new blows by Germany."

Self-Appointed Advocate

The thesis that Hess came here as a self-appointed advocate of peace, without the sanction of the Nazi government was based largely on these facts gleaned from informed sources:

1. That Hess some time ago wrote a letter—presumably a peace feeler—to the Duke of Hamilton, an acquaintance of pre-war days.

2. That the spot Hess picked for his parachute landing in Scotland last Saturday night was near the Duke's estate and that he asked to see the Duke when he was found, suffering from a broken ankle.

3. That he carried a map with his course from Germany marked in blue pencil and the Duke's estate ringed with a circle, indicating that was his destination.

Statements Coincide

These facts coincided with the statement of German officials that Hess had left behind documents indicating he had flown to Scotland without official sanction to see the Duke in the belief that with the latter's help he could end the war.

The Nazis claimed Hess was under the spell of a "Messiah Complex" and said emphatically they would disavow any peace proposals he might make.

The Press Association said the Duke of Hamilton had turned over to government some time ago the letter which he had received from Hess and that—on its advice—he had ignored the missive.

What the government did about the letter—if anything — was not disclosed, but the few details available seemed to Britain to add up to but one thing. That Hess had come parachuting down in Scotland to get his answer.

Did See Duke

Hess, it was learned, eventually did see the Duke, but only after he was under guard in a Glasgow hospital. At the time of Hess' arrival in Scotland the Duke was on duty with the Royal Air Force, in which he is a squadron leader.

Hess' acquaintance with the Scottish nobleman is traceable to their mutual interest in aviation and sports, which brought them together several times before the war.

Before the war, according to the Press, the Duke was for a time a member of the Anglo-German fellowship—an organization having as its purpose the fostering of friendly relations between Britain and Germany. The organization was dissolved after the war began.

Whatever the real purpose of Hess' flight to Scotland, informed sources hinted he had talked freely concerning internal conditions in Germany. He was said to have acknowledged that R.A.F. bombings were causing great distress and that the civilian population there was suffering great deprivation.

Affair Widely Discussed

Berlin, May 15 —(AP)— Nazi newspapers dropped from their pages today all mention of Rudolf Hess' flight to Scotland but the affair remained the main topic of conversation wherever Germans met.

In barber shops and beside news stands, at beer tables or during lunch hours, everyone discussed Hess' departure and possible results of his flight. High Nazi sources claimed documents left behind by Hitler's deputy showed he had hoped to start peace negotiations with the Duke of Hamilton in Britain. Nevertheless, authorities were confident the incident soon would be forgotten and some sections of the press turned to a discussion of French-German relations.

The well-informed commentary Dienst Aus Deutschland said the recent meeting of the Vichy Vice Premier, Admiral Jean Darlan, and Hitler must be regarded as of the greatest importance and quoted the Pariser Zeitung—organ of Nazi occupation authorities—as saying that the Hitler-Darlan discussions must be regarded as a further step on the road to "new and more confidential co-operation."

Fire Department Answers Over Call Per Day Since First Of The Year

Grass firer still continue to be the major cause for fire alarms in the city with no less than four calls of this nature being answered by the local department on Wednesday. Although grass in vacant lots is now in some cases almost six inches high, there is considerable of last year's dry grass underneath and once fire gets started in this, the flames spread with amazing rapidity. In one case on Ann Street yesterday a fire of this nature spread to a nearby wooden fence and destroyed a considerable portion before being extinguished.

A chimney blaze at 86 Station Street, the residence of A. Somberg, just at supper hour on Wednesday evening and which was turned in as a fire alarm, sent the department with two trucks on the run. No damage was reported, however. Early on Thursday morning a small fire started in the roof of the Fruit Machinery building on Front Street, but the blaze was quickly extinguished with a minimum of damage resulting.

Since the first of the year the local fire department have answered a total of 152 alarms, averaging 1.16 calls per day over a period of 130 days. This is slightly higher than the average number of calls received in other years, but an epidemic of chimney and grass fires earlier in the year swelled the total.

R. A. F. Pilot Describes Sensations Of Parachuting From Damaged Plane

Thousands of pilots of the Royal Air Force and the Royal Canadian Air Force have jumped from shattered aircraft by parachute and have lived to fly and fight again.

The long drop from the sky under a billowing canopy of silk has become a commonplace to aerial fighters. Perhaps the most vivid description of a wartime parachute jump is that written by Flying Officer Ralph Hope of the Royal Air Force. Flying Officer Hope, a nephew of the alte Mr. Neville Chamberlain, was subsequently killed in action.

His story, as related in a British Air Ministry news bulletin, follows:

"Saturday was not such a successful day from my point of view," he wrote,

"As on our third patrol I lost my aircraft.

"We were at about 21,000 feet when we got involved with a squadron of Me. 109's. They got me even before I saw them which was very annoying.

"I first felt a curious sort of bump and as I turned to see what was up my controls felt funny a lot of red sparks and black smoke appeared round my feet and, a cloud of white smoke—probably glycol — began streaming back from the engine. The aircraft began going downhill fast. I slid back the hood and began to get out; my goggles were whipped off and my helmet began to lift up in the slipstream.

"I realized I had not undone my straps so I pulled out the retaining-pin and stood up, standing on anything which came handy (the seat, the instrument panel, or the stick, I don't really know.) The air seized hold of me and there was a wrench as my oxygen tube snapped off (I had forgotten to undo it), and I shot out into the sky.

"The aeroplane disappeared. It was nice and cool falling. I was head down of course but found the position quite comfortable. There was no sense of speed, or any feeling of falling. I had a look at the clouds below me (they were at least about 4,000-5,000 feet) and then collected the odd bits of my helmet and had a look around. My parachute was still on my seat, both my boots were on, and I didn't seem to have lost anything except my goggles and a handkerchief and map. They must have fallen out of the pockets in my knees when I first went upside down.

"After a while I thought about pulling the rip-cord. I seemed to have fallen a goodish way, so I pulled. The canopy streamed out, there was a hard jerk, and there I was right side up, quite comfortable, and floating slowly—oh, so slowly—earthwards. I was at about 9-10,000 feet then, so I had fallen for about 8-9,000 feet (from about 18,000 feet) and might have fallen further with advantage.

"When I looked up I could see the shining white canopy above me, and little silver specks having no end of a dog-fight in the clear blue above me. A Spitfire dived down past me with a high-pitched whine, but that was the only disturbance. The parachute began to swing me about and it was not long before I felt sick—very sick, in fact, by the time I landed.

"It was fun going into the clouds as the sun played a sort of "Spectre of the Brocken" effect on my shadown as I approached them. When I emerged, the countryside looked pleasantly open, and after drifting quite a way I thought I saw where I should land. Two hands had the same idea. We were all wrong as, in spite of attempts on my part to avoid it, came down in a spinney of young oak trees, pulling up short about 20 feet from the ground, hanging in my harness.

"I managed to get hold of a trunk, pull myself over it, get out of the parachute harness, and climb to the ground where I remained quite still until I was found. The Army soon took charge of me, gave me a drink and some lunch and drove me back to my base.

"The only damage I sustained was a hefty bruise on my right shoulder from hitting the tail as I jumped, and a bruise on my leg and a torn trouser from the somewhat unceremonious descent through the upper branches of the oak tree."

The writer was killed on his first patrol after returning from sick leave. He stayed in his crippled Hurricane until he was certain it would fall clear of any buildings. When he at last baled out he was too low to make a successful parachute descent.

EDEN CLAIMS

Thus, apparently, Hitler at last has gone to the aid of the Iraqis against the British.

New Military Venture

Evidence that the Germans were ready or already had launched a new military venture on the hot sands of Asia Minor came today from several sources—including a Cairo announcement of the Middle East command. Among them were:

1. A reliable London source said German planes were landing in French-mandated Syria en route to Iraq and would be bombed and machine-gunned by the Royal Air Force.

2. Foreign Secretary Eden charged that the Vichy government apparently had granted transit rights to the German forces.

3. German Ambassador to Turkey, Franz Von Papen, who recently returned to Ankara after consultations in Germany, conferred at length with Turkish President Ismet Inonu today and bore him 'friendly greetings" from Hitler.

Reliable reports reaching Cairo last night said German personnel had reached Syria by air.

Foreign Secretary Eden told the House of Commons that Britain had given her armed forces full authority for action against German "aircraft using landing fields in Syria for flights to Iraq.

"Detailed information at the disposal of His Majesty's government shows that French authorities are allowing German aircraft to use Syrian airdrome as staging posts for flights to Iraq" the Foreign Secretary said.

Cannot Escape Responsibility

"The French government cannot escape responsibility for this situation. Their action under German orders in permitting these flights is a clear breach of the armistice terms and is inconsistent with undertakings given by the French government."

The Commons greeted this announcement with prolonged cheers.

Questioned whether the United States had been fully informed, Mr. Eden answered: "Yes, certainly."

(These developments follow Germany's proclamation Tuesday of the Red Sea and the Gulf of Suez areas as war zones and the Nazi declaration of unspecified military operating in that area. President Roosevelt recently reopened the Red Sea to United States merchant ships as no longer a belligerent zone.)

Seek Turkey's Permission

Istanbul, May 14 —(Delayed) —(AP)—A report which could not be confirmed today said Iraq representatives were seeking Turkey's permission for Germany to send war materials through Turkey to bolster the Iraq rebels in their fight against British forces there.

Nazi Ambassador Franz Von Papen was reported to have conferred with the Iraq minister in Ankara but there was no indication of the outcome of their consultation.

At the same time British sources in Istanbul predicted a "cleanup" of the fighting in Iraq within 10 days.

Weighing prevalent rumors that Germany would soon start a campaign through Syria aimed at Suez, the newspaper Chumhuriyet said:

Duty to Guard Syria

"France can not forget that although she has left the League of Nations it is still her duty to guard Syria from undesirable complications. There remains an unsolved mystery with regard to the Mediterranean situation — that is the apparently disinterested attitude of the British navy toward the Axis occupation of Greek islands."

(A dispatch from Cairo Wednesday said German personnel has arrived by plane in Syria on an undisclosed mission.)

A neutral observer, recently returned from Syria, said that should the Vichy government give Germany permission to send troops through Syria the Nazis would meet resistance. He added that there were French forces in Syria adequate to put up strong resistance.

IDENTICAL MARKERS PUZZLE COP

Indianapolis, May 15.—(AP) — Motorcycle policeman Charles Haine wondered if he was dreaming when he saw two identical automobiles with identical rear licence plates, but he didn't pinch himself. Instead, he pinched the drivers. They were brothers, Paul Davis, 33, and Oscar 38, and had divided a set of licence plates neither car had a number on the front.

200,000 PELTS

The great area affected stretches along the Saskatchewan River from Cedar Lake to 50 miles north. It is the plan of the two governments to cover the entire area with rat farms to provide permanent production of 750,000 pelts a year officials of the Mines and Resources Department said today.

Not only do the trappers get the $25 a month but the 200,000 rats will provide 150 tons of rat meat, considered a great delicacy among Indians and half-breeds and even by whites once they have acquired a taste for it.

Of the 700 trappers, 175 were Indians, wards of the Dominion Government. They find themselves transferred from the days four or five years ago when they were on relief to persons of considerable financial substance. They have no rents to pay for they have their own little farms, no taxes to pay, and have all the remainder of the year to augment their earnings by gardening, hunting, fishing and trapping outside the rat farm.

The two governments started the rat farm when confronted in 1935 with the problem of large numbers of half breeds and Indians in and around The Pas being unable to earn a living.

The province collects five cents a pelt royalty and in addition takes 20 per cent of the net profit from the sale of the pelts to liquidate the investments in constructing the farms.

Prices this year are expected to average better than $1.55 each, officials say, and a crop assurance fund is being started which can be drawn on to assist the trappers in years when prices may be lower and production has to be reduced to prevent glutting the market.

Brockville Hotel Damaged By Fire

Brockville, Ont., May 15 —(CP)—With the exception of severe smoke and water damage to its top floor Brockville's modern five-storey Hotel Manitonna was functioning as usual today after a fire which broke out last night and forced about 80 of its 120 guests temporarily to the street. The fire started from an acetylene torch being used to cut a large metal ventilator shaft in the kitchen where a new range was being installed.

The torch ignited accumulated grease inside the shaft which runs through the building to the roof. The fire burned out the pipe and ventilating fan housing on the roof and communicated to the space between the fire proof cement main roof and its asphalt false covering which was considerably damaged. Firemen carried two lines of hose from the street to the roof to smother the fire.

No estimate of the damage has been made but it is believed it will approximate $5,000 covered by insurance.

Beaver Club Receives $6,750 To Make Repairs

London, May 15 —(CP)— The Beaver Club, popular London leave centre for Canadian service men which has been heavily damaged in air raids, has received a gift of £1,500 ($6,750) from an anonymous benefactor for decorations and alterations.

The donation is one of the largest the club, operated by its own board of management under the chairmanship of Hon. Vincent Massey, Canadian High Commissioner in London, has received since it was opened last year with funds provided by a group of Canadians resident in England. The Canadian Y.M.C.A. later guaranteed operating costs of the club up to $50,000 a year.

Two of the largest donations, both £10,000 ($45,000), came from Ernest Cooper, former Torontonian now managing-director of Gillette Industries Limited here, and C. A. Banks, Canadian Mining Magnate who represents the Canadian Department of Munitions and Supply in Britain. They are members of the board. Lord Beaverbrook, Canadian-born Minister of State, gave £5,000 ($22,500) and the Canadian Red Cross £3,748 ($16,866).

BEVIN BELIEVES

"You can understand my feeling about Hess when I tell you he was the man who collected an index card on every trade union leader in Germany and the Social Democrats and, when the time came, they were neither sent to concentration camps or murdered.

"I agree that any one who harbors such fantasies about England is silly. Over here we should call the people who believe Dr. Goebbels fools.

"I wonder if you find it as difficult as I do to believe that he flew to England out of mad sympathy for the British people? We agree with German propagandists that Hess wants peace for the German people. We agree that he possesses secret information.

"But is it not possible that his concern is for the German and not for the British people?

"Is it not possible that his secret information is about such matters as Balkan casualties the state of Kiel and Hamburg and the fate of Prien Kretschmer and Schepke and their unnamed colleagues?

"May he know more about America than some of his colleagues who have never been abroad?

What Motive for Step

"I leave it to you to decide whether it was very sane concern for the German people or very mad sympathy for the English that drove him to take this step.

"Hess must know a lot about Dr. Goebbels and his other colleagues. It is his job to do so. And now he is sitting talking freely and writing.

"It will be very dangerous for Mr. Goebbels and his colleagues if Rudolf Hess is sane after all."

Bevin's reference to "Prien, Kretschmer, Schepke and their unnamed colleagues" was of Nazi submarine commanders who have been lost or captured in the sea war.

He spoke before the Holborn Chamber of Commerce.

Expresses Own Opinion

Mr. Bevin made it plain in his speech that he was expressing his own personal opinion independent of government policy.

Glasgow residents said Hess had told several individuals with whom he talked that there was great distress among the people of many German towns because of bombing by the British Air Force and that he was weary of war.

Mel Harder, Cleveland Hurler, Miracle Pitcher of The Year; Cincinnati Drops To Sixth Place

Harder Stops Yankees for Second Time in Row With Six Hits

DODGERS WINGING

By JUDSON BAILEY

(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Mel Harder, who at the mellow age of 31 is a veteran of a dozen years' service with Cleveland Indians in the American League, is the miracle pitcher of the season thus far.

The slender Nebraskan, always considered a "hot weather" performer, already has won four games without a defeat.

For many years Harder was one of the best hurlers in his league, but even in his best seasons he never could get going in the spring. In 1935 when he won 22 games he didn't collect his first victory until May 30.

Consequently his six-hit, 4-1 victory over New York Yankees yesterday caused his Cleveland cohorts, as well as the rest of the American league, to wonder what level he might reach this summer.

Always Bitter Medicine to Yanks

He always has been bitter medicine for the Yankees and in his latest start he had everybody baffled except Joe Gordon, whose three singles accounted for half New York's hits.

He also had the help of three home runs — Gene DeSautel's, Clarence (Soup) Campbell and Gee Walker. Each got his first homer of the season to sink Red Ruffing, although he, too, pitched six-hit ball.

Boston Red Sox regained second place in the circuit by toppling Chicago White Sox 10-7 with a seven-run rally in the seventh inning, climaxed by a grand slam homer by Manager Joe Cronin. Boston was trailing 6-3 prior to the big blow-off.

Washington Senators set down Detroit Tigers 9-4 for the American League champions' sixth straight loss since Hank Greenberg left for the army.

Dodgers Wallop Reds

St. Louis Browns stopped Philadelphia Athletics 10-5 behind the steady nine-hit hurling of Bob Harris.

In the National League Brooklyn Dodgers walloped Cincinnati Reds 6-2 and dropped the world champions to sixth place behind the idle Boston Braves. It was the seventh victory in a row for the Dodgers, who earlier took nine straight, and was the seventh in succession for Whitlow Wyatt.

Pittsburgh Pirates plopped a 12-7 defeat on the Phillies after the Phils had hit three homers and scored all their runs in the first four frames.

The other National League teams were rained out.

GOOD PITCHING IN INT. LEAGUE

Newark Gains Half-a-Game on Royals by Splitting With Leafs

(By The Associated Press)

Like the driver who starts to pass a car just as the other fellow decides to speed up, Montreal Royals are having their troubles trying to move past Newark Bears in the International League chase.

Trailing by half a game yesterday, the Royals were all set to turn the trick, against Baltimore Orioles whom they had beaten seven times previously, but the Birds sparked up and edged out a 4-3 decision, although outhit 9-6.

Meanwhile Newark split a doubleheader with Toronto Leafs, winning the opener 2-1 and losing the seventh-inning nightcap 5-2 to stretch its margin over the Royals to a full game.

A seventh-inning home run by Catcher Tom Padden in the first game at Toronto gave Russ Christopher a tight pitching duel over Porter Vaughan. Herman (Aunt) Besse, making his first start for the Leafs, won the second game with the assistance of outfielder Al Rubeling, who drove in four runs with a homer and a single.

Good pitching seemed to be the style yesterday. Hy Vandenberg twirled a two-hitter to give Rochester Red Wings a 2-1 victory over Syracuse Chiefs, and Freddy Hutchinson shut out Jersey City Giants on three hits for a 2-0 Bison triumph.

ESQUIRE JUNIORS DEFEAT RELIANCE AIRCRAFT 7 TO 1

Softball Opener Sees Mike Powers Hurling Five-Hit Ball for Win

PEACOCK HITS WELL

Coupling good pitching with timely hitting, a combination hard to beat on any diamond, "Red" Townsend's Esquire Juniors gave notice they would no longer be the door-mat of the City Softball League when the "teen-aged" nine handed the Reliance Aircraft a sound 7 to 1 reverse to usher in the softball season at Coleman Flats last evening in weather more suitable for football.

Mike Powers, diminutive junior fire-ball hurler, was Skipper Townsend's choice to stop the unknown new Reliance "plane-makers" and the Junior moundsman came through with flying colors. Powers let the Reliance down with five hits, only one being of the extra base nature. In addition Powers whiffed eight and showed good control and a change of pace as he only walked three. In the meantime his team mates were making merry, swinging potent willows for eleven base hits and driving Archie Major, the Reliance starting moundsman, to the showers under a barrage of safeties in the seventhe frame.

Ken Peacock Shines

Next to Powers in the limelight came Ken Peacock, the Juniors' elongated first baseman from Foxboro, who swung a powerful bat last night counting three hits, including a triple and double. Peacock scored a run and his heavy bludgeon accounted for three runs driven in. The Esquire kids played airtight ball behind Powers, Guay supplying the sensational play of the game, a running catch of Hamilton's Texas Leaguer in shallow centre in the sixth to nip a rally. After Pryke's mammoth triple in the second, after which he scored, Powers was never in trouble until the eighth, when Rowbotham and Hamilton connected for singles, but the rally was nipped by some strong fielding on the part of the kids. Rowbotham, with a brace of singles, and Pryke's triple, was the extent of the most power shown by the Reliance while at bat.

Proved to be Opportunists

The Juniors proved opportunists by scoring two unearned runs in the initial frame as the result of two walks, a passed ball followed by two infield outs. Spencer and Cook hit in the fourth and Peacock drove two in with a double. Peacock's triple followed by Whiting's single counted another in the sixth as they terminated their scoring with two more runs on two walks, a fielder's choice and singles by Powers, Whiting and Yarrow.

Prior to the game the season was officially opened when His Worship, Mayor Thompson pitched the first ball, with Secretary Harry Knott at bat and President Clem Bowler doing the catching honours. Vice President Harry Rollins acted as master-of-ceremonies. The second game of the league schedule sees the Corby A.C. clash with the Point Anne "Cementmen" at the Flats on Friday night.

BOB MONTGOMERY MADE FAVORITE

Philadelphia Negro Meets Lew Jenkins in Overweight Bout

(By Sid Feder)

(Associated Press Sports Writer)

New York, May 15. — (AP) The 49th Street betting bourse hung out its odds today on tomorrow night's Lew Jenkins-Bob Montgomery fight. For some reason not even your best friend could tell you, the "fraternity" established the Philadelphia negro a 10-to-13 choice to finish on top in his 10-round overweight match with Texas Lew in Madison Square Garden.

On the records, this is illogical! Consider these details:—

1.—Montgomery already has been beaten once by Jenkins.

2.—He has never fought a main go in the Garden, which gives even the best of 'em stage fright.

3.—Jenkins still rates as the deadliest puncher the lightweight division has seen in more than a decade.

4.—Lew is still "the champ" and carries into the ring all the assurance the title usually gives the man who owns one. Now don't get the idea this corner figures the "Philadelphia Henry Armstrong" will be carried out of there on a shutter. Your correspondent picks Bob to whip the sweetwater swatter. But the fact still remains he does not deserve to be favorite in this fight.

Montgomery figures in this one because he dropped only a close decision to Jenkins the last time they fought. He also will have a weight advantage of four or five pounds over Lew, and he is one of those mysterious battlers known as a "hungry fighter", who can upset the most firmly rooted apple cart.

Washington Eagles Win

New York, May 15 —(CP)— Washington Eagles, playing their second season in the Eastern United States Amateur Hockey League, won the 1940-41 Championship with a record-breaking total of 42 victories against 15 defeats and eight ties for an all-time high of 92 points in 65 games, according to official figures.

Baltimore Orioles, who threatened the Eagles for a spell and even held first place for a while, finished seven games off the pace with 78 points. Atlantic City was third with 69 points.

GREEK NAVY AT ALEXANDRIA

London, May 15 (CP)—The British Broadcasting Corporation today quoted an announcement made in the House of Commons that a number of units of the Royal Greek Navy have arrived safely at Alexandria, Egypt. The BBC said the ships were described as "extremely useful and modern vessels."

HEAVY TRAINING FOR KING'S PLATE NOW COMPLETED

Warrigan and Undisturbed Remain Even Choices for the Guineas

TOP BOOTS OUT

Toronto, May 15—(CP) — The long training grind tapered off today and all that remained was for the weatherman to grant favorable conditions for the 82nd renewal Saturday of the King's Plate, the oldest continuously-run horse race in America.

Distance trials were completed yesterday and among other developments brought the decision of owner Harry Tomlin not to start his gelding Top Boots. R. S. McLaughlin's Warrigan and Harry Giddings Undisturbed remained the favorites among the field of ten or twelve Ontario-bred three-year-olds.

It turns out that the mile and an eighth jaunt, besides carrying the King's prize of 50 guineas and the Ontario Jockey Club's $8,000 added, will be for the replica of a replica. For the past thirty years a replica of the original plate had been brought from England and presented to the owner of the winner.

A local official handling this part of the historic procedure stated yesterday that this year's replica had been lost by enemy action in the Atlantic, and therefore a local firm was put to work making another trophy.

Seagram Might Win

Amid the subdued chorus of confident forecasts by trainers keeping their fingers crossed, J. E. Frowde Seagram of Waterloo last night interjected the promise that the race would be a wide-open affair. The Seagram colors have been carried to victory in the King's Plate on no fewer than twenty occasions and this year the famous black and yellow silks will be borne by Taffrail. The stable has been represented in the race every year since 1891.

Another owner with a peculiar sentimental interest in this year's race is George M. Hendrie, an outstanding owner and breeder for the past thirty years or more, who is retiring from racing. Hendrie will try for his last King's Plate with the fillies Passe Grille and Lady Wales. He is selling his racing stock later and confining himself to breeding.

CARLETON PLACE INCLUDED

Smiths Falls Ont., May 15—(CP)—The Smiths Falls Softball Association voted last night to include Carleton Place, Ont., Millionaires in the league this year, bringing league strength to four teams, three of them. The schedule opens next Wednesday.

REDS PURCHASE AN OUTFIELDER

Ernie Koy Passed to Cards in Medwick Deal Goes to Cincinnati

Cincinnati, May 15.—(AP)—Just what's the matter with the world Champion Cincinnati Reds is up for violent debate from the city wharf to aristocratic Indian Hill. The management admits it doesn't know for sure but is going to do something about it, quick.

The first overt step gives Branch Rickey of St. Louis Cardinals a $35,000 cheque, more or less, and gives the Reds, in second division of the National League for the first time since 1938, Ernie Koy, an outfielder.

The next overt step is not determined, at least for publication, but General Manager Warren C. Giles says:—

"We're going to get going if we have to change half the club. But we're not going to make changes while we're panicky".

I.E. the Reds aren't going to give opposition clubs a chance to pick up good ball players cheap just because the boys aren't doing so well at the moment.

Koy, sluggin 28-year old speedster who went to the Cardinals in the business that gave Brooklyn Joe Medwick, became Red property in a straight cash deal. Giles announced it last night, just after the Reds had dropped their fourth straight game, a 6-2 defeat by the Dodgers which pushed the champs into sixth place.

(GOSSIP) NEWS COMMENT

Actually all that was needed was Mike Power's strong mound effort and Ken Peacock's big booming bat for "Red" Townsend's Esquire Juniors to beat the Reliance nine in the City Softball opener last night. The youthful Mike has apparently forsaken his wildness that proved a bug-bear last season, as can be seen in his five-hit effort against the "plane-makers" last night. Powers only walked three and struck out eight and was only in serious difficulty once; that being in the eighth. While Mike was turning in as fine a pitching chore as you could wish elongated Ken Peacock, the Foxboro lad who was given his first opportunity to face strong softball pitching by Skipper Townsend came through sensationally. Peacock helped himself to a single, double and triple, in that order, to prove his batting prowess. The Foxboro kid scored a run and batted in three more for good measure.

Prior to the opening of the league Skipper Townsend warned this corner his 1941 Juniors would no longer be the door-mat of the league. "I've scoured the entire countryside and they'll all know we're in this man's league before Dominion Day," screamed Townsend, when we intimated juniors were still kids at competitive sport. Looks as though Skipper "Red" meant business, as his charges went through their paces like veterans last night and were much the better club. A little more batting power in the outfield and the kids will be the team to beat for the bunting. On the other side of the picture the Pryke-Kerr-Soden Reliance outfit didn't know exactly what to expect nor how to cope with the situation. They do today and immediately after last night's game the Reliance management sent out an S.O.S. for some pitching strength. However, last night's box score proves it isn't mound help they need, but rather some punch when their batters step up to the plate.

In Pryke, a former Windsor softball celebrity, the Reliance trotted out a third baseman who knows all the answers to this softball business. His second inning three-bagger, the only extra base hit collected off Powers, might easily have gone for a circuit blow, while he fields his position in a manner that proves he has played the game in better company. However, the same cannot be said for the remainder of the Reliance infield. Much controversy was heard after the game relative to the extended base lines and their effect upon the game.

"The base runner hasn't a chance now. Why the infielders can knock down liners and then boot 'em around before tossing the runner out," complained one well known softballer.

"The new rules are O.K. they give an infielder a chance to go after those hard-hit infield blows without being afraid of hurrying his throw and perhaps hurling it wild," contended another. Perhaps the only way to answer the question is to drop over to the Flats for the Point Anne at Corbys game Friday and judge for yourself.

Belleville is to lose one of her better class softball and basketball players in the person of Art Cole, home run clouter deluxe in softball circles for these few years back. Art has accepted a position on the staff of the Evening Telegram in Toronto after having been the district correspondent for that newspaper for many years. Belleville's loss will be Toronto's gain when Art Cole takes up residence in the Queen City on Monday. This corner and all those who have been connected with Art in sports and otherwise wish him success and good fortune in his new environment. Perhaps his loss to the Corbys A.C. will be the most keenly felt as Skipper Gerald Barriage was counting heavily on Cole's big bat booming out extra base hits in the Corbys' forthcoming quest for a softball title. Whether Cole will appear with Corbys against Point Anne Friday night is not known, but it is to be hoped Art will lineup with the local "mushballers" and bid adieu to all with a sterling performance.

The other Saturday 60,000 spectators witnessed the All-England soccer football finals at Wembley Stadium. Actually, the reports say, there would have been a much larger crowd if the authorities had not cautioned against possible traffic difficulties in the event of air raids. Hitler and his gang of cutthroats recently said Britain was using sports to drug the British masses into a state of bovine contentment, but apparently that drug referred to is having a lasting effect, much to Fritzie's annoyance. But now Hitler's outfit must find it rather nerve-racking themselves trying to conduct a war of nerves against a people which refuse to lose its nerve, thanks to small items like football games, and now that Canada is firmly entrenched overseas, the odd ball game to alleviate the strain that now seems to have bitten the biter. There is no better tonic we could imagine, to offset trials and tribulations, than good clean sports competition, something the German people have been deprived of.

Jerome "Dizzy" Dean, who personally asked to be placed on the voluntary retired list of baseball players, was refused his request by the Chicago Cubs yesterday. However, the Cubs' management went one better—they handed Dean his unconditional release and then turned around and signed him as coaching aide to Manager Jimmy Wilson. Phil Wrigley and the Cubs have been mighty generous to Ol' Diz, whose pitching strength was doubtlessly sapped by Sam Breadon and the Cardinals at the height of his career, when Dean was the chief mound strength of the Cardinals when the Gas-house Gang was first inaugurated. Actually it is the St. Louis Club that owes much to Dean, not the Cubs. After yesterday's gesture don't let anyone tell you there isn't any sentiment in baseball.

SPORT SPICE—Although workmen spent two days grooming the Coleman Flats' diamond, President Clem Bowler and his executive had better see to it the infield is rid of those gopher holes before some player breaks a leg. . . . The league leading Dodgers and Indians are setting a torrid pace in their respective leagues. . . . The Cardinals were in a trading and selling mood yesterday, they disposed of Outfielder Ernie Koy to the Reds for $35,000 cash and then traded "Fiddler Bill" McGuire to the Giants for Harry Gumbert and a bundle of cash. . . . Both are pitchers, but it would indicate the Cardinals are in need of ready cash as they've got most everything on the auction block except the batboy. . . . Remember Benny McCoy, who was in the news when he was made a free agent by Judge Landis in 1940 and signed with the A's for a bonus of [illegible] G's? . . . Just when McCoy was beginning to find himself with the A's, Uncle Sam beckoned his finger and McCoy is slated to join Hank Greenberg in the U.S.A. army the last of this month. . . . Who has more fun than people?

Sidney Crossing—Several of the members of the Bay of Quinte W. I. attended the Summary Day held at Stirling Agriculture Building on Tuesday last. A fine program had been arranged for the day, consisting of two skits, one put on by Chatterton Branch and one by the Bay of Quinte Branch composed of the two-day meat cooking school held in Stirling in the fall. The instructor, Miss Gray, who carried on the meat cookery class was in attendance at the Summary Day and conducted the afternoon program which also consisted of readings, one of which was very appropriate on the young bride buying meat before and after attending the cookery class by Mrs. Bert Bush and brought hearty applause. Miss Gray gave some very interesting slides on her trip through some of the war stricken countries. At the close Miss Gray gave a little talk on the different roasts of meat on display which had been brought through the leaders of the different branches who had attended this school. She asked each leader to explain about the roast she had exhibited and in turn Miss Gray complimented each leader on the splendid exhibit she had placed before the audience.

RECTAL SORENESS AND PILE TORTURE QUICKLY RELIEVED

If you are troubled with itching piles or rectal soreness, do not delay treatment and run the risk of letting this condition become chronic. Any itching or soreness or painful passage of stool is nature's warning and proper treatment should be secured at once.

For this purpose get a package of Hem-Roid from J. S. McKeown or any druggist and use as directed. This formula which is used internally is a small easy to take tablet, will quickly relieve the itching and soreness and aid in healing the sore tender spots. Hem-Roid is pleasant to use, is highly recommended and it seems the height of folly for any one to risk a painful and chronic pile condition when such a fine remedy may be had at such a small cost.

If you try Hem-Roid and are not entirely pleased with the results, your druggist will gladly return your money.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Back in the Saddle"

The finest cast ever to grace a western film is the distinction of Republic's "Back in the Saddle," starring the famous Gene Autry and featuring his ace comedian sidekick, Smiley Burnette, which is now at the Capitol.

Gene himself was recently selected for fourth place in the Quigley Publications' authoritative Ten Top Stars of 1940—an honor never before accorded a western star. Too, Smiley Burnette is listed among the top five of western favorites in many polls, though he has never had higher than co-star billing!

The supporting cast speaks for itself. Handsome young Edward Norris, who made a lasting name for himself in "They Won't Forget," "The Magnificent Brute," and roles with lovely Jacqueline Wells other films, shares top supporting and charming little Mary Lee. Other luminaries include Addison Richards, Arthur Loft and Bob Barron.

In "Back in the Saddle," Gene is seen as the leader of the ranchers in a dispute with E. G. Blaine, a ruthless mine owner who is needlessly poisoning the streams from which the cattle drink. Gene tries to restrain him, but is hampered by the actions of his ward, Tom, who believes that Gene is falling in love with his sweetheart, Taffy. Tom's misdirected energies finally get Gene and himself trapped by Blaine's men. Gene, with the aid of Smiley, fights his way out and saves Tom in a climax filled with thrills and action.

The hilarious comedy, "Meet the Chump," starring Hugh Herbert is the added attraction and is loaded with comical situations. The Canadian Universal News reel and the 5th chapter of the thrilling serial "King of the Royal Mounted." completes the bill.

Because of fuel shortage Sweden's chief air line carried only about 32,000 passengers last year, compared with about 60,000 the previous year.

Little Benny's Note Book

I was around at the firehouse talking to Mr. Riley the hooken ladder driver, and all of a sudden it got late and I hurry up started to go home, and who did I sed getting off the bus but pop, saying, Well, young man, aren't you a little late?

Well jimminy, pop aren't you? I said, and he said, The paneful fact seems to be, we both are, and although I've heard there's safety in numbers I dont seem to be convinced of it at the moment.

And gosh pop, today's Thursday and ma had to get supper herself, so that makes it worse, I said, and pop said, It probably makes it inexcusable, wich is worse than worse.

And we kept on quick walking home, me saying, Well hay, pop, I mean G roozlem, maybe we can get ma to arbitrate like everybody's doing in the papers. How about telling ma we're a arbitration committy and she can be the other side of the argument, I mean the arbitration, I said and pop said, By gollies there's nothing like keeping up with the times.

Do we represent capitol or labor, pop? I said, and pop said, Capitol, I imagine. So perhaps it's really fortunate that this is Nora's day off, or your mother would represent capitol too, and there's nothing more diffcult than capitol trying to get a fair break from capitol, unless it's labor endeavoring to get together with labor in a nice way. Wowie, there's labor waiting for us at the front door, he said.

Meaning ma, saying, Well, after all the work I've been through in that kitchin, and pop said, Yes, indeed, my fair laborite, we realzie your position and we hope you realize ours.

Yours? What's your position for land sake? ma said.

Me and pop just looking at each other ignorant, and ma said, Oh, go on back to that dining room while I have a shred of patience left.

Proving it you expect to get anything out of arbitration you ought to have at least some of the right on your side.

"Penny Serenade"

A rapturous love story, filled with tender romance, with laughter and with tears, as well the more serious things of life, is the current picture attraction, "Penny Seranade" playing at the McCarthy theatre all this week.

Starring happy-go-lucky Cary Grant as a casual, irresponsible newspaperman and Irene Dunne as his wife, the picture brings to the screen characterizations which to say the least are human, filled with sympathetic understandings so that their romance is lived by every member of the audience.

Taken from Martha Cheavens' novel and adopted by Morrie Ryskind ,the story is told by the flashback method, depicting Grant as the newspaperman who fell in love with musical salesgirl Irene Dunne. After a whirlwind courtship, the two are married and Cary immediately sails for Tokyo as correspondent, leaving his wife behind. Irene Dunne follows some months later with her arrival co-inciding with a disastruos earthquake which wrecks their home and she suffers a premature birth, the baby dying.

Saddened by the loss of their child, the couple return to America where Cary purchases a not-too-prosperous country newspaper and tries to refind interest in life by the adoption of a baby. Then, when the baby dies, Cary and Irene saddened by the tragedy, draw apart, with the husband unable to face the future and reverting to his former disregard for life. Their marriage is saved, however, when everything seems lost, with the adoption of another child.

AT THE BELLE

"Reaching for the Sun"

"Reaching for the Sun," Paramounts newest contribution to screen merriment, is now on the Belle Theatre screen. You won't have to reach for laughs when you see this film, for the laughs are so vital and hearty they just leap right at you.

Produced and directed by William A. Wellman, the picture stars Joel McCrea and Ellen Drew and features in its excellent cast such comedy notables as Eddie Bracken, Albert Dekker and Billy Gilbert. It is a lusty, muscular comedy, whose background, mostly, is a roaring Detroit automobile plant going full tilt.

The story concerns Joel McCrea, a clam digger in the Michigan woods, who gets a job in an auto factory to make enough money to buy an outboard motor which he intends to take back to the river and lake country to help him dig more clams. He is simple, roughhewn sort of fellow, who just can't help being funny as he tries to cope with an assembly belt. When he meets Ellen Drew, a pretty, sophisticated dance hall hostess and lunch wagon waitress, he falls in love and divides his affection between his newly-bought outboard motor and Miss Drew. On his wedding night he insists on having the motor in the same room. Soon Ellen, faced with a unique triangle problem, is jealous of the motor, and tries many ruses to make Joel forget it and his desire to return to the woods. Even the arrival of a baby doesn't solve Miss Drew's problem.

"The Cowboy and the Blonde"

The inside story of picture making is revealed in "The Cowboy and the Blonde," featuring Mary Beth Hughes and George Montgomery, announced as the added feature comedy attraction.

This light breezy picture reveals a fascinating piece of entertainment that will appeal to all screen lovers and features Alan Mowbray, John Miljan, Richard Lane and Fuzzy Knight. A special extra attraction is the exhibition of the new edition of The March of Time entitled "Australia at War."

What is Australia's role in the war today? This issue of March of Time presents a vivid panorama of Australia's war effort. It shows in what way her fate is linked with the future policies of America. It presents the famed Anzacs, the hard fighting soldiers of Australia and New Zealand in action and the events and climaxes now happening in the Far East. With large forces of Anzacs strongly intrenched in Singapore and the Mediterranean area, Australia's role in the war promises to be one of great future importance.

March of Time's new issue, "Australia at War," brings to the screen the full panorama of the part this rugged Dominion is playing in the Pacific crisis today—from Libya to Hawaii.

"DAUGHTER OF DESTINY"

By ELEANOR ATTERBURY COLTON

CHAPTER XXI.

After that tete-a-tete supper in his handsome apartments, Jose Macias seemed only to be waiting for Devona to break. His kindnesses, his thoughtful attentions, his every gesture only reassured her that the menace, if temporarily withdrawn, was an ever-present threat.

Steeling herself, she matched wits with him, returned smile for smile, gave not an inch in her defense. Careful to try to please him through pleasing his patrons, she daily, hourly, made herself indispensable to his business. Her smiling, gracious manners, her rapidly growing repertoire of songs, her varied and elaborate costumes—all part of her desperate effort to insure this job.

It wasn't long before the suspicion, planted the first time she looked into the secret wall safe hidden in his office, grew life-sized and intriguing. Something strange, some secret activity absorbed Jose Macias. She was sure of it. Something from which he profited huge sums. Something that had little or no connection with the El Mexicano.

Flushed and excited, or depressed and acridly bitter—his very moods were a barometer, Always the result of some mysterious telephone call, a hurried trip, alone, in the powerful coupe. If once she learned just what was behind all this mysterious coming and going—that might prove the solution to her problem!

Dale in the News

But she did learn the combination to the safe. Macias often insisted she wear the lovely mantilla and the jeweled comb. And just as often, she insisted the valuable ornaments be returned to the wall safe.

Once, she'd set her mind to it, it was simple to watch, to listen—without appearing to do so—as he turned the dial. Around three times, back twice, around again, back half-way. Not that she'd ever have ocacsion to use that interesting bit of information. Macias seldom left his office unlocked. Still, there was no harm in knowing. And perhaps some advantage.

Soon, however, her curiosity concerning Macias was brushed aside by a deeper, more compelling emotion. Once again, a newspaper item, a picture of Dale Brasher, a glaring headline thrust that too-familiar image back into her conscious mind. This time, the headline taunted her from the news rack in her hotel lobby.

YOUNG ASSISTANT D. A. LAUNCHES CAMPAIGN TO CLEAN CITY

Devona dug a coin from her purse, snatched the paper from the rack, her eyes racing over the fine print.

Young Dale Brasher, assistant to Los Angeles County District Attorney Martin, set underworld chieftains looking to their defenses only this week when his raid on the Ling Wang Lui Restaurant netted him real evidence in his war on the city's dope rings."

Dale hadn't missed this time! She flushed with pride in spite of herself. He would succeed. He was bound to. Hungrily, she studied the poorly printed photograph, read every word in the long column. The city needed clean-cut, ambitious, fearless young men like Dale Brasher, the staff applauded in a challenging editorial. The city was proud of this stalwart young hero and should do everything possible to assist and protect him in the dangerous fight he'd undertaken.

She Fears for Him

Protect him! The words leaped at her from the page. And with his every successful step, Dale was probably in increasing danger. Some hireling, some wild bullet, even an accidental shot from the gun of a co-worker—Dale's life might be sacrificed any moment.

But day by day, the mounting evidence of Dale's success piled high in every edition of the daily papers. Los Angeles, aroused to the importance of his fight, cheered from the sidelines.

He was succeeding magnificently, she realised, thrilled but—and anxiety rose again—at what terrible cost? Probably hundreds of people deprived of easy money hated Dale Brasher. It would only take one to put Dale out of the way.

One evening as Devona sat as usual at a small, half-hidden table eating her early dinner, Macias crossed the deserted dining room to join her. He'd taken to dropping into the opposite chair very often lately. His manner always casual, his courtesy unflagging, his intentions unmistakable!

"I see you are interested in our young friend's crusade," he smiled while he'd given his order to the waiter hovering solicitously. "Been doing a wonderful job, hasn't he?"

Because of the jealousy rising quickly into those black eyes, Devona tried to say casually, "Yes, marvelous. I only hope he doesn't lose his life in the process."

Macias nodded. "The boy has been lucky so far. He'll probably get it before he's through, though. He's in too deep, I'm afraid."

"Looks like it." She forced lightness into her tone, deliberately changed the subject, lest her telltale anxiety betray her.

But, a moment later when she glanced across the big dining room, recognized Dale's well-proportioned height, and looked squarely into his face, her own cheeks blanched.

Dale Appears

"Speaking of the devil," she managed flippantly, diverting Macias' attention with a little nod. "There's Brasher now. Probably looking for you."

"So it is." Pushing back his chair, Macias rose, crossed smiling to meet him.

Dale looked tired, she thought, watching the two men shake hands. Tired and much thinner. Once, he glanced over Macias' shoulder, looked squarely at her for a moment. But—as if she were only part of the furnishings, he glanced away again, indifferently. Not even a nod of recognition.

From the corner of her eyes, she saw them disappear into Macias' private office now.

"'Smatter? Swallow a fish bone? Grinning, Manuel lounged into the chair Macias had just left. "Or did you and the big boss have a lover's quarrel?"

"No, silly. Why?"

Freda's Past

"I don't know how you get away with it, at that," he went on frankly. "Now the last dame Macias had here—Freda Camp, you know—ever seen her?"

Devona shook her head.

"She hangs around here a lot—that is until Macias gets really sore and kicks her out again. She's nuts about him. And not bad-looking either. Or she wasn't! Poor kid."

"Why? What happened?"

"Oh, she came in to the big city from her old man's ranch all blond and blue-eyed and ambitious to be big stuff. And she falls for Macias' dark-eyed romance like a ton of ripe fruit. Macias got tired of her, of course. Now he's all washed up.

"But the little dope still sticks around, hoping for another break. I don't see how they figure to come ahead, these dames. But they do. Every time." He grinned, pulled himself out of his chair.

A moment later, Manuel passed her table again, whispered hoarsely, "There's Freda now—the blond baby at Diego's first table. See her? dough again."

Her Glimpse of Freda

Across the room at one of the side-wall tables, a small woman with hard blue eyes much too large for her pinched white face, sipped a drink slowly. Her suit was several seasons old, her furs shabby, her make-up too obvious. Macias' cast-off girl friend. Devona watched the girl's transparent attempts at nonchalance, her pathetic eagerness every time the door to Macias' office opened.

When he finally did come out, said goodbye to Dale, the girl's attitude turned definitely jaunty.

Then as Macias passed her table, her rouged lips curved into a smile, her eyes half-closed as if with charming boredom. She intercepted him with a little laugh, a hand laid lightly against his arm.

Macias' automatic smile turned instantly to a dark scowl as he muttered something, jerked his head toward the door. Then, deliberately, he brushed her hand from his arm, stalked off.

Only when the thin figure had disappeared, did Devona realize she'd been holding her breath; the tragic little drama she had just witnessed had taken only a few moments to enact, and that—if she lived a century, she'd never forget the passionate despair etched deep into that stricken young-old face.

Will She Escape Like Fate?

There, Devona realised with sudden, awful intuition—but for the grace of good luck and a few wits, might be herself! A misstep, a chance mistake, a tell-tale glance—her own security hung on so slim a thread.

Restlessly, and to get away from her own thoughts, Devona wandered toward the cocktail lounge, where a crowd was already gathering about the long bar.

It was too early to begin the Troubadour's serenading. It was too early to be needed as hostess or dancing partner. Still, she moved aimlessly through the room. Aimlessly, and yet as if drawn by some invisible thread, she crossed directly toward him—toward a tall, familiar figure standing alone near the end of the bar, drinking his old-fashioned with calm dispatch. Dale!

He saw her at almost the same instant. Their glances met, clung like high-voltage wires. Then he bowed—a curt, formal little gesture as definitely final as Macias' scowling shrug of a moment ago.

Furious at herself for having given him this chance to snub her, Devona returned his nod frostily, and left the room before the pandemonium that had broken loose inside her, showed in her own stricken face.

Battle With Self Continues

And later that night, alone in her room, she railed at herself stormily. Why did she let it hurt so? Why did she care? Why was she spineless enough to care for a man who, selfish, heartless, unscrupulous, merited only her scorn?

On impulse, she burrowed under the pile of handkerchiefs, found the newspaper photograph, tore it into a hundred jagged fragments. Raising her one window, she flung the white shower out into the darkness.

In the week that followed, Devona deliberately kept herself too busy to think, too weary to wrestle with the problems that beset her. Sometimes she'd face it all out, decide what she must do. But not so long as there was work in which to bury herself. Numbed by fatigue, the ache in her heart seemed gone. And might have lain dormant had not fate or chance or coincidence, perhaps, stepped in to rouse her in spite of herself.

It had been a busy evening—a fiesta day for Los Angeles, and a hilarious evening for the popular El Mexicona. Macias, his black eyes snapping, had seen the patrons crowd in, gay spendthrift prodigals. And Devona and the roubadours had sung and played themselves to exhaustion, trying to answer every request, contributing much to the festival spirit.

Two Visitors

So weary her eyes felt glazed, her voice sounding strangely far off, Devona was standing under a spotlight when Talbot Brasher and George Barnard appeared from the cocktail lounge. So unutterably tired, she didn't trust her senses, she thought for a moment that she only imagined it. But as they stood watching her, obviously waiting for her to finish her number, to step down toward them from the platform, she finally realized this was no dream.

"Devona Raebourne!" Talbot said under cover of the thunder of applause.

"Hello," she managed with what she hoped was a natural smile. "Good evening, Mr. Barnard."

"What in the devil are you doing here?" Talbot demanded abruptly.

"Singing. And—" she shrugged the little laugh at him, "the devil had nothing to do with it. Just necessity."

"But you're supposed to be in school in San Francisco—studying music!" he protested. "Not — not this!" He glanced around the crowded, smoke-filled room. "My God, not this."

Devona stiffened defiantly. "And what's the matter with this?"

"Well — nothing, of course," he said hastily, "but for you. You don't belong—"

"But I do."

Telling Her Story

"Look—" he scowled. "Isn't there some place we can go? I've got to talk to you."

She shook her head. "I can't leave now. But we can sit here—" and she led the way to her own small table hidden by the cluster of potted palms that marked the make-believe patio.

"Now tell me. What happened?" Talbot demanded as soon as they were seated.

But before she could answer, Barnard asked, characteristically, "Does Vara know what you're up to?"

She shook her head. "No and she won't—unless you tell her."

Barnards grin deepened the cavernous lines in his face. "Don't worry. I shan't open my face. She has enough to worry about as it is."

"But—" Talbot's thin, artistic face was still anxious, "you? Tell me, Devona—what—"

"There's nothing much to tell," she shrugged. "I decided that. I didn't belong in Vara's life and that the sooner I got out the better it would be. Disappearing made it simpler — for all concerned, I think."

Barnard approved with a nod. "Smart girl. You were right, too."

"But, Vara thinks you are——"

"Please, let's talk about you," she suggested when she could no longer bear the sympathetic concern in Tal's dark eyes. "About the play. Tell me——"

His face lighted for an instant, then the shadows fell again, as Barnard said, "We open at the Pdayhouse next Saturday night."

"And probably close the following Monday," Tal added gloomily. "The play stinks. But, of course, Vara's marvelous."

Happy for Moment

Devona's laugh bubbled up spontaneously for the first time in weeks. "Still the same incorrigible optimist, aren't you, Tal?" she teased, slipping back for the momnet to the self she'd been some four fateful months ago.

"It won't fail," Barnard said gravely, but Devona wasn't too sure he really believed that himself.

Tal turned to her, his enthusiasm betraying the ynlism of a moment ago. "Haven't you ever read it?"

"No—never."

"I'll send you a copy. And—will you come to the opening?" Drawing a small packet of blue tickets from his pocket, he pressed She'll wait for a chance to snag Macias. You watch. Probably out of two of them into her hand. "Please. I want you to. I'd appreciate it, really. Will you promise?"

So she promised: "I'll try?"

Then before thetwo men left, Tal said, his dark eyes huge in his thin face, "Please let me know if there's anything I can do to help, Devona. After all, I hate leaving you here." He glanced at the noisy group celebrating at the next table. "This is no place for a sweet kid like you."

Devona smiled. Who, eons ago, had first told her that! Now she smiled at his brother,. "Tal darling, I'm not a little kid any longer but—I'll try to keep 'sweet,' don't you' worry."

His hand on her arm tightened affectionately. "You do just that. I'll bebackoftentoseeyou."

"And—" anxiously she glanced from one to the other, "—you'll both keep my secret from—Vara?"

"Sure will. You're a wise girl. I wish you luck," Barnard nodded approvingly.

Macias Is Jealous

Resting her chin on one hand, Devona watched them weave a trail through the crowd toward the foyer. George Barnard, tall, a little stooped, zealous in his guardianship of Vara and her temperament, was glad Devona'd solved her own problems—no matter how.

Talbot Brasher, neurotic, sensitive, high-strung—was really her friend. She wa ssure of that. It was nice, she told herself as gratitude welled up within her to thaw some of the chill around her heart. A real friend. Something she hadn't had since—well, since Dad had gone.

And something she'd probably have great need of sooner or later, her new wariness warned her as Jose Macias made his way toward her now.

"Who were your friends?" he demanded instantly dropping into the chair beside her.

For an instant, Devona was tempted to feign ignorance. But, she caught the searching suspicion in Jose's jealous eyes, and thought better of it.

"Talbot Brasher, playwright, and George Barnard, manager-director," she said, assuming indifference. "Why?"

Had Bad Stomach, Backache, Headaches, Praises Syntona

Suffered 10 Years. Says Syntona Brought Relief After Everything Else He Tried Had Failed. Wants Others To Know About This Safe, Simple Remedy. Felt Nervous, Rundown.

MR. JOE H. MORTIS

When the stomach is out of order and food fails to digest, when the back and joints ache and the kidneys do not function properly; when the bowels are constipated and you have headaches, dizzy spells, and nerves are on edge, take a treatment of Syntona Herbal Compound, and you, too, may find that your suffering can be ended without the aid of harsh drugs or depressors. Here, for example is the splendid experience of Mr. Joe H. Mortis, 169 Wharncliffe Road North, London:

"Ten years ago I began having trouble with my stomach and it kept getting worse until even the lightest food caused great pains and distress. I would get bloated with gas and sour, burning liquids would rise right up into my throat. I often felt dizzy and nauseated. I had pains all through my back and my head ached so badly I would bury it in my pillows to try to stop the throbbing pains. I took electric treatments and I guess I took enough pills to start a store. I couldn't get enough sleep. [illegible] nervous and easily tired out

"A few weeks ago my wife suggested I try Syntona and I must say this medicine has done wonders for me. It fixed up my stomach so I can now eat regular meals without fear of all that gas, acidity, and heartburn. I don't have that dull ache in my back any more, and, for the first time in year, I am free of headaches and dizzy spells. I will surely know what to take if I get feeling like that again I wouldn't be without Syntona in the house now."

If you live in Belleville or vicinity, go to Dolan The Druggist and find out for yourself all about this grand herbal medicine that is helping so many people. Remember the name "Syntona" and avoid disappointment.

CAIRO SAYS BRITISH HAVE REENTERED SALUM

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

BRITISH SMASH AT NAZIS IN FRENCH-RULED SYRIA

Advance Is Made By British Forces On Fort Capuzzo

Salum Has Been Scene Of Heavy Fighting For Many Weeks And Is Important Position

FORT PENETRATED

Cairo, May 16.—(AP)—Salum has been reoccupied by British troops, it was announced officially here today.

A Middle East headquarters communique said serious casualties had been inflicted on Axis forces which had held the Egyptian border outpost, just across from the Libyan frontier, and some German prisoners had been taken.

Besides reoccupying Salum, the British Command said Halfaya Pass—whose hot, embattled sands British soldiers call 'hellfire pass'—and Musaid also were retaken.

The German High Command acknowledged that British forces had "penetrated" Salum and advanced on Fort Capuzzo in Libya.

Halfaya Pass is a narrow passage just southeast of Salum, between the Mediterranean shore and an inland escarpment. Through it passes the road back to Sidi Barrani, 60 miles within Egypt, which was the high water mark of the Italian advance and the Fascists' strongest forward base.

Next Step is Bardia

Beyond Salum, the first important Axis-held position in Libya is Bardia.

If the British gains signal another drive westward into Libya, it will be the third wave of battle back and forward across Italy's prized North American possession.

First the British army swept Marshal Rodolfo Graziani's armies back, in rapid succesion taking Fort Capuzzo and Salum last December 16 and rolling back the disorganized Italian armies to beyond El Aghelia, Feb. 9.

Then combined German-Italian forces swept the British forces, depleted for the Greek campaign, back in a lightning thrust, taking El Aghelia March 25, reaching Bardia April 12 and Salum and Fort Capuzzo the next day.

Guerilla Warfare

Since then, Desert Guerilla warfare as been waged along the Libyan-Eygptian frontier, sometimes in blinding sandstorms.

An exception is Tobruk, where a British garrison has been holding out defiantly since just after the Axis recapture of Bardia. For a month, the British troops have withstood continuous air assault and Axis penetration of part of the Libyan ports' outer fortifications. The Germans acknowledged today that the besieged British troops still are taking the initiative.

Berlin, May 16 (AP)—British tank units have reentered Salum, Egypt, near the Libyan border, the German high command admitted today.

Strong British forces also advanced on Fort Capuzzo just inside Libya across the Egyptian frontier, the communique said.

Only Salum, however, was mentioned as "penetrated." The war bulletin said "part" of the British forces made their way into the Egyptian border outpost and claimed "the enemy sustained heavy losses in doing so." Some prisoners were claimed.

NIXON ACCEPTS STATEMENT OF OLIVA DIONNE

Acting Minister of Education Says Incident at Nursery Has Been "Magnified"

WILL LEARN ENGLISH

Toronto, May 16 (CP)—Hon. Harry Nixon, Acting Minister of Education, said today that the incident last Sunday, when the Dionne quintuplets refused to speak English in an Ontario Government tourist broadcast from their Callander, Ont., nursery, has been "magnified."

Mr. Nixon said he accepted the statement of Oliva Dionne, father of the quints, that had he known about the program he would have agreed that the quints should speak English. The Minister expressed the view that it would be difficult to control any young child as to what he or she might say.

He added that there is no foundation in a report that the government in cancelling its guardianship of the five little girls. "To the best of my knowledge, the government is well satisfied with the way the guardians are carrying on" he said.

Yesterday Judge J. A. Valin, Chairman of the Board of Guardians, said in North Bay, Ont., that completion of arrangements for the quints to begin taking English lessons awaits only the approval of the Provincial Department of Education.

Will Learn English

Mr. Nixon said the children will receive their English instruction in due course but the Provincial Department of Education does not peremptorily order what they are to be instructed in. It merely gave advice and suggestions. So far the children have been instructed only in French, the language of their parents.

Dr. G. F. Rogers, Deputy Minister of Education said a recommendation is being made by the Department to the Board of Guardians that instruction in English be begun immediately.

Three half-hour lessons a week will be recommended but Dr. Rogers could not say whether Miss Grace Morgan, North Bay Normal School teacher will be assigned to the instruction. Judge Valin said yesterday Miss Morgan was to teach the quints.

The Deputy Minister said there is an agreement with the Board of Guardians that the department is in charge of the quints' educational program. Asked what would happen if the Board refused to agree to the department's recommendation, Dr. Rogers replied "I'd rather cross that bridge when we get to it."

MANY GERMAN TARGETS GIVEN POUNDING BY RAF

Large Fires Started In Industrial City Of Hanover—Shipping Raided

BERLIN ATTACKED

London, May 16. —(CP)—Strong forces of Royal Air Force bombers attacked Hanover last night, starting large fires in industrial quarters, and other big bombers attacked Berlin, Hamburg, Cuxhaven, Calais, Boulogne and Dieppe, the Air Ministry announced today.

Coastal command bombers raided docks and shipping at St. Nazaire and the German submarine base at Lorient in France. They also attacked docks at Ijmuiden, the Netherlands, a communique said.

Four of the attacking planes were lost.

Many fires were said to have been started in the industrial section of Hanover, manufacturing city 80 miles south of Hamburg.

(Nazi sources admitted British raids on cities in northern Germany and said some casualties were caused.)

Group Captain Wait To Be In Charge At Mountain View Port

Ottawa, May 16 —(CP)— Group Capt. Frank G. Wait of Ottawa, widely known in Eastern Canadian flying circles, assumed command of the new Royal Canadian Air Force station at Mountain View, Ont., a short distance from Belleville.

He had previously been on the staff of Air Headquarters at Ottawa, in the capacity of Director of Air Personnel. On becoming commanding officer at Mountain View he has the Air Armament School under his jurisdiction, and also the No. 6 Bombing and Gunnery School, which will open in the near future.

INVESTIGATE REPORTS RACKET PROMOTION

Toronto, May 16 (AP)—Attorney General Gordon Conant said today that reports persons are using civilian defence, and air raid precautions organizations and the country's war effort as a means of promoting rackets are under investigation.

One of the reports concerned a woman in Hamilton who was said to have been using A.R.P. work as a means of collecting ten cents from each person joining an organization devised by herself. Other reports were that persons were using the war effort as a basis for running raffles.

H. S. McCready, Deputy Provincial Police Commissioner, began an immediate probe into the reports.

Giant Liner Normandie Guarded Along With Other French Ships

New York, May 16 (AP)—A dozen or more French-flag vessels, including the giant liner Normandie, one of the most lavishly-fitted ships afloat, were under United States guard today in the Federal government's latest move against foreign shipping.

The boarding action last night by Coast Guardsmen—placing the French vessels under protective custody—apparently was similar to that taken against Danish merchant ships in American ports but less drastic than the seizure last month of war-stranded German and Italian ships.

The Normandie, her once gay red, white and black superstructure coated by rust and the grime of the city, has lain in donk here since she dashed into port five days after outbreak of the war, safe after a blackout crossing.

Police have guarded her since.

Every time her huge engines were turned over and whenever a crewman polished a bit of brass, the word got around she was going to dash for the open seas. But she wasn't painted grey, as was the Queen Mary, which lay beside her for months, and was the Queen Elizabeth, both of which went back into the war from which they had first sought refuge here.

Four other French ships were boarded in New York harbor last night by the coast guard. Ten men were placed on the Normandie to guard her, three each on the Ile De Normoutier and Mont Evert, which lay beside her, and the Fort Royal and Ile De Ouessant, which have been plying between New York and Martinique. The latter four are freighters.

ONE WAS PURGED—THE OTHER FLED

Seven years ago it was said throughout Germany that Hitler only trusted two men in full measure. They were Ernst Roehm, LEFT, and Rudolf Hess. It was seven years ago, despite this reputation for trust, that Roehm was assassinated in Hitler's bloody purge. Now the second Hitler trustee, Rudolf Hess, RIGHT, has fled Germany in a plane and parachuted to earth in Scotland. Insane, says Germany. Fully sane, says England's officialdom after Hess' imprisonment.

R. A. F. Attacks Nazi Warplanes at Damascus, Rayak, Palmyra In Syria

Cairo, May 16 (AP)—The Royal Air Force attacked German warplanes yesterday at Damascus and other points in French-mandated Syria, it was announced today.

The points of attack, besides Damascus, were Rayak and Palmyra.

Damascus World's Oldest City

Damascus, capital of Syria and believed to be the oldest city in the world still inhabited, is an important communications centre fifty miles southeast of the Mediterranean port of Beirut.

It is connected by air line with Italy's Dodecanese Islands, from where some of the German planes and war supplies are believed to have reached Syria, and is on the desert bus route leading to Baghdad, capital of Iraq, about 460 miles to the east.

St. Paul is supposed to have lived on Damascus' "Straight Street," the only thoroughfare of the city that is now narrow and winding.

Rayak is a rail town 30 miles northwest of Damascus. Palmyra, also known as Tadmor, in Central Syria is on a second bus route running to the Iraq border, about 100 miles to the east. This route also leads to Baghdad.

Reports from Turkey

Istanbul, May 15 (Delayed) (AP)—Unconfirmed reports circulating in Turkey today said that one or two squadrons of German bombers had landed in Syria and that the Germans also had transported light tanks and other supplies by ship from Aegean Islands recently occupied by Axis forces.

Informed sources said Turkey would maintain her attitude of non-belligerency despite any developments in Syria. One reliable informant summed up the situation thus:—

"Turkey," he said, "will not abandon her non-belligerency unless her independence is threatened."

This was generally interpreted as meaning that Turkey will stay out of the war at all costs.

The Ankara radio broadcast a report that "Axis officers in both Syria and Iraq are going about the streets in uniform."

Reports that the R.A.F. had been ordered to bomb Syrian airports created a tremendous stir in Ankara, where it was pointed out that if the fighting spreads to Syria, Turkey would be virtually isolated from the democracies with whom her foreign policy had been aligned.

Wrist Watch and Spectacles, Worn by Worker, Melted by the Voltage

Beauceville, Que., May 15.—(CP)—Wasio Rodrigue, 50, construction foreman for the Shawinigan Water and Power Company at St. Evariste de Beauce 20 miles south of here, was brought to hospital last night in a critical condition, unconscious and half-paralyzed after receiving a 30,000-volt shock.

Witnesses said Rodrigue was standing on a truck running-board talking to the driver when a high tension cable fell across the vehicle.

One hand and one foot were charred and one side of his body paralyzed. All the metal and glass on his body at the time, including a wrist watch and spectacles, were melted by the contact.

Seeks To Learn If Hess' Trip Planned With Nazi Connivance

London, May 16 (CP) — Out of the welter of controversy and speculation about Rudolf Hess' flight to Britain came the announcement from Major Vyvyan Adams today that he would seek to learn whether the deputy Fuehrer's trip to see the Duke of Hamilton "was planned with connivance and support of the German government."

Mr. Adams, Conservative member of Parliament, gave notice he would put his question to Information Minister Alfred Duff Cooper next week in House of Commons.

BROADCAST TO FRENCH

Washington, May 16 — (AP)—President Roosevelt said today that International conditions were too serious for him to interpret or comment further on the implications of his appeal last night to the French people to turn down collaboration with Germany.

He dismissed a barrage of Press conference questions seeking to draw him out as two hypothetical. Among the queries he put in that category were these:—

Is there likely to be a change in the status of Martinique, the strategic French Island at the eastern end of the Caribbean?

Will Admiral William D. Leahy, American Ambassador at Vichy, be asked to come back to Washington to report?

Would any additional steps be taken in the French situation?

To a remark that he had made his appeal to the French people, over the heads of the Vichy government, Mr. Roosevelt said his statement last night would have to speak for itself.

Reference to State Department

He suggested that the State Department be asked whether the United States might take action, under its agreement with other Latin American nations, toward taking over some European colonies in the western hemisphere if they were threatened with of chance of sovereignty.

Mr. Roosevelt said, too, he did not know whether France would continue to get two ship loads of American wheat a month now that there were indications of closer co-operation with the Nazis

Asked whether he intended to send a representative to the De Gaulle Free French leaders in London, Mr. Roosevelt said it was not a subject for discussion and he never before had heard of it.

NAZI PLANES IN SYRIA

London, May 16 (CP)—British airpower is smashing at the Germans in French-ruled Syria where Nazi planes and shock troops are reported making a swift infiltration further along the Nazis' route to the Suez and nearer Britain's Middle East oil fields.

A British announcement in Cairo today disclosed that the first British blows had been delivered on this potentially crucial battlefront yesterday, when German aircraft were attacked by the Royal Air Force at Damascus, Rayak and Palmyra, all in French-mandated Syria.

This followed upon a report by Reuters News Agency that German tanks and other light mechanized forces were occupying Syria and moving across her sand wastes toward Iraq.

Fleets of German long-range bombers and troop carriers also were reported landing on Syrian airfields. Reuters said its information came from the Independent French news agency (A.F.I.).

TWO ENCYCLICALS COMMEMORATED

Cardinal Villeneuve Heard in Broadcast Address on Rights and Obligations of Workers and Employers

Quebec, May 16. —(CP)—Cardinal Villeneuve, himself the son of a humble shoemaker, commemorated in a broadcast address last night two encyclicals devoted to the rights and obligations of workers and their employers.

He spoke over the French network of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation from his palace in Quebec City on the anniversary of the publication of the papal documents, one 50 years ago the other 10.

As he told how they had asserted "the right of the worker to more human treatment", the Cardinal referred to his own humble beginnings—in the "atmosphere of the working-class" knowing the workers' "problems and, sometimes their hardships".

Conant Requests Tightening Of Law On Book-Making

Toronto, May 16 (CP)—Attorney-General Gordon Conant said today he intends to petition the Dominion Government to tighten up the law respecting gambling to permit police to obtain convictions in cases of book-making.

He said the present law requires proof of use or material or paraphernalia seized and suggested that the law be changed to provide that the material or paraphernalia be classed as "calculated or likely to assist in betting."

Mr. Conant made his statement shortly before going into a conference of city, provincial and Royal Canadian Mounted Police to discuss a drive against handbooks on Ontario racetracks.

A Corvette In A Storm No Place For Landlubber With Weak Stomach

(Foster Barclay has just completed a long voyage aboard a Canadian-built corvette in the North Atlantic, sharing with the crew the dangers of wartime life at sea. In this article he ells something of the life and work of Canadians serving aboard these sturdy ships.)

By FOSTER BARCLAY

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Aboard Royal Navy corvette in North Atlantic, May 16 —(CP)—A corvette is no place far a landlubber with a faint heart or a week stomach.

A voyage into the Atlantic on a Canadian-built corvette was like riding bareback over a rocky road. My back ached and legs pained.

I wasn't seasick, but I was frightened when the Jerries started dropping bombs too close for comfort. But I got used to that during the trip, even as I believe I became accustomed to sleeping in a hammock with my clothes on.

Never Saw Such a 'Breeze'

I'm beginning to feel a little cocky now, but don't remind be of the storm. The skipper laughed and said the sea was "choppy" with "just a bit of a breeze." I've never seen a "breeze" make a ship roll, buck, turn, twist and creak like a rusty windmill.

I sought comfort in the wheelhouse, but the helmsman became annoyed. I bumped into too many instruments when the ship lurched. I tried the stoke-hole, but it was too hot.

I went to the bridge, but the wind nearly blew me down the hatch.

There was nothing else to do but go to bed—if thats what you want to call a hammock swung athwart ships—but not to sleep. There wasn't room in the 'mick for wet, stickey clothes, a life-belt, a tin helmet and a butter-hearted reporter. Off came the clothes, but that didn't help any.

Bulkheads Groan

The bulkheads creaked and groaned. I was sure the ship was about to break up, but somehow she stayed together. When she rolled to starboard I ended up in a heap at the foot. Then she lurched to port and I slid to the head. Stomach be still.

A Scottish photographer who was aboard groped his way into the room. His hair was tousled and his eyes bloodshot. He started for his bunk, fell over a chair, jolted into the blukhead and bounced into a corner.

Somehow he managed to flop into the bunk—but not to sleep. He was thrown out three times before pulling the mattress to the deck. But he wasn't safe there. Water gushed down an open hatchway and he was drenched. That's the only time I was glad I was swaying six feet off the deck.

KENNETH EDGECOMBE JOINS THE R.C.A.F.

Kenneth Edgecombe, who has been employed in the Superintendent's office of the Canadian National Railways at Belleville for the past 18 years, was permitted leave of absence for the duration of the war and joined the paymaster's office in the accounting department of the R.C.A.F. at Toronto today.

Mr. Edgecombe commenced his employment on May 16, 1923, and strangely enough was given leave of absence on the night of May 15, 1941, exactly 18 years to the day from the time he was first employed with the company.

In 1940 Mr. Edgecombe was President of the Belleville Softball League.

JUNIOR FARMERS ACTIVE IN WORK

Proof that the young people of rural Hastings are not losing interest in agriculture is the fact that since the first of the year no less than five new junior organizations, three boys' grain clubs and two boys' potato clubs have been formed. These five new clubs were organized largely as the results of the efforts of H. L. Fair, local Agricultural Representative. The work among the junior boys and girls of the county is one of the most important branches of the work carried on by the agricultural representative and the organization of additional clubs later in the year is expected.

Following is a complete list of the junior clubs now operative in the county: The Stirling Potato Club; Marmora Potato Club; Madoc Grain Club, Maynooth Grain Club and Shannonville Grain Club.

STIRLING DIRECTORS TO CARRY ON FAIR

Stirling Fall Fair will be held as usual this coming September, in accordance with the decision reached by the Directors of the Agricultural Society at a meeting held in Stirling recently.

President C. I. Hatton presided at the meeting and a lengthy discussion took place on the financial affairs of the society. An unanimous invitation was extended the Hastings County Holstein Freisian Breeders' Association to hold its annual Black and White Field Day at the Stirling Fair this year, with Messrs. J. B. Thompson and F. R. Mallory being named a committee to present the invitation.

LATE SOWN GRAIN NEEDS RAIN BADLY

Late sown grain and new meadows in the Hastings area are badly in need of rain according to Mr. H. L. Fair, local Agricultural representative who states that late grain is very patchy and that new meadows in many cases do not look as well now as they did several weeks ago. Fields in the eastern townships of the county are if anything worse off in this respect than those in Sidney and Rawdon, said Mr. Fair, that district apparently not having received as much rain as the area to the west and north of Belleville.

WELL-BABY CLINIC WELL ATTENDED

Yesterday afternoon at the Well Baby Conference was the busiest session of the Spring, for medical and dental inspection of the tiny patrons took place and all received serum for whooping cough. Dr. J. R. Guthridge gave dental inspection to 37 children, while Dr. R. Anderson and Dr. Ethel Noble gave a physical examination to 43 children. All 83 pre-school age children from infancy to five years of age received the first treatment of serum for whooping cough administered by Dr. G. S. Cronk. Miss Soutar, V.O.N., and her assisting nurses had a busy few hours of it as mothers and children crowded the rooms at the conference headquarters.

POLICE BLOTTER

Arthur Cole, Belleville, complained to Provincial Police the fact that a hit-and-run driver had run over his Irish Setter dog on Highway No. 2 at a point near Jones' Creek late Thursday afternoon. Mr. Cole provided police with a car number.

While patrolling his beat early Friday morning P.C. Evans apprehended an 11-year-old lad loitering at the rear of the Deacon Shirt Company premises. The lad was escorted to the police station where a skeleton key was found in his possession. Chief Kidd later released the lad upon instructions to attend his school today and report at the police station for further questioning Friday afternoon.

A lone inebriate and five transients shared the confines of the cell block at the police station last night.

Harbor Lighthouse Has Been Razed

Was Built About Sixty Years Ago

Belleville's leaning Tower of Pisa, or tilted lighthouse, which for many years has stood on guard at the entrance of the local harbor and which has been the object of much comment by strangers using the bay bridge road, is no more. On Thursday the crew of the buoy tender "Grenville," which this week has been patrolling local waters, started to demolish the old waterfront landmark and today only the base of the old structure remains. A local resident has received permission to break up the old building, to be used for firewood.

According to old-timers familiar with local waterfront activities, the old lighthouse, which for the past dozen years or more has given the impression of being ready to topple over into the bay, was built approximately sixty years ago. Substantially constructed, with a framework of heavy pine timbers, the lighthouse was sheathed with two-inch lumber, then a layer of heavy building paper covered by one inch siding and finally shingled. Every board in the structure was of first-grade pine.

The old lighthouse had recently come up for discussion at a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, certain members claiming that it was a disgrace to the city. Whether howevevr, the structure is being razed by the Department of Transport as a result of complaints as to its condition or by their own initiative, is not known.

Today a new harbour light guards the entrance to the Government Dock. The coal oil lamp which has burned steadily throughout the summer nights for the past sixty years has been replaced by a modern electric fixture, placed atop the west end of the dock-house roof. Instead of the old-fashioned manual control, which in the case of the former light, needed to be tended night and morning, a new time clock will be installed to turn the switch that will cause a red warning signal to shine out over the local harbor.

CORBIN LOCK GIVES BONUS

Five Per Cent of Aggregate Earnings for First Quarter Will be Paid

Employees of the Corbin Lock Company received a bonus for their efforts during the first quarter of the year 1941, it was revealed by company officials today.

"To partially off-set the increased cost of living, we are giving a five percent bonus to all employees of our company of this date. The bonus will be five percent of their aggregate earnings for the first quarter of the current year," Mr. L. E. McLean, general manager of the plant, explained.

The general uptrend of business, coupled with the efficiency of the entire plant and its employees, resulted in plant production that warranted the recognition received by the employees today.

Outstanding Card For Horse Races At Local Fair

Special Committee Named to Handle This Year's Entertainment

OTHER BUSINESS

In order to procure, what is claimed to be the best horse-racing card ever presented on Belleville tracks, directors of the Belleville Fair Board, at a special meeting last night, set aside a substantial amount of money for this purpose.

A special committee consisting of Dr. R. W. Tennent, Dr. H. P. Welbanks, Jack Lafferty, Adam Palmer, was appointed with full powers to act, to take charge of this phase of entertainment, at the fall exhibition which is being held this year on Sept. 8th, 9th and 10th.

Three races each day on the latter two days of the fair, at which outstanding horsemen of America will be in attendance, will comprise the racing events. Secretary Burke is already in touch with these men and present indications point to one of the largest meets ever held in the city or district. The horses will come direct from the tracks of the Canadian National Exhibition.

Secretary Arthur L. Burke was authorized by the directors to issue complimentary tickets to pupils of separate and public schools of the city and the town of Trenton, and of those schools within a radius of ten miles in Hastings and Prince Edward counties.

Mr. William Garden, owner of the Canadian Vaudeville Exchange, who has provided the fine grandstand entertainment for the Board during the past few years, was present at the meeting, and outlined a potential program for this year's exhibition.

Contracts Signed

Contracts have been signed with the Conklin Shows, reputed to be the best Midway on the North American continent, and which will be brought here for the three days of the fair, direct from the Canadian National Exhibition in Toronto. Special attractions for the children have been arranged for and will be included in the Midway.

An invitation to the Board to accompany members of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce to Lindsay in the near future, where the local chamber will assist in the formation of a Chamber of Commerce in that town was extended by Mr. C. L. Jewell.

Grant Longwell a member of the junior directorate resigned from the board. He leaves today to join the Toronto Manning Pool of the Royal Canadian Air Force.

Prize lists of the fair, with the exception of that pertaining to junior farmers, will remain the same as last year. No revision will be made.

Hon. Albert Matthews Visits Ontario School For The Deaf

The Honorable Albert Matthews, Lieutenant Governor of Ontario, accompanied by his daughter, Mrs. C. P. Fell, and attended by Lt. Col. Norman Alexander, Q.O.R. paid a visit to Belleville today, officially inspecting the Ontario School for the Deaf and visiting Albert College. His Honor arrived at the O.S.D. at eleven-thirty and was welcomed at the Superintendent's residence by Mr. W. J. Morrison, Superintendent, and Mrs. Morrison.

The three hundred pupils of the school with their supervisors and members of the teaching staff assembled on the lawn of the school where a platform had been arranged for the guests of honor. The well kept lawns, beds of red tulips and flags draped about the main entrance of the school made an attractive setting for the event, in the brilliant sunshine. Present on the platform with his Honor's party were Mr. and Mrs. Morrison, Miss Catherine Ford, Directress of Professional Training, Dr. H. E. Amoss, of the Department of Education, representing the Minister of Education and Mr. R. D. Arnott, M.P.P.

Recite Pledge of Loyalty

An interesting ceremony of breaking out the colors and saluting the flag, the color party for which was in charge of Steve Graziano, pupil at the school, took place. Led by Mr. Alec Gordon the children reciting a pledge of loyalty to King and country sang the National Anthem and then gave rousing cheers for the Lieutenant Governor.

Mr. Morrison in introducing the Hon. Mr. Matthews said that it was many years since a Lieutenant Governor had visited the school and welcomed him on behalf of the staff and students. His Honor was greatly interested in education, and was chairman of the Board of Governors of McMaster University. He took a deep interest not only in the education of boys and girls but especially of boys and girls who have not the same advantage as others. Mrs. Fell, his daughter, was the mother of four children, the speaker said, and she, too, had the interests of children at heart.

Congratulates Staff

The Lieutenant Governor, in addressing the pupils, said he had looked forward with keen anticipation to his visit to their splendid school and its fine site, splendid buildings, beautiful grounds so well kept by the members of the agricultural classes. He congratulated the Superintendent and his excellent staff for their fine record in teaching the children. Interested care was given the boys and girls by the matron, the maintenance staff and the fact that the school had the best health record of any in the province was an evidence of this care given by those in charge. He was looking forward, he said, to his visit to the classrooms. His Honor commended the recent step of the Department of Education in assisting the National Association for Assisting the Deaf which had already accomplished much, through this organiation new vistas, bright with promise, opened up before those so handicapped.

The Hon. Mr. Matthews gave an account of a recent visit he and Mrs. Matthews made to Boston where extensive activities being carried on for British relief showed the anxiety of the American people to help Great Britain. A strong pro-British sentiment prevails throughout the Boston area, indicative of the feelings of the American people.

Entertained at Luncheon

Following his address the Lieutenant Governor and his party were entertained at luncheon in the school. Members of the teaching staff, the officials of the school and their wives were presented to His Honor and Mrs. Fell. Guests at the luncheon, arrangements for which were in charge of Miss K. Daly, with serving done by the deaf girls, included as well as the teachers and officials, Mr. R. D. Arnott, M.P.P., and Mrs. Arnott, Judge and Mrs. Charles Cameron, and Dr. H. E. Amoss.

About two o'clock His Honor and Mrs. Fell paid a visit to three classrooms, to first year pupils of which Miss Grace Harris is teacher, second year pupils, Miss M. Hegle, teacher, grade one pupils, Miss E. Nurse, teacher. The use of hearing aids to deaf were demonstrated. A visit was made to the assembly room to observe rhythm classes, for which Mr. A. Gordon is piano instructor. A demonstration of dancing taught by Miss Helen Keeler greatly interested the party.

At four o'clock the visitors were guests of the faculty of Albert College.

POLICE COURT

It cost Izzy Sakalsky, 32-year-old Toronto huckster $25.00 and costs to realize that driving a motor vehicle while one's operator's licence is under suspension, is a serious misdemeanor. Sakalsky's chauffeur's licence was cancelled nearly two years ago following a court conviction. His driving privileges had never been restored and despite this fact he was apprehended driving his brother's truck through Belleville this week and found in violation of the H.T.A.

E. K. Follwell, local barrister, appeared for the accused and asked that the minimum fine be imposed, which was granted by the court. Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, K.C., pointed out that the fine ranged between $25 and $100 plus costs.

Enlarged for Week

Charles Anderson, 24-year-old Frankford man, pleaded guilty to a charge of the theft of $85 from his employer and at the conclusion of evidence submitted, his case was enlarged for judgment on Monday.

Anderson, according to Mr. John Trudeau, his employer at the time of the trouble, absconded the above sum while engaged as service station attendant in Belleville on March 9 last. Crown Attorney Donnan sought restitution, but Anderson was only in a position to make partial payment. At Mr. Donnan's request sentence was reserved until next week. In the meantime Anderson stated he would attempt to make amends.

Fred Clapper, Belleville, pleaded guilty to a charge of providing liquor to one Norman Corby and was sentenced to one month in the common jail. When Clapper was confronted with a drunk charge he replied, "I wouldn't exactly say so." This matter was immediately enlarged until Monday.

Auditorium Filled

The Collegiate Auditorium was filled with relatives and friends of the nurses and the stage looked most attractive with masses of early Spring flowers, ferns and flags. Mrs. E. M. Bassingthwaighte acted as pianist for processional music as the nurses took their places at the front of the auditorium, charming in their crisp white uniforms, the 1941 class carrying their graduation bouquets of red roses.

Mr. Mackenzie Robertson, chairman of the Board of Governors, most capably acted as chairman and following the singing of "O Canada," called upon Rev. C. V. Freeman, President of the Belleville Ministerial Association, who gave the invocation.

Civic Greetings

Mayor Glencoe Thompson extended congratulations to the graduates on behalf of the City of Belleville on the attainment of an important milestone in their chosen profession, a most important and noble profession, equally indispensable in war and peace. He presented the personal thanks and appreciation of the City of Belleville to the Women's Christian Association in their magnificent work in founding and extending the hospital, to the Board of Governors, the medical administrative and nursing staffs for their faithful and untiring service.

Mr. Mackenzie Robertson conveyed the congratulations of the Board of Governors to the nurses for the hard work and faithful services they had rendered. He paid tribute to the W.C.A. for its accomplishments over a period of years in building up a hospital equal to any in Toronto or Kingston. He expressed the regret all felt in losing so able an administrator, Gordon Friesen, who has entered the Royal Canadian Air Force, after carrying out in excellent manner his executive work at the hospital during its period of expansion. He also paid tribute to the hospital staff to Miss Thompson and her nurses and introduced the acting administrator, Gordon Barclay, who spoke briefly to the gathering.

Mrs. H. P. Plumptre

Mrs. W. C. Mikel, who has devoted many years of her life to the Women's Christian Association and the Hospital, introduced the guest speaker, Mrs. H. P. Plumptre, Toronto. Mrs. Mikel referred to Mrs. Plumptre as an outstanding Canadian woman who has proved a marvellous executive, a most capable organizer in all things of benefit to humanitarian and educational causes. She has held high executive offices in the Girl Guide Association, the National Council of Women, the Canadian Red Cross. She has served for several terms on the City Council of Toronto, and as chairman of the Toronto Board of Education. An honorary secretary of the Red Cross and honorary director of the Ontario Division of the Red Cross, she has four hundred and fifty-one branches under her care.

Mrs. Plumptre was received with enthusiastic applause by the audience, proud to welcome so distinguished a visitor. The speaker based her interesting address on a title of an article she had read in a current magazine, "Women on the Spot." Taking those words in their rightful meaning it was a phrase most fitting in Belleville since, she said, the women of this city had certainly been on the spot to provide for the needs of the community for no where else in Canada had she known of a hospital built by women.

In the slang use of the term, not only women but men and nations were definitely "on the spot" today. The searchlight had played on nations, revealing in some great courage and endurance that they had not known they possessed; on others the relentless spotlight revealed weakness, treachery and miserable cruelty.

Testing Time Comes

Women, particularly are on the spot for this reason: they have made great claims for equality with men, for equal opportunities, equality before the law, equality in all things. Now has come the testing time. Now they are taking their place beside the men in these harrowing days.

Referring to the founder of the nursing profession and the inspirer of the Red Cross, Florence Nightingale, the speaker said: "She was one of the great women of the British Empire." So clear a vision, so great an intellect, had she that Queen Victoria said of her that she wished Florence Nightingale were in the War Office she had such a clear brain. Feeling the need of perpetuating the work she had done in the Crimean War, she not only began the training of nurses but inspired the idea, which blossomed into the Red Cross.

At this point Mrs. Plumptre paid sincere tribute to the work of Miss Jean Gunn who during last war and in this war has been a source of knowledge and information concerning supplies for the Red Cross. She expressed the thanks of the Red Cross to all nurses who in peace time directed home nursing classes and in war time have given invaluable service.

Ideals Carried Out

Women and the nursing profession are on the spot, and it is inspiring to see how the ideals of Florence Nightingale have been carried out in peacetime, the patient endurance, and steady observance of duty. Such have been the qualities of the nurses, who have staffed the Red Cross frontier hospitals, who accomplished the dull routine of their work with little to inspire them but the inspiring knowledge of doing their duty.

Those who have chosen the avocation of nursing are part of a triumphant profession. These, who think that this world is given over to evil and cruelty need only reflect on the great accomplishment of the medical and nursing professions the great triumphs made by science, mercy and truth. Referring to the flowers carried by the nurses she said they had chosen the red roses of courage and of chivalry, the rose of St. George.

Mrs. Plumptre spoke of the loss the world sustained in the death of Sir Frederick Banting. His associate, Charles Best, was carrying on magnificent work, his treatment of blood plasma resulting in blood being stored for transfusion, being aided by the small grant given by the Red Cross before his work became public.

Women Take Their Places

This war has placed women on the spot and the world pays tribute to the way the women of the British Isles have taken their places with men in danger and hardship, and all doing a glorious work. Theirs is the kind of courage that can do the hard, less spectacular jobs faithfully and well.

"We in Canada," said Mrs. Plumptre, "must give up the luxury of evil speaking which so many people enjoy doing today. In England this sort of idle talking was discouraged, and stamped out. If we in Canada stopped bedevilling our public men I think we'd get a lot better service. Especially nurses who have so much intimate, personal knowledge have a wonderful opportunity to forbear from this kind of talk. It is a kind of fifth column action and there is a great deal of it in Canada today."

She counselled the nurses to continue their education, always keeping in touch with the latest developments in medical and nursing science. Education does not stop with graduation. She urged them to be of good courage never think that they are nursing "cases" but people. She wished them every success in their calling.

Appreciation of Mrs. Plumptre's address was expressed by Mr. Robertson. Vocal solos by Mrs. G. H. Stoble and Mr. John Deacon with Mrs. John Deacon as accompanist were greatly enjoyed by the audience.

Former Administrator Assists

Pilot Officer Gordon Friesen assisted in the presentation of pins and diplomas to the nurses and took this opportunity of thanking the W.C.A. the Board of Governors, the medical staff and each employe of the hospital for the co-operation, counsel and friendship extended him during his years with the hospital. Mrs. J. R. Abrams, president of the W.C.A., and Miss Ruth Thompson director of nursing, also took part in the presentation. The gold medal was presented Miss McColl by Mr. Robertson and the silver medal to Miss Gerow by Dr. J. H. Forrester, president of the Medical Staff. Miss Muriel Johnson was presented with the prize given by the Medical Staff for Obstetrical Nursing, Miss Thora Gerow the prize in surgical subjects given by the Medical Staff and Miss Elsie Lazariuk the prize in medical subjects given by the Medical Staff, the presentations being made by Dr. Forrester and Miss Thompson. The Florence Nightingale pledge by the nurses was taken by Miss Thompson and at this point she herself was honored, when little Miss Barbara Ann Mott presented her with roses, the gift of the graduates.

Congratulations Conveyed

Dr. J. H. Forrester conveyed the congratulations of the Medical Staff to the nurses. The valedictory was delivered by Miss Mae McCurdy chosen by her class to address the gathering. She spoke of the years of training as pleasant, if arduous, referring to the happy friendships, which will endure even if the nurses take different avenues of service. She expressed the class' heartfelt appreciation to the doctors, nurses and all those who had helped them socially professionally and devotionally. During their years of training Dr. Austin Walters, Dr. E. G. Kennedy and Dr. Richard Potter left for Army Service overseas, Dr. Bird is with the Active Service in Canada, Miss Youman is a Nursing Sister, and Mr. Friesen is a Pilot Officer with the R.C.A.F. A Students' Council has been organized and a Nurses' Christian Fellowship.

The Benediction was pronounced by Dr. James Semple.

Death Believed Due To Fall From Verandah

Dundas, Ont., May 16 (CP)—George Robb, 84, died suddenly today when he apparently fell from the deck of the first floor veranda at the County Home. It is believed that he lost his balance and fell

Mr. Robb was born in Beverly Township and farmed most of his life around Troy. He was a former member of the Township and County Councils, had lived in Dundas for the past 10 years, and at the County Home about two years.

TWO ENCYCLICALS

The encyclicals he commemorated were Rerum Novarum, dealing with the condition of workers and published by Pope Leo XIII, May 15, 1891, and Quadragesimo Anno which concerned the restoration of social order, issued by Pius XI, May 15, 1931.

Says They Condemn a Past

Cardinal Villeneuve said "the two encyclicals, in effect, condemn a past burdened with faults and errors in which an entire section of humanity, the most populous but also the weakest and the most miserable, was given over to intolerable bondage imposed upon it by a small group of men, most of them unconscious of the crying injustice of their demeanor".

The Cardinal said the documents shed a "light" which "showed itself through the gloom".

'And," he added, no one today can honesty profess economic errors which have created a society split into two groups: on one hand, a handful of wealthy men enjoying beyond measure all the commodities of life, on the other, a multitude of indigent workers reduced to distressing misery and all the doubts and fears of what the future holds for them . . ."

Rights and Duties

"Doubtless," he asserted, "the worker has not only rights, but there are duties also to remember: Duties toward his employers, toward society, toward God, the Encyclicals remind him of them; also....the inequality of human conditions, the necessity of toil, the munificent role of sufering, the eminent dignity of the poor, the fragility of temporal goods...."

"But the wealthy are told also that riches were not created by God for them alone, that all men have a certain right to them, that they are not permitted, in any case, to use them to satiety while by their side workers exist in adversity and misery. Trustees of worldly goods, the rich will be called to give to the Creator, their only absolute master, a strict accounting."

"....The Encyclicals did not bring an end to the abuses," the Cardinal remarked. "They have not yet brought about a transformation of society. But they already have determined very important changes, not only in minds but in methods, in institutions, in the laws.

More Consideration For Worker

"The worker now has more consideration. Generally, he receives better treatment, the state at least permits him to become organized. Employers have consented to negotiate with his representatives. New legislation is devoted to his health, to his lodging, his working conditions, the risks to which he is exposed."

Cardinal Villeneuve said that Pius XI "associated more narrowly the family to its head, requiring for him a wage permitting him, his wife and children to live; asking that the worker participate in some form or other 'in the ownership of the enterprise, in its administration or in its profits'; he sought to crown union organization by corporative organization which, in organized professions, would see employer and worker no longer as antagonists...."

"These reforms are under way in many countries," said the Cardinal. "They are not unknown among us. Devoted and conscientious men have given their interest."

BECAUSE BRITAIN IS FREE ...

Why does the Hun so hate Britain? Why does he bomb the shrines of British liberty and faith and British homes?

Because Britain is the chief opponent of liberty. So long as the light of British freedom burns in the island realm of free men, Hun policy is unachieved and so the Huns would destroy these marks of British democratic tradition and development.

Long ago in the days of menace from Napoleon, Wordsworth, one of the great poets of England, said:

> "We must be free or die, that speak the tongue
> That Shakespeare spake; the faith and morals hold
> Which Milton held."

Britain is the refuge of those who love liberty. She has been through the centuries.

The evil spirit of the Hun, which has been demonstrated in every way since Hitler rose to power, wars on the true, the beautiful, the good. Therefore British Commons, Westminster Abbey, the British Museum, St. Paul's and libraries which breathe the very air of liberty and speak freedom for the world are attacked by the enemy.

These attacks of vandalism are not incidental. They are part of a vast scheme and effort of Nazis to destroy the spirit of freedom if they can. Nazism is a slayer of everything that is true and good and free. It is the foulest political conception that ever developed in the mind of man. And yet some foolish persons talk of a negotiated peace with the Huns whose hands are stained with the blood of the free. Hard as it is to conceive the depth of the degradation of the Hitler and Nazi ideal, it is even more difficult to conceive a world order in which the Nazi gang would be the ideal of life. It would be darkness and death, not light and life.

Wordsworth realized what a precious thing liberty was and therefore he said, "We must be free or die."

But freedom grows and inspires. It breathes through the souls of men even in stricken lands and in those that still are free. Britain stands the glorious champion with right, honor and liberty her watchword. That is her assurance of victory and the hope of the rest of the democratic world.

PREPARING FOR THE LOAN

The Victory Loan 1941 is not a case of the people being asked to give, it is to lend money to the government on the best security, the Canada we live in, part of the great British Empire.

Canada is one of the great countries in the world today. It is able to make a great contribution to the British cause by aid of every kind, to make certain that peace which will alone mean security. In lending Canadians are doing the part of the greatest wisdom to help strengthen this country by striking at the enemy. Every dollar loaned to Canada is a blow against Hitler and Nazi Germany.

Canadians have read enough of the war news to know what conditions are in the Old Land, where men, women and children are with the troops putting on the greatest fight of history against the world's worst gangsters, the Huns, Canadians feel proud and their spirits glow with admiration of these heroic Britons.

By their dollars Canadians can help Canada to help them. Canada wants to remain free from bombing by a brutal foe and so her people will lend their money in the June drive. Canadians have learned something of the state of the subjugated nations writhing under the barbarous heel of Hitler's henchmen.

Canadians will lend freely for the returns are in precious liberty, let alone the repayment of the loan in the days of peace after victory.

SECRET WEAPON?

(An Associated Press message says that the Hebrew University, Jerusalem, "is working with the British Government to make explosives from orange peel.")

The juice of the orange is fragrant and fresh.
But the peel of the orange a traitor,
A snare and delusion, a thorn in the flesh,
and a threat to the peregrinator.
When cast on the pavement it brings in a flash
Mishap to the pompous or flighty,
Who treading thereon, have been noticed to crash
Right down on the seats of the mighty.

But who would have thought that the peel of that fruit
Had capacities still more corrosive,
And would not only slither but also uproot
And disrupt as a form of explosive?
The proof, it appears, will be promptly to hand
When Jerusalem's plans are completed,
How odd that the orange, though normally bland,
Should blow up when chemically treated!

Let's hope it is Hitler who'll presently reel
Under both of its manifestations.
That he'll not only slip on its treacherous peel,
But be downed by its detonations.
The sight would delight any patriot's eye
If Adolf, the meat-shunning Aryan
And all his New Order were blasted sky-high
By a blow that was pure vegetarian.

Two British south coast boatmen who were brought into hospital with wounds from Nazi machine-guns recently rescued and brought in from the sea five German pilots. Rescuing such hell-spawn who ruthlessly machine-gunned wounded Greek soldiers, women and children while they were struggling in the water is a gesture that only civilized people would pperform. One could scarcely blame the British seamen had they turned their heads, instead.

In the midst of a recent daylight raid two middle-aged women emerged from a small shelter somewhere in London. MICA AND ISINGLASS

Mica is one of the strategic war materials in which the United States is deficient.

The State Department recently ruled that no person may export even small quantities of mica without a licence.

After years of research, science has never been able to develop a complete substitute for this interesting and useful mineral.

Armies and navies simply can't be operated efficiently without mica.

The United States is the largest mica consumer in the world and normally it supplies about 20 per cent of its own mica, the rest coming chiefly from India, Madagascar and Brazil.

Canada, on the other hand, produces more mica than it uses.

North Carolina, New Hampshire, Connecticut and South Dakota are the leading mica producing states.

Mica is highly resistant to heat and splits readily into very thin, elastic leaves.

The word mica is Latin and literally means crumb, grain or particle.

A sheet of mica an inch thick may be split into 1,000 leaves as thin as tissue paper.

Transparent forms of mica used in lanterns and stove doors is popularly called isinglass.

True isinglass, however, is a gelatin obtained from the air-bladders of sturgeons and related fishes and the term isinglass is a corruption of an old Dutch word meaning sturgeon's bladder.

In 1803 a commercial mica mine was opened in New Hapmshire to supply "isinglass" for stove windows.

Since gunfire would shatter ordinary glass, mica was used in those days for gunboat windows, being the first "non-shatterable glass."

Now mica is used in electrical insulation, fuse boxes, electric light sockets, magnetos, radio tubes and condensers, telephones, airplane spark plugs, phonographs, submarine detectors, loud speakers, stove windows, optical lanterns, lamp shades, lantern slides, wallpaper, fancy paint, ornamental tile, roofing, lubricating oil, Christmas-tree snow, rubber and many other commercial products.

A shortage of mica is said to have been one of the reasons why Germany lost the first World War.

This material is absolutely essential to rapid communication by telegraph, telephone and radio.

Mica is believed to have been one of the first minerals mined in North America.

The Indians prized mica for ornaments, medicine and charms, and large caches of sheet mica have been found in ancient mounds in the Ohio valley.

"The important thing is that we get to know our South American neighbors better."

ON THE RECORD

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

Who Is Hess?

New York, May 16 — This is the fourth article I have written on the Hess affair. The others are in the waste-paper basket. For they were written under the influence of a melodramatic story, and the temptation was to write a film plot.

I am not a crystal-gazer, a criminologist, a student of psychology, or a detective. Therefore, I say at the outset that I do not know the answer to many interesting questions and I am not trying to guess them.

I am going to write about something I do know, namely the answer to the question: Who is Mr. Hess? Or who was Mr. Hess, until he landed in a field in Scotland to become "The Saviour of Humanity?"

* * *

Mr. Hess was the head of the Nazi Party in Germany

Hitler, under the leadership principle, and having himself assumed the position of leader of the nation, delegated the leadership of the Nazi party to his alter-ego and perfect shadow Rudolf Hess. When Hitler succeeded Hindenburg as head of the state, Hess succeeded Hitler as head of the party. Hitler thus gave him the loftiest position in the nation, next to his own, and a position in the party actually above his own — trusting, undoubtedly, that he would never make use of it. For it must always be remembered that in Germany, as in Russia, the party rules the nation, not the nation the party. The position of Hess was, like that of Stalin, up until a few days ago when Stalin first assumed the headship of state, secretary-general of the party.

* * *

What is the function of the leader of the party?

It is to be the mouthpiece of the Nazi revolution and the guardian of the party power. The party being in the Nazi myth the soul of the nation, Hitler took from his shoulders the mystic mantle and put it upon Hess. Hess thus became the Peter of the Nazi church: "Upon this rock I shall build my church". He was, of course, a provisory Peter, always subject to recall by Hitler, who still remained God the Father in that hell of a heaven.

Why did Hitler chose Hess?

He chose him becaues he could not choose either Goebbels or Goering. For these two men hate each other and one or the other of them has always been hated by some part of the party. There is too much blood on Goering's hands, and too much intrigue in Goebbels' head.

What was the actual job of Hess? And what were his powers as leader of the Nazi Party?

His job was to guard and represent the party ideology. He was the ideological liaison officer between Hitler and the army. He was a constant visitor to the front, where his function was to explain the meaning of this war. In Russia, his parallel would be that of chief political commissar to the army. He made speeches to the troops before offensives—morale speeches. Among many officers he enjoyed a greater personal respect than Goering, who is considered a little flambouyant for the Prussian style.

He was the apostle of the German youth. The former head of the Hitler Youth, Baldur von Schirach, degenerated into a fat satrap, and Hess took his place. The Nazi press has built Hess up into the official ideal of Nazi youth. Hitler is too lofty to be emulated. Hess is the model. Thousands of articles have presented him as the pattern of all the Nazi virtues — the man without a fault.

What powers did he possess?

He was the chieftain and appointer of all the gauleiters in Germany. Furthermore, the party being above the state in Nazi dogma, not an important Government official could be appointed without his O.K. He controlled the Nazi pork barrel. He was the head of the machine.

From the fanatical angle of the Nazi revolution, Hitler's own landing in Britain would have been less significant. Because Hess, by an act of God, i.e. Hitler, is the very incarnation of the Nazi revolution. So the Nazi revolution has landed in England—to what purpose? In an escape from Germany to seek a new home in England? In an attempt to create a new incarnation of the Nazi revolution?

How seriously does Hess take his own position? It's a very fascinating question—what Hess, as the representative of the Nazi church on earth, really considers his mission to be. Perhaps his bailing out of an airplane is, in his mind, a symbol of his coming from heaven. Perhaps it is a converted Mr. Hess who says, to hell with that hell of a heaven! I advise against being precocious in any conclusions.

* * *

Theology is a subject which has always fascinated me, including the perverse theology of the Nazi black magic. But I am more at home in practical politics. So I ask: What will be the consequences in Germany of the flight of Hess? On the army? On the youth? On the Machine? And on Hitler?

Now, first of all, from the point of view of the German army. Hess is a traitor and a deserter. Should he return to Germany he would technically have to be court-martialled.

What does the army think of Hitler's personal representative—the man for whom Hitler alone is responsible? The man who is the incorporation of the Nazi Party? Does the army think that the Nazi Party is a reliable instrument for leading the state in time of war?

Or did someone put Hess up to this flight? And if so, who? The army? Nothing can be ruled out, in the Gothic madness of present-day Germany.

* * *

This much, however, is obvious. The single person in the party who stands to profit by Hess' desertion is Goering, and the incident decreases the prestige of Hitler and increases the prestige of the army.

What is the effect on the Nazi machine? Hitler, who cannot support Hess, has got to explain him to every last member of the machine of which Hess was the head.

What is the effect on the youth? The model who has been systematically press-agented to the youth has deserted for peace.

What will be the effect on the morale of the party? Hitler has got a hard job of explanation.

What will be the immediate political effect?

First of all, there is a job open. And that will mean an internal struggle of party careerists to get it. Hitler, of course, has taken it himself. But he did not want it. He wanted to be the head of the state, with his shadow as the head of the party. Now he has to be both, at a moment when the party has been gravely compromised and almost certainly demoralized.

* * *

It so happens that the outstanding political events of the last days have been: The announcement that Stalin and Hitler were going to sit down together—an event that certainly is not being received with universal acclaim in Germany, especially in the party. The announcement that Admiral Darlan and Hitler have reached an agreement accompanied by a press campaign designed to hold off the United States; the appointment of Lord Beaverbrook, a former appeaser, directly under Churchill; and the postponement of President Roosevelt's speech.

As an old and experienced journalist, I suspect a connection between all these things and the most sensational airplane flight since Lindbergh's.

Should Hess have sincerely fled Germany taking the Nazi ideology entrusted to him with him, Germany would be left in charge of the army, with a demoralized Nazi Party, and the spirit of Lundendorff would be in the saddle again—unless Hitler can perform a miracle. That would raise certain hopes and a great many questions. One might ask what peace Ludendorff would have asked for if any, were he in the military position of Goering today?

At any rate, there is an old superstition in Germany about the man who loses his shadow. They say that a man is measured by the length of the shadow he casts. And if he casts none. . .?

Hail Shoemaker As The Founder Of Probation

New York (CP)—Boston Police Court in 1841, thick with the sultry air of a close August morning, crowded with the casual and the curious, presented no different appearance from that of countless mornings before.

But by an incident of that day's proceedings, 100 years ago, made a cause celebre for the National Probation Association and 17,000 probation workers, members and contributors throughout the United States and Canada uniting to do honor to John Augustus in 1941. Many Canadian probation officers are members of the Association.

Sharp raps from the judge's gavel that morning a century ago, silenced from time to time the surging babble of murmuring, rustling sounds, and just as regularly the court pronounced, one after another, the unhappy fate of Boston's wayward citizens. Sentence was being passed on the latest of these when the door from the lockroom was opened and an officer entered, leading a wretched looking man charged with being a "common drunkard."

But before the judge could sentence him like his fellows, to the House of Correction, there rose from his place a "fidgety old fellow, whose skin looked like a piece of brown parchment." With no hesitation he addressed the court: "Your Honor, if this man be given another chance I will take him under my care and answer to the court for his conduct. Jail will ruin him!"

Before the judge they stood, the prisoner and a determined yet respectful Boston shoemaker, John Augustus. Impressed with the earnestness and the expression of firm resolve of the suppliant, the judge agreed.

The prisoner was bailed in custody of John Augustus and following a period of probation, ordered to appear for sentence. When later the man returned to the court, "no one, not even the scrutinizing officers, would have believed that he was the same person."

Promoting Interest

This was the beginning of the probation movement in the world, and through it countless thousands of men and women have been spared imprisonment and given a chance to retrieve themselves.

The Board of Trustees and the Professional Council of the National Probation Association, under whose guidance a program has been arranged, have, for the John Augustus Centennial Year of 1941, resolved to strengthen interest and understanding between citizens and their courts and further acquaint the public with probation and parole, and to enlist its aid in improving these services on all fronts; to stress probation, parole, juvenile courts and crime prevention as common sense approaches to the problem of crime; to raise standards of personnel, eliminate political interference with the courts, and to urge more progressive statutes where needed.

Although events of the John Augustus Centennial will culminate in the national conference of the Association in Boston, May 29-31, interest will continue throughout the year. Regional and local meetings will observe the aniversary. Probation sessions will be held in connection with the American Prison Congress which meets in San Francisco in August.

Father of Probation

John Augustus was born in Burlington, then a part of Woburn, Massachusetts in 1784. He moved to Lexington in 1805 or 180e and there conducted his shoemaking business.

In 1819 Augustus conveyed eight or nine acres of his land to the trustees of Lexington Academy for the purpose of erecting the academy. He later became one of the trustees.

Thre is evidence that even in those early days in Lexington, John Augustus was interested in helping his fellowmen. Edwin B. Worthen, corresponding secretary of the Lexington Historical Society, reports that old tax records of the town indicate that for seven years—from 1821 to 1828—John Augustus paid poll taxes for a number of men besides members of his family. In 1823 and 1824 he paid such taxes for 12 persons who are presumed to have been shoe workers in his employ.

In 1827 he moved to Boston, where he continued his labors as bootmaker. It was in 1841 that he became, without official status, the first probation officer in the world.

During the remaining 18 years of his life Augustus "bailed out" 2,000 defendants who he believed showed promise of reformation. Out of that entire number only 10 are said to have absconded.

MINERVA MEANT WELL

Minerva Samantha Green, whose name
Is purely fictional, be it said,
Referring to nobody, living or dead,
Was a highly neighborly, motherly dame
Who loved to visit the sick-a-bed.

Minerva loved trouble, if 'twasn't her own,
Other folks' sorrow to her was sweet.
On errands of mercy she roamed the street.
She moved right in where a tear was shown
And right on the dot took charge complete.

Minerva meant well, as the neighbors knew,
But wherever she went she took command;
Ruled trouble's realm with an iron hand;
Told friend and relative what to do
And where to be seated and where to stand.

She answered the door and the telephone.
She settled decisively every doubt;
Moved chairs and tables and things about,
Till some one who wished to be let alone
Got her shawl and bonnet and ushered her out.

Health And Morale Of Shelters

Lord Horder, speaking in London at the Royal Society of Arts on the modern troglodyte, said that the health of the shelterers had remained remarkably good. "Shelter disease" as such had not appeared, and, what was perhaps even more remarkable, even lice and bugs had been difficult to find. Yet at one time a great deal of anxious thought had been given to the question of airing, cleaning, and disinfecting the shelterers' bedclothes.

After saying that no praise could be too high for that vast and anonymous body of men and women who by remaining in their homes or at their posts had reduced the problem of public shelters to much smaller dimensions than would otherwise have been the case. Lord Horder said that he wanted to know a great deal more about the modern troglodyte before considering him reprehensible, as many people seemed to do. He wished there had been time to make a more extensive census of some of the big public shelters to learn not only where the shelterers came from but why they came. The result would have been illuminating.

• • •

The shelterers were mainly composed of three groups. There were those bombed from their homes, who should instead go to rest centres, though some might have very good reasons for not doing what they should. This group had become much smaller as its members were being re-housed in increasing numbers.

The second group included shelterers whose homes had no protection within or without, or whose "Andersons" had become uninhabitable, or whose communal shelters had no amenities.

In the third group, generally speaking, of poorer people, Lord Horder included those who by birth, status, race, or type were unable to stand up to the terror of the "blitz" and of the noises accompanying it. It was a terrible indictment of our social system that many of our citizens were enjoying happier conditions than they had known before night bombing began.

• • •

"These folk," said Lord Horder, "enjoy a communal life, though of a rudimentary sort, which breeds a spirit of good temper and dignity. It enables them to adapt themselves to the nation's exigency with spirit, and the net effect upon their morale is good. It is superficial, entirely theoretical, and an erroneous view to take of the mass of shelterers that their morale is poor.

"It is a humiliating thought that it should have needed a war and life underground for half the twenty-four hours to achieve a result which is bringing joy to the hearts of our social workers. Yet such is the case. The mood of these people is plastic, and they offer a field for medical education as never before. They have, and they appreciate, free medical aid. Who Pays The Wedding Expenses?

Most of the wedding expenses are the responsibility of the bride and her family, who must decide on the budget that can be spent on this important occasion. Then, with the list of expenses in mind, they decide what kind of wedding they can afford, what features they consider most worthy of emphasis, and what they think is the wisest apportioning of the sum that can be spent.

Happily for most budgets, it is not so much the amount of money spent as how it is spent that determines the charm of a wedding. The secret is in careful planning of time, in wise forethought, intelligent attention to every detail of the arrangements.

The wedding expenses of the bride and her family:

Bride's wedding costume (dress, veil, and so forth).

Bride's trousseau and household linens.

All expenses connected with the wedding invitations, cards, announcements.

All expenses (with the exception of the fee or gift to the minister) connected with the church or wherever the ceremony is to be performed; floral decorations, music, fees.

All expenses connected with the reception or wedding breakfast or dinner wherever it takes place; floral decorations, food, music, service, and so forth.

Bouquets of the bridal attendants; maid of honor, bridesmaid, flower girls.

Gifts to the bridal attendants.

Bridal photographs.

Cars for the bridal party.

The bridegroom's expenses:
Wedding ring.
Marriage license.
Wedding present to the bride.
Bride's bouquet (usually).

A corsage for the bride's mother, and a corsage for his mother.

The fee or gift to the minister.

Gifts to his best man and ushers, and also their ties, gloves and boutonnieres.

The car in which he and his best man come to the ceremony.

Expenses of the wedding trip.

Sometimes the bride's family buys the bouquet for the bride as well as those for her attendants, but usually the bridegroom abides by the romantic custom of buying his bride's bouquet. The bridegroom may ask for the privilege of paying for the flowers for the bride's attendants, consulting with the bride about her choice for these flowers. The thoughtful bridegroom remembers to send his bride a corsage to wear with her traveling costume.

Advice to the Lovelorn

Jealousy Murders Inspired by Inferiority Complex

The tragic thing about jealousy is that if you didn't create it, encourage it, feed it and sacrifice your heart to it, it would not exist. Also, you're jealous because you feel inferior.

The papers have startled us recently with a series of revolting crimes inspired by jealousy. The case, for instance, of those two titled Englishmen, members of the same regiment in India. The murdered man, "a belted Earl" and all that sort of thing, was a widower holding a title, one of the most honorable in Scotland.

At first glance, the murder had every appearance of suicide. The dead man was found with his service revolver beside him. By chance a second wound was discovered, impossible to have been self-inflicted. The Earl had been attentive to the older man's wife, a bride of a few months. In a jealous frenzy, the baronet flung aside loyalty to country, regiment and his superior officer. He made of his young wife, whether she was guilty or not guilty, a byword in British Army circles.

In spite of the titles and position of all parties concerned, the affairs had a raw jungle flavor which rocked England in spite of its almost nightly blitzkriegs.

Another murder, even more revolting, had to do with the jealous rage of a young man whose wife won a beauty contest. Having his wife acclaimed "the most beautiful brunette" enraged the husband from whom she had separated, pending a divorce.

He came to their home, murdered not only her mother but his own infant son, a baby of two. He tried to complete the job by stabbing his wife; she survived, and it now looks as if she would make a complete recovery. Nothing gained for the double murder, but the probability of the electric chair.

There was also the story of the wife, no longer young, who brutally destroyed with acid the face of a woman of whom she was jealous. But why continue the sorry tale? Tomorrow's papers may have an entirely new crop of jealousy-inspired crimes.

Fear that comes from self-distrust is the basis of this jungle emotion. The cure, as psychiatrists have long pointed out, is to live down your inferiority complex. Think better of your own endowments. A life sentence or the electric chair is a heavy price to pay for running berserk.

Granted the worst—that some vamp has cast her spell over an adored husband, or that some younger and better endowed man has turned a young wife's head — it's asking almost more than human nature is capable of, to suggest that a man or a woman be calm under these circumstances. But a person can be safe even if he finds it hard to be always sane.

The law has its remedy for infidelity. Even the chains of incompatability, mental cruelty and other sources of unhappiness in married life may be decently broken. It's the brooding day and night that causes men and women to commit these crimes, dwelling day and night on the thought that your love—the best you had to give—has been betrayed. Don't let yourself down — think well of yourself.

Fashion Flashes

THERE'S A SALAD look to many of the fashions, what with so much green being used. Two shades of green are used for a good-looking silk suit, the light green a lettuce shade, the dark shade a cabbage green. Composition buttons that look like asparagus tips are used for the double-breasted jacket.

CARRY YOUR BAG with pride. A smart top handle pouch is in scarlet calfskin, very much gathered onto a twisted rope frame made of clear, glass-like plastic.

HANDS OUT for the new gloves. Navy blue suede makes a nice-looking glove. The wide gauntlet cuff is cut-out in lacy eyelet design to show a lining of scarlet leather.

FIRST DANCE frocks usually have an ethereal quality. A beauty is in pale blue, the entire frock made of alternate tiny lace insertions and tiny self-ruffles. Square neckline, short sleeve and wide skirt.

"No amount of study or learning will make a man a leader unless he has the natural qualities of one."

DR. DAFOE'S COLUMN on the Quintuplets and the Care of Your Children

No Justification Found For Belief Premature Birth Affects Mentality

I'm sure every parent at some time or other looks at the baby and finds a question running through his or her mind: "Will he be normal when he grows up?"

Well, thank goodness, very few children today do not grow up to be normal men and women, so there isn't very much for any parent to worry about so long as the child is given the proper care which any child in this country can get today.

But sometimes babies will exhibit some difference from the concept of what is normal, that fills mothers and fathers with worry and fear. They are not made any easier in mind by the prevalence of a large number of persistent superstitions about babies. Such, for example as that which was the cause of the worry of a mother who wrote me the other day.

She has had two other children, both of whom were normal in every way. "But," she adds, "my last baby was born prematurely, at about seven months. She has lived and seems to be catching up physically. The other day I overheard a neighbor say that a premature baby could never have a normal mentality. I have worried about this very much, but I haven't mentioned it to my husband, because I don't want to worry him too. Could you tell me, is prematurity a bar to proper mental development? Will my baby be under par?"

Well, circumstances made me something of an expert in this particular branch of medical science For the Dionne Quintuplets were born more than two months before their time.

If the Quints are under par mentally, then all the children I know are too. For all the evidence so far is that the Quints, one and all, are above normal in intelligence.

If Quintuplets, born over two months before their time, in a farmhouse with absolutely no conveniences, can live and grow into five girls that are as smart as any you'll meet anywhere, then any premature child can overcome any handicaps imposed by the circumstances of the birth. Charles Darwin, the great scientist, of evolution was a premature child; so was his forerunner, Georges Cuvier who made discoveries in anatomy upon which most of our knowledge today is based. The great English scientist, Isaac Newton was literally born before his time, so was Voltaire, the great essayist, playright and wit. Napoleon was a "premie," and so was Victor Hugo, the great French writer.

Premature babies present plenty of worries and problems to both doctor and parent because of the special treatment and special attention they require in infancy. If they get this, there is no reason to worry over either mental or physical development. That will take care of itself.

MEMBERS PLEAD FOR THOSE PAID LOW SALARIES

House, However, Accepts Increases in National Defence Tax

LENGTHY DEBATE

(By Frank Flaherty)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, May 16.—(CP)— Confronted by Finance Minister Ilsley with the problems of devising another way of finding the money, the House of Commons last night reluctantly accepted increases in the National Defence Tax — the wartime levy by which the government taps incomes of single persons as low as $660 and married persons as low as $1,200.

In a debate which continued for several hours many members voiced protests and offered counter-suggestions but Mr. Ilsley said he saw no fairer way of finding the money. The protests led M. J. Coldwell, Acting C.C.F. leader to predict the increase might have difficulty in passing if put to a vote. Mr. Ilsley said that might be so, but asked if as an alternative the House would approve an increase in the sales tax from eight to ten per cent. A chorus of "No" was the answer.

Will Add $80,000,000

The main protests centred on the way the tax affects the low-income group, and most of the suggestions were to the effect it should not start at such low levels. Mr. Ilsley explained the increases from two to five and from three to seven per cent were expected to add $80,000,000 to the government's revenue.

In response to questions he produced an opinion from a tax offial that if incomes up to $750 for single persons and $1,400 for married persons were exempted the loss to the treasury would be between $15,000,000 and $20,000,000.

Conservative House Leader Hanson, first to protest, said he had not thought it would amount to so much and said he was satisfied.

Can See Quandry

"If the amount is substantial I can see the quandry the minister is in," said Mr. Hanson. "If we ask him to take off the $23,000,000 it is up to the members to be constructive and suggest some other course. I do not think you will get it out of a meal tax and there would be objections to that.

"I doubt if you would get it out of an amusement tax as has been suggested. A member suggests the only means of getting it is out of sweepstakes. I do not know that I agree with that."

During the day Mr. Ilsley announced a popular change in the Budget taxation proposals when he said fares of members of the forces in uniform and proceeding leave would be exempt from the 10 per cent tax on railway, steamship, bus and airline tickets.

Labor Minister McLarty announced the Unemployment Insurance Act would come into operation July 1. On that date collection of contributions from employers and employees in the industries covered by the Act will start.

Members of all parties joined in the protest against the Defence Tax increases, and one of the most vigorous objectors was a Liberal, T. J. O'Neill of Kamloops.

Favored British System

The British system of treating a part of the tax collected as a loan to be repayable after the war found favor with Mr. O'Neill and several other members.

Mr. Ilsley said in Great Britain lower incomes were taxed more heavily than in Canada and the Government here was proceeding on a different system.

It had not yet given serious consideration to a compulsory loan. One objection would be that the loans might be repayable at a time when it would be hard to refinance and the taxpayers would not want ot reinvest the money due them.

"The minister is putting the tax in the wrong place," said Mr. O'Neill. "He is putting it where it will injure the young men and women of the country by reducing their incomes to a point where they cannot provide the necessities of life.

$1,500 Should be Limit Claim

"I do submit that this National Defence Tax should not be imposed on income less than $1,500 for married persons. Even then it should be imposed only on the amount of income beyond the expected sum and not on the whole income".

Arthur Slaght, (Lib. Parry Sound) said he could not subscribe to the idea that parliament should attempt to discipline spending by men with families and incomes only a little more than $1,200.

Mr. Ilsley said the main purpose of all the taxes being imposed was to raise a large sum of money. A secondary purpose was to discourage consumption. It was difficult to say which motive bulked largest in each tax.

To raise the needed money the government had to go to the large number of people who were receiving lower incomes.

Should Tax "Luxurious Pleasures"

Karl Homuth (Con. Waterloo South) said the tax should be placed upon 'luxurious pleasures' like golf, enjoyed by those who could well afford it, rather than upon a boy or girl earning $660 a year.

Mr. Ilsley said a luxury tax like that would not make up nearly the amount to be lost if the increase in defence tax were abandoned.

Mr. Ilsley disclosed he had received a telegram from Premier Hepburn of Ontario protesting against the increase from five to 15 per cent in the tax on dividends and interest payable outside Canada in Canadian funds, in that it applied to provincial but not to Dominion Bonds. He said he had not yet had time to reply.

Nine Good Airdromes

Syria has 45 air fields, of which nine are considered good. The principal ones are at Damascus, in the south and Aleppo, in the north. There also is a good one at Tripoli, Lebannon. The Press Association said it was understood the Nazis planned to conduct their principal operations from the Aleppo base.

R.A.F. squadrons are based at Amman, in Eastern Transjordan and at Er Ramle, west of Jerusalem. Both were established several years ago.

Military authorities said the situation in Iraq was good, with Basra and Habbaniyah quiet.

British sources in Cairo said "propagandists, agitators and other similar Axis specialists" Germany was reported rushing to the aid of the Iraq Premier, Rashid Ali, were merely a "token contribution" in response to Rashid Ali's plea for help, and might become more extensive, although no troop transport planes have been seen yet.

(The British Broadcasting Corporation, in a broadcast picked up last night by the Columbia Broadcasting system in New York, said that Gen. Georges Catroux, Free French leader in the Middle East, had demanded the surrender of French authorities in Syria. The National Broadcasting Company heard a Nazi radio broadcast claiming that a group of Syrian volunteers had left for Iraq to join the Iraq Rebels.)

No Serious Protest

His answer to Mr. Hepburn was, he said, that this tax had been imposed on interest on Provincial bonds in 1933 at five per cent and Dominion bonds were exempt. No province up to now had made any serious protest.

Mr. Hanson suggested the minister was interested in protecting the credit of the Dominion and so made Dominion bonds exempt, but was not particiularly concerned with the credit of the Provinces.

Mr. Ilsley said that was not so. He did not believe any financial authority in the United States would seriously question the right of the Dominion to impose the tax or take it as weakening the credit of the provinces.

Not Applied to Dominion Bonds

The tax was not applied to Dominion bonds for the reason that it would be questionable for the same authority which issued a bond to withhold part of the interest it had agreed to pay, even though Canadians were taxed on interest from the same bonds.

The minister explained the original proposal to extend the tax to interest and dividends payable in United States or other non-Canadian currency was dropped because it was considered an implied agreement existed not to tax such securities as Canada was given the privilege of floating in outside markets.

Actually, said the minister, the tax would impose little burden on American holders of bonds payable in Canadian currency because they would be permitted to deduct the tax paid to Canada from their income tax payments to the United States' Government.

Need American Capital

The present United States rate on similar payments to non-residents was 16 1-2 per cent. Imposition of the new Canadian rate would bring that rate into operation on payments coming to Canada from the United States, as it would put an end to a convention between the two countries that the rate should be five per cent each way.

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Con. Dufferin-Simcoe) urged the government to go carefully on such taxation less it discourage American investment in Canada. The Dominion needed American capital both during and after the war.

Mr. Rowe said members of all parties should get behind the Finance Minister and give him every support in his difficult task.

"If you do not take the money this year you will take it next year and, before this war is over, I suggest our payments will be far larger than any we are criticizing or suggesting tonight," he said.

"Someone has talked about taxing the $600-a-year men. Some other members spoke of taking half the income of the $20,000 a year men. This government will take three-fourths of it before this war is over and we shall be glad to give it if we are to win victory".

'Rural Life Sunday' To Be Observed

"Rural Life Sunday" will be observed on Sunday, May 25 in many churches in which the part which the rural people are performing today in relation to the war and other problems will be stressed. The country church and its great contribution to the life of the nation will not be forgotten.

Prizes Offered Schoolchildren For Best Essays

Assistance of Pupils is Being Enlisted to Instil Importance of Victory Loan in Mind of Every Citizen

TWO CONTESTS

The assistance of pupils in Ontario elementary and secondary schools is being enlisted to instil the importance of the forthcoming Victory Loan in the mind of every citizen.

Prizes of Victory Bonds and War Savings Certificates are being donated by the Dominion Government for school essay contests which are being conducted by the War Loan Publicity Committee for Ontario.

These are two contests, one for secondary schools and one for elementary schools. Students in secondary and private schools are asked to write on the subject "The Issues at Stake in This War and Why Canadians Should Buy Victory Bonds". The first prize for this contest is a $100 Victory Bond; second prize $50 Victory Bond; third prize, $25 War Savings Certificate.

The subject for the elementary school contest is "Why We Must Beat Hitler and Why Victory Bonds Will Help". First prize for this contest is a $50 Victory Bond; second prize, $25 War Savings Certificate; third prize, $15 War Savings Certificate. This contest is limited to pupils in Grades Seven and Eight.

It is also expected that additional prizes will be donated by local well-wishers for the best essays in particular schools or districts.

Essays by secondary school pupils must not exceed 500 words, and 400 words is the limit for elementary school essays. The last day for completing essays is June 9th. Each principal will forward the the best essay from his school to the War Loan Committee and these will be judged by committees appointed by the Department of Education and the Victory Loan Publicity Committee for Ontario.

Details of the contest have been sent to all school principals by the Minister of Education, Hon. Duncan McArthur. The former have also been provided with leaflets entitled "Facts About Victory Bonds", which will be of assistance to pupils in writing their essays.

These contests have a definite object beyond that of fostering the literary abilities of pupils in Ontario schools. In the announcement of the competition, A. D. Cobban, Chairman of the Ontario Publicity Committee, says:

"One important avenue is the help that school children can give. The schools can perhaps serve best by giving information about the need and about the campaign. If the schools talk Victory Bonds, the children will talk about them at home, and there is no better method of making the Victory Loan a matter of home discussion.

Mother Can Be Beautiful, Too

Deanna Durbin reveals pretty well shaped ears with this coiffure

By HELEN FOLLETT

TODAY we address young mothers who, with minds intent upon the care of their babies, are likely to neglect their own appearance. We aren't going to preach. We're just going to ask a few questions.

Isn't it true that some young women who have been fastidious about their attire, right up to beauty snuff, do go a bit blowsy when there's a baby in the house? Yes, we know; it's a tough routine. Pushing vegetables through a sieve, bathing the cherub, sterilizing bottles keeping the wee one on a strict schedule. One has to do all that. But one has also a duty to oneself, and when the young Daddy comes home at night he must find a wife who is smiling-sweet, hair all cute curls, the lipstick on the job. He doesn't want his best girl to look duddy.

Get Plenty of Rest

When baby takes a nap, mama should do likewise, especially if baby keeps her awake at night. She should not be such a slave to her house that she will not be its chief ornament. Time must be found for brushing her hair, creaming the complexion, giving attention to the hands.

When pushing the baby carriage, the young mother should keep herself erect, take that opportunity for doing her deep breathing exercise. Few women realize what grand complexion benefits come from air-flushing the human bellows.

Still and yet the hair-back coiffure flourishes. It imparts a nice, freshly washed look, and we're for it, even though it has been with us for so long a time. We do wish, though, that some of the chasers after good looks would give more attention to their ears.

Why let them look shiny? Why powder the face and not include the ears? A fluff of powder on the sound receivers and a bit of rouge on the lobes will dress them up, and make them look attractive.

Heat Rays For Aches

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

For spring muscle aches due to the sudden return of bodily activity, as well as many other conditions, heat by infra-red light rays is of great value. Of course, heat of any kind will help such muscular discomforts, fibrositis and stiff joints.

But when heat is applied to the human body, at any one area, the blood stream immediately does everything possible to distribute the heat to other parts of the body. Depth penetration to any one area is accomplished with the application of heat faster than the blood stream can carry the heat away. Infra-red rays penetrate the outer skins of the human body with little, if any, resistance. Reaching the flesh tissues, a resistance is set up, and while the penetration continues, the process of penetration is through conduction.

With ordinary heat applications such as warming pads, hot packs and the like, which are applied to the surface of the outer skin, it will be seen that the blood stream can carry the heat to other parts of the body quite rapidly and the good effects are often temporary.

When there is pain connected with afflictions of the body and the affliction is one which requires medical treatment (I refer to rheumatism, arthritis, neutritis and the like), Infra-red ray treatments will do much toward relieving the pain, as the effects are soothing and numbing to the nerve ends.

Infra-Red Rays

For painful congestions caused by spring chilling, it will be found that these congestions can quickly be dissipated with the application of Infra-red rays. The length of time for these Infra-red ray applications depends on circumstances. About forty or fifty minutes is required for a deep congestion. Remember the blood stream will distribute the heat to other parts of the body, so the treatment should be repeated every few hours.

Injuries to the body such as pulled muscles, sprains, bruises and the like are all painful depending on the extent of the injury, and, while nature has provided a method of healing, it is slow and, meantime, the pain continues. The application of Infra-red rays not only soothes and numbs the nerve ends, which relieves the pain, but causes the congested blood to be absorbed and put back into the blood stream, and allows new blood and nerve supply to the injured area.

It is known that from the sun there are vibrations of many different wave lengths emitted. Beginning at the short end, they are known as they progress in length as Cosmic, Gamma, Ultra-Violet, Violet, Visible or light rays, and Infra-red, which latter are better known as heat rays. While an over-dose of the short rays can be had by over-exposure of the human body to the sun's rays, it is known that many of these short rays are screened out by foreign floating matter before reaching the earth's surface.

New forms of Infra-red generator lamps are being perfected which emit vibrations of two different wave lengths at the same time and by a specially designed reflector can be concentrated on a small or large area as conditions require.

Questions and Answers

G. J.:—"My husband has a sore on his leg about the size of a quarter. It is hard and itches extremely. It does not heal. He has had it for a long time. Ordinarily any cuts heal very quickly on him. Could you tell me what this might be?"

Answer—It is very likely to be due to bad circulation and varicose veins. It probably will not heal until the varicose veins are obliterated.

C. M.:—"My eyelashes drop out too much. Could there be a slight infection in the hair follicles due to irritation from using mascara? If so, how could I cure it?"

Answer— Any infection will cause the eyelashes to drop out and some people are sensitive to mascara. The way to stop it is to quit using mascara and put an antiseptic ointment on the eyelids at night or else touch the edges of the eyelids lightly with 10 per cent alcohol, with a camel's hair brush.

MAN IN STREET SEES NAZI PLOT IN HESS' FLIGHT

Daily Mirror to 'Wretch's Stomachic Cossetting' and to 'Vile Skunk'

NO PLAYBOY GLAMOR

By LOUIS HUNTER
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London May 16 — (CP Cable)— The man in the street, the anonymous little fellow who is one of the greatest heroes of the war, does not want Rudolf Hess treated with any "sloppy sentimentality" or painted with playboy glamor.

Although just as puzzled as the rest of the world, he seems convinced—judging from an abnormal flood of letters to newspapers, wisecracks and pub chatter—that the arrival of the No. 3 Nazi was a German plot, an opinion echoed by a great majority of writers, many of whom agreed with Labor Minister Ernest Bevin that Hess is a "murderer" and editorial assertions that he is "not a saintly gift from heaven to the British."

Suspect Plan to Keep U.S. Out of War

Many letter writers thought it a deep laid scheme to keep the United States out of the war by convincing that country German is already losing the fight. Others advanced the theory that Hess is here to organise fifth columnists and to head the Nazi invaders if they arrive.

Semi-officialdom's "play-by-play" description of how Hess is comfortable, how he speaks, eats and reads, drew the indignation of both press and public.

The Daily Mirror, which published a cartoon showing a sympathetic Hess bending over a "victim of the Luftwaffe" buried deep in rubble, says editorially: "Our brave, suffering people are 'semi-officially' assured that the smug gangster is in excellent spirits, enjoys a 'light diet of chicken, fish and eggs,' though another authority will have it that this frigid accessory to a thousand crimes of murder and torture is 'somewhat faddish about his food' and that, for example, he cannot eat eggs, (nor can most of our people, because they can't get eggs)."

The paper said "we must not linger over these nauseating details of the wretch's stomachic cossetting" and added "there is enough today to warn our eggless but honest British public that our unfailingly reckless defenders of cruelty, crime and sadism are already peeping out and beginning (as we anticipated) to put up a cowardly case for the vile skunk."

This is teh first we have heard one of them (murderers) called sincere," the paper went on. 'Yet we expected this from our lickers of Nazi boot polish. They too are sincere in their double-crossing of the democracy we sweat to defend".

The News Chronicle said that instead of Hess showing his "amiable captors" a photograph of his son, wondering when he would see him again, "it would have been more becoming to this person to have remembered the thousands of fathers who will never see their little sons again."

The Daily Telegraph said Mr. Bevin's description of Hess as a murderer "understates the case" and remarked that "Hess.... lived, throve and made himself important by murder, torture and persecution."

The Manchester Guardian warned that Hess' record "is as black as that of any of the Nazi gangsters... There must be no special treatment."

In a lighter mood the Star which suggested editorially that fullest exploitation of the propaganda value of the event be made until "we can turn Germany into a nation of Hess-men," carried a cartoon showing an angry Hitler pointing a finger at the monkey Mussolini chained to a hurdy-gurdy reading of the Hess escape and warning: "Now, don't you (Mussolini) go getting any silly ideas."

Utterly Impossible to Exaggerate The Mortal Danger of Our Country —KNOX

Newport, R. I., May 16 —(AP)— Declaring that "new factors" have arisen in recent hours, Navy Secretary Frank Knox asserted today that "it is utterly impossible to exaggerate the mortal danger of our country in this moment of history."

Knox made these statements to the graduation class of the naval war college, after finishing his prepared address. Apparently pointing to France, he said that "what seems to be the subjugation of a once great nation appears to be accomplished," but that "new factors have entered into this subjugation."

"In Washington," he continued, "our commander in chief has on his shoulders a frightful burden, probably heavier than ever has been carried before. Regardless of our feelings or political affiliations, we owe that man every measure of support possible.

"Ours is not to count the cost. Ours is to remember that freedom was given us as a precious heritage."

Earlier, at a press conference, Knox declared again he felt this country should "insure delivery of materials for Britain." As to method, he told newspapermen to use their heads, and added that whereas in the last war the submarine was the one "menace," there now were "the submarine, the surface raider and the airplane."

In answer to another question, Knox said he thought Rudolf Hess was sane, but added he was under the impression that Hess was "two jumps ahead of a gunman."

In his prepared address before the war college he asked for a strong navy in peace as well as in war, and said that the once-disarmed Germany had been able to challenge the world "only six short years" after Hitler came into power.

ELEVEN ENTERED IN KING'S PLATE

Undisturbed, the Favorite, Will Carry Top Weight of 117 Pounds

Toronto, May 16 —(CP)— A field of 11 was entered today for the 82nd running of the $8,000-added King's Plate at picturesque Woodbine Park tomorrow.

Eight owners were represented in the field with G. M. Hendrie, the Medway Stables, owned by J. E. Smallman of London, Ont., and R. S McLaughlin's Parkwood Stables each entering two horses.

The entries, with owners, jockeys and weights:—

Passa Gril, G. M. Hendrie, McDougall, 112.
Andean, Medway Stables, McTague, 117.
Lady Wales, G. M. Hendrie, Maynell, 112.
Taffrail, J. E. Frowde Seagram, Birley, 112.
Attrisius, James Heffering, Prater, 112.
Undisturbed, Harry Giddings, Smith, 117.
Depositor, Medway Stables, Remillard, 112.
Warrigan, Parkwood Stables, Aimers, 117.
Skyliner, Parkwood Stables, Convey, 117.
Budpath, H. C. Hatch, Watson, 117.
Top Boots, Harry Tomlin, Foden, 117.

One Surprise

There was only one surprise when the entry slips were dropped into the secretary's box at Woodbine this morning. Top Boots had not been expected to be sent to the post but evidently Tomlin thought the weatherman's forecast of "cloudy, cooler" for tomorrow might mean rain—and Top Boots is a fine mudder.

On the eve of the race, the horses getting the play were Undisturbed, Budpath, Skyliner and Warrigan with Giddings' Undisturbed likely to go to the starting barrier as the favorite, despite some poor workouts this week.

The plate is open only to Ontario-born three-year-olds which never have won other than a event solely for two-year-olds. It is the oldest continuously-run race in North America.

NAZI FREIGHTER REACHES RECIFE IN S. AMERICA

Vessel Reported Sinking of Bahia, Braxil, on May 3rd Last

VOYAGE UNEVENTFUL

Rio de Janeiro May 16.—(AP)— The newspaper Diario de Noticias said today the German blockade-running freighter Lech had put in at Recife after having been previously reported intercepted by a British auxiliary cruiser and set afire.

Maritime circles in New York reported May 3 that the 3,209-ton Lech was sinking off Bahia, Brazil, after sailing from Rio De Janeiro April 26, apparently in an attempt to get through the British blockade.

Brazilian shipping sources and British officials in South America were unable to confirm the report at the time, however.

The Lech left for Bergen, Norway, with a cargo of coffee, hides and other products.

The Freighter commanded by Capt. Frederich Brinkmann, arrived at Rio De Janeiro March 3, the first ship to reach South America through the British blockade since the start of the war. She was she had had an uneventful 13-day she had had an uneventfu 13-day voyage from Bordeaux in Occupied France.

BIZARRE CASE OF HESS STUDIED

Intelligence Service Reported Taking Hand in Analysis of Deputy-Fuehrer's Statements

London, May 16 (CP)—The Intelligence Service took a hand in the bizarre case of Rudolf Hess today as the government called for expert help in analyzing statements gleaned from Hitler's erstwhile deputy.

Probable new developments in the affair were foreshadowed, meanwhile, by an early-morning conference between the Minister of Information, Alfred Duff Cooper, and the Duke of Hamilton, Scottish nobleman through whom, the Nazis claim, Hess believed he could single-handedly arrange peace with Britain.

The Duke, an air commodore in the Royal Air Force, arrived in London after midnight at the controls of a military plane after talking with Hess for a second time in the secret retreat where the German is guarded closely.

Duke Accompanied by Kirkpatrick

It was reported last night that the Duke was accompanied by Ivone Kirkpatrick, foreign office official who knew Hess before the war and who established his identification.

An authoritative source said today, however, that Mr. Kirkpatrick still is "within reach" of Hess for more of their frequent interviews and that reports he had come to London were untrue.

After conferring with the Duke for an hour, Mr. Duff Cooper was reported to have paid a visit to Prime Minister Churchill.

Informed sources declared that Hess had proved a willing talker and on several occasions had prolonged his conversations with Mr. Kirkpatrick despite a physician's recommendation that he rest.

No Newspapers Allowed

Though supplied with plenty of light reading matter, he is not permitted to see newspapers and is allowed to listen to only certain radio broadcasts, it was said.

His ankle, fractured in the parachute landing, is mending, and physicians were said to have taken X-rays to relieve him of anxiety that he was suffering from a stomach ailment.

Berlin, May 16 (AP)—The sensational flight to Scotland of Rudolf Hess, which had been dropped by Nazi newspapers and radio, was brought to the fore again today when illustrated weeklies appeared with half-page pictures of Hess sitting beside Hitler during the Reichstag session May 6.

Whether publication of the pictures at this time was intentional or whether it was a result of a censor's oversight was not learned.

British Declare Other Waters In Danger Zone

London, May 16—(CP)—The Admiralty gave notice tonight that all areas of the Eastern Mediterranean except Turkish territorial waters have been declared dangerous to shipping, which was interpreted to mean they had been mined against passage of German sea-borne troops and supplies to Syria.

Previously the area declared dangerous had extended only as far as a line from Ras El Kanais, in Egypt, about 100 miles west of Alexandria, to Cape Khelidonia in Turkey.

A government corporation has estimated that no less than 1,000,000 hectares of land must be cleared for new fields to make Finland self sufficient in regard to foodstuffs.

At the LEFT a milkman in Plymouth steps over the rubble caused by Nazi bombs to deliver his milk as usual, even though the night had brought with it one of the most vicious Nazi raids of the war. Many of his customers were killed or injured and many of the homes along his route were wiped out. At the RIGHT a victim of the Nazi bombing of Liverpool is being helped by two air raid wardens. They are taking her to a reception centre where her head will be bandaged and she will otherwise be cared for.

WRECKAGE OF PLANE IN WHICH HESS FLED GERMANY

This is part of the wreckage of the Messerschmitt 110 in which Rudolf Hess, No. 3 Nazi, fled from Germany to the safety of Scotland. Hess bailed out of the plane when it ran short of fuel and parachuted to safety near the Duke of Hamilton's estate.

Roosevelt Says Blockade Of Seas Cannot Be Created By Decree

Washington, May 16 (AP)—President Roosevelt injected today into a discussion of Germany's declaration that the Red Sea will be a danger zone for foreign ships a pointed reminder that twice before in history the United States had used her warships to protect her commerce and obtain freedom of the seas.

He mentioned the action of the new American Republic against the barbary pirates in the Mediterranean a century ago and naval action as well against privateers in the Caribbean.

But when reporters inquired at a press conference whether he thought there were "any modern counterparts of the barbary pirates," he told them merely to use their heads.

Freedom of the seas, he said, was an historic American policy but he did not indicate just what the United States might be prepared to do about the Red Sea.

The President, in citing cases in history, said he was merely providing a lead for newsmen to follow up.

The Red Sea once was closed to American shipping by designation of waters at its mouth as a combat area. The President recently removed the ban and American merchantmen are free, so far as their own government is concerned, to go up to the mouth of the Suez Canal.

Germany subsequently declared the waters forming the approach to the canal to be in the war zone.

Effectiveness Considered

Replying to a question whether he recognized this action of the German government, Mr. Roosevelt said he thought things like that represented almost entirely a question of fact.

The question of whether a blockade exists, he thus indicated, depends largely on whether a declared blockade is effective.

More than a hundred years ago, the President related, there arose a question of the existence of a blockade in the Mediterranean. Then, he said, it was pretty well recognized that a blockade could not be created by decree, because effectiveness had to be considered and because freedom of the seas was involved.

In 1803 or 1804, the President reminded, there had been ten or fifteen years of depredations by the barbary Corsairs against American commence. For a while, he said, the United States bought them off, but it did not work. Finally, he went on, the barbery pirates said in effect that the Mediterranean was closed to American commerce—in other words, that they were creating a blockade.

The first questions that arose, Mr. Roosevelt said, was as to its effectiveness. It wasn't effective, he said, because they could capture perhaps only one of twelve ships.

In the second place, he said, the United States sent Commander Preble over, and in a couple of years the Mediterranean was made free for American commerce.

A little before, the President asserted, much the same thing had happened in Caribbean where pirates, chiefly French, were. This country sent its infant navy down he recalled and there were about one hundred actions over 2 1-2 years and freedom of the seas was achieved.

The Mediterranean , and Caribbean activities, Mr. Roosevelt suggested, provided leads for reporters to follow up.

1st Canadian Division Practises Field Tactics Using Live Ammunition

By ROSS MUNRO

Canadian Press War Correspondent

Somewhere in England, May 16 (CP)—Real bullets whistled overhead, "booby trap" mines exploded with resounding crashes and a creeping artillery "barrage" filled a gorse-covered valley with the bedlam of a battlefield as a 1st Canadian Division Brigade group turned up assault tactics to smash invaders.

Through smoke and fire, a Central Ontario regiment and a Central Canada regiment attacked a hill held by an Eastern Ontario regiment in the same brigade. Never before in advanced manoeuvres of this kind by Canadian troops have live ammunition and explosives been used to give the men the actual sensation of being under fire.

Like Veterans

The sudden realism of the action, with Bren guns chattering wickedly from camouflaged positions and hundreds of rifles crackling from woods and bushes, caught the men unexpectedly but they kept their heads down, bent low and crept and slithered over rough ground like veterans of a dozen campaigns to drive the lone regiment from its trenches.

"That's the stuff the boys want now, plenty of practice under fire and this is pretty close to the real thing, even though all the shots are high and the mines are placed so nobody will be hurt," said a senior officer.

Just then a Bren gun carrier cut loose with a stream of bullets. The officer flopped in the gorse in good infantry fashion and the whole advancing line flattened out automatically.

"Barrage" Moves

Across the mile-long front, the "barrage" moved towards the defenders on the hill, hundreds of smoke bombs bursting in line every few minutes. Several times troops accidentally stumbled on hidden wires that detonated "booby trap" mines laid by the Royal Canadian Engineers.

As the advancing battalions moved up the slope, small arms fire grew hotter. A section under Cpl. Robert Robertson of New York City, in a platoon commanded by Lieut. Fred McLaren of Toronto, was the first of the Central Ontario regiment to reach the barbed wire defences, break through and capture gun pits.

Bayonets flashing in the sunlight, Pte. Robert Emerick, Pte. John Allan, Pte. Frank O'Hagan, all of Toronto, and Pte. Harold Welfare of Niagara Falls, Ont., stormed the first post to "capture" Cpl. Ed Smith of Bancroft, Ont., and Pte. Pat Tharby of Peterborough, Ont., who had run out of ammunition.

Next they overpowered Pte. Ernie Johnson of Cordova Mines, Ont., manning a Bren gun, and Lieut. J. S. Spencer of Bowmanville, Ont., holding an advance post, and went on to take two riflemen prisoners, Cpl. G. B. Smith of Detlor, Ont., and Pte. R. M. Selman of Picton, Ont.

Spr. W. D. Mackenzie of Dartmouth, N.S., engineer attached to a leading infantry platoon helped crumple barbed wire to let Pte. Melville Kayte of Toronto through with his tommy gun to "wipe out" a rifle section under command of Lieut. N. R. Waugh of Mayne Island, B. C.

Counter Attack

A counter attack was stated by the defenders and Lord Tweedsmuir, a captain attached to the brigade, set off tear gas bombs which forced Central Ontario troops to don respirators.

On the left flank, the Central Canada regiment broke through the defences handily and consolidated positions by digging in immediately. By the time anti-tank guns came up, a forward platoon commanded by Lieut. A. S. A. Galloway of Aylmer, Ont., was ready to fight any counter-attack, and Cpl. E. D. Dewitt of Shediac, N.B., Pte. J. S. Parlane of Wiarton, Ont., and Pte. R. C. Praille of Chatham, Ont., laid aside shovels and took up rifles again.

Paris Crushed By Nazis

The London Express

Paris is now the capital of limbo. It is a beautiful French city on the banks of the Seine, which only Berlin, the capital of Germany, knows all about.

Information about Paris, brought back to America by French refugees, American expatriates, members of volunteer ambulance units, and the like, is also only oral. They tell you what they saw and heard with their own eyes and ears, but they have no papers to prove it. The only documentation on Paris today is in Berlin.

At least three conscious psychological attitudes charaterize the German treatment of Paris. The first attitude is that of moderation, almost of consideration, towards Parisians, provided such moderation gets a good name for the Germans.

Their treatment of the French has the quality of a cruel but polite "opera bouffe." With political shrewdness, and out of racial egomania they want the French to refer to them as "des braves types, tout de meme" ("nice fellows, after all"). This cynical moderation is part of a carefully calculated publicity program. By chance, it often slightly benefits the French, but if it doesn't help German publicity more, it's cut short.

The French rarely see potato bugs, which they elegantly call doryphires. Last summer there was a pest of them, and of German soldiers, whom the French grimly nicknamed after the bugs. "Ja," admitted one German soldier, "we're the doryphores. We will eat the potatoes and you will eat nothing."

The second psychological attitude of the Nazis is that Parisians must be equalized. There is an effort to reduce to individualistic French to a common level. For example, a French doctor, who has been an expensivve heart specialist, is forced to become a general practitioner at small fees; a lawyer, used to pleading only before the highest courts, is forced to handle petty litigation.

This equalization policy is also applied materialistically. Because German Hausfrauen lack bed sheets, since German looms have been working only for the army, many Paris housewives have been forced to give the Nazis all their sleeping equipment except two pairs of sheets, one blanket, and one mattress for every occupied bed in their homes. If the sheet owner lives in a chateau and possesses, as one old chatelaine did, 60 pairs of fine, yellow linen sheets left from her trousseau, the Germans do not even leave one pair, but take them all, as punishment for her plutocracy.

By this policy of equalization, the Germans hope to unsettle the modest French into hating the clever or rich and into admiring the Nazis for what Nazis call their special sense of social justice.

The third psychological attitude of the conqquerors applies only to themselves, but it enormously affects the French. Oddly enough, each local German kommandant or chief, is free to interpret Nazi policy according to his own judgement or temperament. Thus the German kommandant in a Paris "arrondissement" took bed sheets from every house on one side of the street, whereas another took them from every other house on both sides of the street.

Such uncertainties add to the demoralization of the unhappy French.

A kommandant in Neuilly expressed his individuality by charging his French mistress' new wardrobe and his florist bill to the "mairie," which, after a scandalized protest, was forced to pay.

On the other hand, the kommandant of a town near Saint-Malo has become noted for his strict honesty and justice toward the French.

The kommandant at Fontainebleau, however, has another notion of justice. He punished the mayor for having fled his post of duty when the Germans arrived, forcing him, on his return, to quit his mayoral mansion and live in a furnished room.

Because an "insouciant" little Fontainebleau boy made a "croque and tripped a German soldier, all citizens of Fontainebleau are compelled to step in the gutter when a Nazi approaches them on the sidewalk.

• • •

In the application of only one of their better-known Nazi psychological devices have the Germans been remiss in Paris. Though addicted, when at home, to book-burning and the destruction of criticism in print, not until the last of July, five weeks after they marched into the capital of highly literate France, did the Germans get around to suppressing anti-Nazi books. In all, only one hundred and sixty-two books, including as a belated addendum, France and Its Army, by Charles de Gaulle now of the Free French movement, have been put on the index, though for the five years before the collapse France was fuller of anti-Nazi literature than it was of any other means of self-defence.

As for the German Lieder and other German music, only Germans are permitted to perform them in Paris, since foreigners, the Nazis say, would demean both the racial melodies and the noble language.

• • •

Before the German occupation Paris was the world's greatest news-publishing and news-reading centre, having eighteen major daily newspapers, one of them, the Paris-Soir, with the Continent's largest daily circulation—two and a half million. The Paris-Soir had the distinction of being the only paper to have its printing plant actually handed over, with the door keys, to the Germans immediately after they made their entry into Paris. The rich gift was tendered by Paris-Sour's fifth column Alsatian liftman.

Prepared for any emergency, however, the Germans had brought to Paris with them several fonts of French type—easily distinguishable from French - manufactured type—which they now use to print their official Paris daily, Les Dernieres Nouvelles.

Under the German's solemn efficiency there are, comically enough, two editions of Le Matin—a morning Morning and an evening Morning.

The Nazis have also started a labour paper, sternly entitled La France au Travail, which is a substitute for the old sitdown-strike backer, the Communist L'Humanite. Except when a sort of crazed hunger for news, even false, seizes the Parisians, most of them refuse to buy the Nazi French papers.

The most blatant of the new Nazi papers is the anti-Semitic, anti-Free Mason weekly Au Pilori, which already has acquired a reputation for its obscene cartoons. It is sold by the young Gardes Francaises, the new French Hitler Jugend, to which all French girls and boys from 12 to 15 must now belong. This paper features a "Noblesse de Ghetto" society chat column.

Utterly different, infinitely more delicate as propaganda, is Signal, the "edition speciale de la Berliner Illustrirte Zeitung." This is a pictorial weekly which refers to the French as "the enemy."

Various editions of Signal, printed in Paris in English, French, German, Portuguese and Spanish, have been put on sale in Lisbon, so that people leaving Europe can take it with them as a souvenir of what has happened in France, according to the Germans.

• • •

In general, a stranded air of venality hovers over Paris. The Germans who are there have money in their pockets for the first time in twenty-two years, and can buy French luxuries, the like of which some of the younger Germans have never before seen.

Like termites that have been walled in for years and on a diet, the Germans, since the middle of June, have steadily advanced through the Paris shops absorbing, munching, consuming lingerie, perfume, bonbons, leather goods, sweet silly novelties—all the chic charm and gourmandism of Parisian merchandise.

In order to have for themselves what little they themselves have allowed to remain in the city's stores and warehouses, the Germans have just decreed that all the big Paris shops and department stores must close from noon till 2 o'clock, hours in which French employees normally go out for lunch and shopping, but also hours in which the Germas are housed in their garrisons or "Speiselokate," eating their slowest, largest meal.

Certain of the more educated Germans see in their ability to purchase unlimited French silk stockings the operation of an almost occult law.

When, recently, a Frenchwoman in the Trois Quartiers protested against being forbidden to buy more than one pair of stockings when she wanted three, while at the same moment a German officer was buying a dozen pairs to send home to his wife, the officer explained to her in his puffy French that because French legs had worn silk, while Germans had worn only cotton, it was now, as a matter of philosophical justice and moral evolution, the Germans' turn.

Bliss takes queer, violent forms in young people who, through force or fanaticism, have for years been practicing self-denial. Eye-witnesses say that some of the earliest German soldiers, in their first free hour in Paris, stuffed their mouths with oranges and bananas without taking the skins off, and spread butter on their chocolate bars. All one Austrian soldier wanted of Paris was to eat tinned pineapple and to moon over Napoleon's tomb.

• • •

In the Paris cafes, the German soldiers still order what was their first favourite series of drinks—a beer, then a coffee, then what they generally call "liqueur." When the French garcon asks, "Mais quelle liqueur?" they simply repeat, uncritically, "Liqueur."

During an evening they will mix whatever the waiter brings—Chartreuse, Benedictine, Cointreau—with glutonous indifference.

The German officers go in wholeheartedly for champagne. It's like a liquid symbol of their conquest of Gay Paree. They demand and expect champagne wherever they go. As one peasant said, "Ces Cochons! They come into my cottage and ask me for champagne—I, who have never given myself anything better than a bottle of mousseux even for my son's first Communion."

Whatever the German soldiers buy in Paris, it's really the French who pay for it by footing the staggering occupation bill, which includes the unusually high pay given to Nazi soldiers in Paris. The mark, which the Germans print in Paris, expressely for use in France, on presses they brought with them, is used with the franc in Paris business transactions.

In a restaurant, a French diner may hand the waiter a hundred-franc note to pay his bill and have to take German and French money in change. The French marks are cleared through the Banque de France.

There are probably about 20,000 Nazi men in uniform in Paris. No official figure is known. All the French do know is that there are too many. The Nazi soldiers are constantly shifted to prevent fraternization with the French.

The ratio of officers to men is unusually high; Germany discovered that even the model Nazi soldiers failed to remain model in France, if left without strict supervision.

Hitler Haters Of 10 Countries Form a Club

By ALLEN HADEN

Of the Chicago Daily News, in Special Correspondence from Buenos Aires

United by common hatred of the Nazi conqueror, 24 businessmen, representing 10 countries that are or have been at war with Hitler's Germany, once a week eat a 50-cent lunch together at the English Club in Buenos Aires.

These men, members of the inter-allied co-operation committee, think talk and dream of redeeming their countries. Their aims are two: to keep up the courage of their countrymen settled in Argentina; to debunk information distributed by the Germans.

None is skilled in swaying public opinion. But where a smart public relations counsel has ideas, these men, in a tight-lipped way, have faith in a British victory.

• • •

At one recent luncheon there were present representatives of Czecho-Slovakia, Norway, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, Yugoslavia, Greece, Poland, Free France and Great Britain.

A craggy Yugoslav engineer sat beside a swarthy Welshman. On my left a slow Polish statistician spoke to me in Spanish. On my right was an Englishman, spare and precise with a rapier-quick mind. Down the table, the diminutive Frenchman representing General Charles de Gaulle leaned forward to hear better. A veteran of the First World War, he belongs to the famous "Geules Cassees" the broken faces. Down the table from him sat another Englishman. As we went to table he limped. A German bullet smashed his hip at Dunkirk.

The common tongue was English, spoken by Dutchmen with German accents, by a Belgian with a French accent.

"Unity is the keyword," said a Dane whose loyalty to King Christian is unchallenged. "I think this text could be strengthened."

"Our joint strength will defeat Hitler," a Czech member asserted with some unprintable additions which did not obscure his meaning.

So the talk went: Radio programs, how to improve them and reach Argentina's 700,000 radio set owners (long-wave evidently, since only six percent have short-wave receivers); releases to the Argentine and foreign language newspapers; founding of a newspaper to contain releases not used by the Argentine press; money for a weekly pep sheet, published by the free forces of one of the conquered countries. Then the treasurer said: "Funds are low."

"If you will permit me, Mr. Chairman," said an Argentine guest who had not spoken until then, "I would like to return the courtesy of this luncheon by subscribing the cost of two months' publication."

In the applause which followed he slipped out.

The wounded Englishman had just arrived in Buenos Aires after a trip along South America's west coast during which he visited Peru, Colombia and Chile.

"This organization is unique in South America," he said. "It will be the greatest encouragement to groups everywhere fighting German propaganda. We need to state our case to meet the German brand.

"In Britain where I have just come from, we know that we are not fighting alone. And each of the countries which have fallen to the Nazis knows also that we are still fighting for them. None of us is alone. We are all fighting together."

In that shabby and stuffy room in Buenos Aires, 24 unpretentious men are in their own way fighting for their country.

"Unity is the keyword," the Frenchman summed up, nodding to the Dane.

Dykes And White Sox Castoff Magicians Still Doing Tricks In American And Now Second

Yanks Sustain 5th Straight Defeat at Hands of White Sox

REDS GOING DOWN

(By Judson Bailey)

(Associated Press Sport Writer)

Chicago White Sox are performing tricks in the American League again, hovering around second place with a collection of castoffs while other star-studded clubs wallow in despair.

Their aging pitcher have surpassed the staffs of every other team in both majors by hurling 17 complete games out of 24 played in spite of hit-and-miss help from their teammates.

Their lineup includes Billy Knickerbocker, castoff utility infielder of New York Yankees, Meril Hoag, who was passed around by both the Yanks and St. Louis Browns, and other derelicts.

But this conglomerate cast has an abiding faith in manager James Joseph Dykes and an ability to rise to the occasion.

Yesterday was an occasion —the retirement of their brash, swashbuckling leader as a player after 22 years on the active list of the American League. He hadn't played in a game since 1929 and at 44 years of age is growing portly and bald. However his final concession to time, removal from the playing roster, was an event and the Sox celebrated.

Sox Wallop Yankees

They whipped out a 14-hit offensive and sent the once-proud Yankees crashing to their fifth straight defeat 13-1, the Sox had made only five homers all season, but they belted three more as evidence of their enthusiasm, and Knickerbocker and Hoag, the former Yanks, each collected four hits.

Cleveland Indians kept rolling with a 6-4 victory over Boston Red Sox with Bob Feller doing a ninth-inning relief chore. He was rushed in two two on and none out in the last of the ninth.

Detroit Tigers broke their six-game losing streak by overwhelming the Athletics 10-2 with a vicious 18-hit attack and the seven-hut hurling of young Hal Newhouser.

St. Louis Browns shut out Washington Senators 7-0 with a sensational one-hit pitching performance by Dennis Galehouse.

Reds Lose Fifth in Row

Cincinnati's world champions went staggering to their fifth consecutive defeat 5-4 at the hands of the Phillies in the first night game of the year. Gene Thompson blew up to give the National League tail-enders four runs in the ninth inning.

Boston Braves bumped off St. Louis Cardinals 6-3 in a loose game played in 90-degree temperature.

Hal Schumacher outpitched Claude Passeau, six hits to eight, and led New York Giants to a 2-1 decision over Chicago Cubs. Schumacher had a blister that broke on his right thumb during the game.

Brooklyn Dodgers were kept idle by wet grounds at Pittsburgh.

YESTERDAY'S STARS

Bob Feller, Indians: Saved victory over Red Sox by going in in ninth inning with two on and none out and retiring the side.

Bill Knickerbocker and Myril Hoag White Sox: Each made four hits to help defeat former Yankee teammates.

Hal Schumacher, Giants: Held Cubs to six hits for 2-1 victory.

Hal Newhouser, Tigers: Pitched seven-hit victory over Athletics.

One of the most publicized rookies of the 1941 campaign, Phil Rizzuto, Yankee shortstop, has been a star in the minor leagues for several seasons.

Rizzuto, a little fellow standing only five feet six inches, has plenty of power at the plate. He has batted .300 every season, topping his performance last year with Kansas City by banging out a .340 mark.

Rizzuto began his career with Bassett, Va., then went to Norfolk before moving up to Kansas City. Rizzuto is a native New Yorker, born in Gotham in 1918. He is a right-handed batter and thrower.

JOHNNY LINDELL JINXS THE CHIEFS

Syracuse Unable to Beat Newark Hurler Once This Year

(By The Associated Press)

It's a good thing for Syracuse Chiefs that Newark's Johnny Lindell can't pitch every game against them, because the husky right-hander has the Indian sign on the Indians.

The first time Syracuse met Newark this year was last Sunday when the Chiefs walloped the International League leaders in the first game of a doubleheader. Then Lindell took over and promptly white-washed the Braves 2-0 in the nightcap.

He continued his mastery over the Chiefs last night in the first game at Syracuse by hurling another five-hitter to register his fourth consecutive victory 2-1.

Joe Krakauskas, former Major Leaguer who used to play ball around Western Ontario opposed him and yielded five hits also, but the Bears bunched two of them with a pass and a long fly to score both their runs in the third. Lindell, as much at home at the plate as on the mound, rapped out a double and a single and scored one of the Bruins' runs.

The victory extended Newark's lead over the idle Montreal Royals to a game and a half.

In the only other game Baltimore Orioles nosed out Jersey City Giants 9-8 in the opener of a three game series.

The Birds collected 11 hits to 12 for the Little Giants, but bunched their blows effectively in the second and sixth innings when they scored all their runs.

TEN STARTERS LIKELY TO GO IN KING'S PLATE

Undisturbed, Warrigan and Budpath Still Remain Favorites for the Guineas

EXCELLENT TRACK

By SCOTT YOUNG

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, May 16 —(CP)— An outstanding fact overlooked by many enterprising horse-players is that the field, not the favorite, is the most important part of any race. There will be no deviation from this principle in the 82nd running of the King's Plate here tomorrow.

Therefore, although Undisturbed, Warrigan and Budpath have drawn most of the comment and interest during the past weeks of training for this nine-furlongs event, when the entries close today there will be five or six other thoroughbreds with excellent chances of winning the King's 50 guineas and the major portion of the Ontario Jockey Club's $8,000-added purse.

Following is a list of the likely starters, with a resume of past performances and training this spring:

Warrigan, gelding, owned by R. S. McLaughlin, Oshawa: 1940—nine starts, two wins, one second, one third; earned more than $8,000; 1941 training—excellent.

Undisturbed, gelding, owned by Harry Giddings, Oakville: 1940—eight starts, six wins, one second, one third; earned more than $5,000; 1941 training—good.

Budpath, colt, owned by H. C. Hatch, Toronto: 1940—six starts, two wins, one second, one third; earned $1,650; 1941 training excellent.

Skyliner, colt, owned by R. S. McLaughlin, Oshawa: 1940—five starts, one win, two seconds; earned $800; 1941 training—good.

Taffrail, colt, owned by J. Frowde Seagram, Waterloo: 1940—nine starts, three seconds; earned $360; 1941 training—fairly good.

Attrisius, filly, owned by J. Heffering, Toronto: 1940—10 starts, one win, one second, one third; earned $785; 1941 training—fair.

Depositor, filly, owned by Medway Stable, London, Ont.: 1940—12 starts, four wins, two seconds, two thirds; earned $3,005; 1941 training—fair.

Andsan, colt, owned by Medway Stable, London, Ont.: 1940—13 starts, two wins, four seconds, one third; earned $1,750; 1941 training—fair.

Passa Grille, filly, owned by G. M. Hendrie, Hamilton: 1940—eight starts, three wins, two seconds; earned $1,835; 1941 training—fair.

Lady Wales, filly, owned by G. M. Hendrie, Hamilton: 1940—nine starts, one win, three thirds; earned $980; 1941 training—fair.

COLMAN BANKING ON HITTING TO REACH MAJORS

Canadian Born Player Can Really Hit Any Kind of Pitching

ONCE A HURLER

By GERRY LOUGHEED

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, May 16—(CP) — Two wrongs made a right for Frank Colman, a Canadian-born youngster who is banking on his hitting ability to make the grade one of these days in Major League baseball.

The two wrongs that have had so much to do with the career of the 23-year-old London, Ont., ballplayer were injuries suffered by teammates—one last year while he was playing with Wilmington in the Inter - State League and the other at the start of this season with Toronto Maple Leafs of the International League.

Colman was a southpaw pitcher, with a flair for banging out base hits, when he started with the Wilmington Club. Then Billy Southworth, Jr., sprained an ankle and Manager Charlie Berry shot Colman into Southworth's outfield post. Colman showed the move was a good one by batting .361 for 73 games, being runner-up for the circuit batting title. He was also named the most valuable player in the league.

Doomed to Ride Bench

It looked as if Colman was doomed to ride the bench this season with the Leafs until veteran Johnny Tyler suffered an injury. The Canadian, who had sat out the first eleven games, was sent in to fill the right-field breach by Manager Lena Blackburne and has responded by batting .409 in sixteen games.

Before Southworth's injury, Colman was gaining a pitching reputation with Wilmington with a record of ten victories and four losses when a sore arm overtook him. Over one stretch he hurled thirty-two consecutive scoreless innings for a league record.

Gets Hits Off Bad Balls

Bothered with arm trouble, Colman turned to his batting ability to earn a regular spot. Discussing Colman's slugging potentialities, one Toronto club official said: "Why! He hits the worst balls—ones that would hit him if he didn't hit them—and he gets base hits. The pitchers are going to have difficulty throwing to a guy like that."

He gained his first baseball experience pitching in the London City League which also produced Joe Krakauskas, former Major League hurler now in the International. After playing with London and Stratford in the Senior Inter-County League in Western Ontario he attended a ball school the Maple Leafs, under Manager Dan Howley, held in London and in 1938 he was signed.

Starting the next season as a pitcher for Cornwall in the Canadian-American League, he lost one game and was shipped to Batavia in the Pony loop. Last year he toiled with Wilmington where his outfield duty began.

"I prefer playing in the outfield to pitching now," admitted Colman. "It's not so bad if you can hit and I can hit pretty well. I've never had any trouble there."

Effort To Lead French People Down Blind Road

New York, May 16—(CP)—The New York Herald Tribune commented today that yesterday's speech by Premier Petain of France "was an explicit avowal that the Vichy Government is moving in a direction which Frenchmen would not approve."

"It is plain that an effort will be made to lead the French people blindly down a dark road," it said.

Terming Petain "a weary and disillusioned soldier who believes that it is too late to consult public opinion," The Times said: "No man on earth, and no power that is conceivable, can transform the French people into willing partners of the ignorant and obscene barbarians who rule Nazi Germany. But there is terrible danger that an official policy of 'collaboration' will weaken the vitality of French institutions for many years to come and that the concessions to Germany which this policy would require will inflict cruel damage on France's faithful ally, Britain."

GOSSIP · NEWS · COMMENT

"You are right in the centre of the home of the "muskie". Believe it or not the maskinonge emanated from these parts and one can't obtain better 'lunge fishing than is afforded the residents of this part of Hastings County right at your own front door," contended William "Bill" Lang, well known Toronto naturalist, expert angler, sportsman and courier deluxe of Ontario's wonderland for the sportsman, be he hunter or angler, when he dropped into this department recently. Bill had just concluded a two-night lecture in Belleville and the Mountain View Airport, where he displayed several reels of wild life in Ontario, featuring game fishing. At present Mr. Lang is preparing another moving picture of Eastern Ontario in which he intends to include the advantages of fishing grounds to the American tourist. Bill has worked in conjunction with Doug Oliver, publicity manager for the Province of Ontario, in bringing the richness of Ontario's fishing and hunting possibilites before the American public.

The Ontario Government has established a cash prize fund for an angling contest to be competed for by American as well as Canadian anglers. A one hundred dollar bill goes to the winner of the contest in seven different classes of game fish, bass, trout, 'lunge, pickerel, etc. Last year a woman from Akron, Ohio, won the black bass contest with six 13 ounce fish caught in North Hastings. The sequel to the winning of this prize is a story in itself. Mr. Lang was addressing a large gathering of anglers in Akron, Ohio, last winter and told the above story. After the meeting a woman advanced to the platform and informed Mr. Lang she was the party in question and corroborated his story to convince all and sundry of the splendid fishing grounds in this section of Ontario. The tourist trade is one of Ontario's greatest mediums of revenue and it is through the efforts of men like Bill Lang and Doug Oliver that Americans are being induced to vacation in Ontario. In regard to Mr. Lang's forthcoming moving picture, to be taken as an advertising medium and shown throughout the United States, already Gananoque, Kingston and Perth have purchased sequence scenes in the picture to attract the tourist trade. A small investment by the City of Belleville in this film would doubtless pay great dividends, as Mr. Lang already has shots of game fishing in the Bay of Quinte and several lakes and streams in Hastings County to insert as inducements to the American tourist to visit Belleville and environs.

Mr. Lang informs us that Samuel Champlain, the great French explorer, first discovered the maskinonge in the waters of what is now the Bay of Quinte. At that time he reported pike, "as long as your paddle," were plentiful in these waters. The French had never seen the 'lunge before and as they somewhat resembled the French pike, it was not surprising that Champlain thought the mammoth fish a pike species. Mr. Lang has studied the habits of all game fish and followed the trails of Champlain, Frontenac, LaSalle, Marquette and Joliette in his search for the origin of Ontario's game fish. "I am thoroughly satisfied that the maskinonge emanated from the waters of this district," assured Mr. Lang as he extolled upon the unlimited value of publicity that is ours for the asking. The waters that abound with game fish in this area are easily accessible, another feature that should be paramountly brought before the American tourist. After listening to Bill Lang's history of the 'lunge your correspondent is thoroughly convinced that Belleville's slogan should read something like this—"Belleville, the home of the muskie."

While the Pirates were in California this spring an elderly man walked over to the bench to see Coach Honus Wagner. Honus greeted the visitor as an old friend he had known back in Carnegie, Pa.

After they had talked for a time, Wagner said:

"By the way, I haven't seen you for awhile. How long have you been in California?"

"Just since 1890,' replied his friend.

Saturday brings the 82nd running of the King's plate, the oldest continued turf event on the North American continent, and steeped in tradition. Last year Miss M. A. Kane's "Willie the Kid" surprised the experts to romp home a winner. This year the experts are going out on the limb to call Harry Giddings' "Undisturbed", others, who are more conservative, think the Parkwood Stable entries of Warrigan and Skyliner should 'shoo in,' while in the rain it's supposed to be Top Boots. (Why the latter choice we can't say, but maybe the name indicates possibilities of being a good mudder.) Jackie White, well known Belleville sports follower, and several of his cohorts gave this corner the well known Bronx cheer when we even so much as suggested—Harry Hatch's "Budpath" to win the 82nd running of the King's Plate, but there it is, youse guys and gals. For a long shot try Traffrail.

Despite the fact the St. Louis Cardinals have disposed of a trio of their star players, they continue to dog the heels of the league-leading Dodgers even after losing yesterday. Not to be outdone by their Mound City contemporaries, the St. Louis Browns up and sell Rip Radcliff, veteran outfielder, to the Detroit Tigers, who will be used in Hank Greenberg's empty spot. As darkness fell upon the last day for baseball "David Haruming" other exchanges were noted in the big leagues. Two veteran ballsters, Vernon Kennedy, Brown pitcher, and Rick Ferrell, Senator catcher, exchanged uniforms. Paul Dean was sold to the minors, the day after brother Jerome was given his outright release from the Cubs. The Giants cut Paul loose and sold him to Sacramento in the Pacific Coast League. And to top off all these moves Manager Jimmy Dykes, 44-year-old skipper of the White Sox, removed his own name from the active list of baseball and today the majors get down to the earnest business of trying to win a pennant, with the Indians carrying an outstanding lead in the American League and a dog-fight on between the leading Dodgers and the trailing Cardinals in the senior circuit.

Sport Spice—Frankie Frisch was telling his players on the Pirate bench at Shibe Park how soft it was now for players as contrasted to earlier days. "You guys got a snap," said Frisch, the cords in his neck swelling at the thought. "You get up at 9 in the morning come down to breakfast at 10, loaf around until it is time to go to the ball park and then put in about three hours of fun. After the game, you go back to the hotel, relax, take off your coat and at the club's expense eat a big meal and have a bottle of beer and...."

"Will the club pay for the beer?" Van Robays interrupted.

"You fellows are as bad as that southpaw pitcher we had this spring.....When I sent him to a Pacific Coast League club on option he said: 'You can't do that to me....I have a date to meet my girl in Chicago'."

Butter Continues Price Advance

Toronto — Butter extended price advances under continued good trading during yesterday's session of the Toronto open produce market. The trend also was firmer for eggs.

Sellers offered sparingly on the butter market as demand held up. Small quantities of No. 1 grade Ontario creamery solids available early in the season at 30 cents a pound were readily absorbed and later offerings at 30¼ cents likewise moved without difficulty. Near the close of the market holders asked 30½ cents a pound for the product, at which level some sales were made, although buying then appeared to have slackened. Prints to the retail trade followed solids higher, top grades advancing ½ cent a pound to range at 31½ cents to 32 cents.

Steady clearance of the fair volume of fresh receipts gave a firmer undertone to the egg market. Prices to shipper on grades A-large and A-medium improved ½ cent a dozen, but other grades generally held unchanged. Pullet eggs were draggy, however, and this grade eased ½ cent in the graded section of trading.

Montreal Produce.

Montreal, May 16 —(CP)— Produce market prices here as reported by the Dominion Department of Agriculture, follow:

Butter, first grade creamery prints, jobbing price, 31½; first grade solids, jobbing price, 31c.

Eggs: Graded shipments in used free cases, selling at, A-large, 21½c to 22c; A-medium, 20c to 20½c; B grade, 20c to 20½c; C grade, 17½c to 18c. Receipts, 20,199 cases.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, May 16 (CP)—Prices were a bit heavy in dull trading on Toronto exchange today. Only 51,000 shares were traded.

Weak spots in golds involved Kerr Addison, Macassa, Teck Hughes and Upper Canada and in base metals Nickel and Steep Rock were higher. Noranda was ¼ lower at 51.

Industrials were lower. Foods were lower and other groups practically unchanged. International Milling pfd. weakened 2¾ to 110, and Bell Telephone was up a point at 147½.

WALL STREET

New York, May 16 (AP)—The feeling Thursday's relatively sharp sell-off may have been overdone brought enough bidding in today's stock marke to revive many shaky leaders.

Mild improvement appeared at the opening for steels, rails and assorted industrials and, while activity was nothing to talk about, gains of fractions were seen in most departments near the fourth hour.

Commodities improved after a hesitant start. Bonds were mixed.

Better share performers included U.S. Steel, Bethlehem, Santa Fe, Southern Pacific, Great Northern, Texas Corp., Chrysler, U.S. Rubber, United Aircraft, Kennecott, Western Union, Union Carbide and American Can.

International Harvester and J. I. Case were backward, along with American Telephone, Dow Chemical and Johns-Manville.

Canadian issues were firm with International Nickel up ¼ and Canadian Pacific up ⅛. In the bond market Canada 4's were unquoted.

On the "big board" General Motors was a bit ahead most of the time.

TAKES OVER HESS' DUTIES

From now on, Adolf Hitler himself, will be head of the Nazi party of Germany. The office of chancellery head will be under his control although the present leader, Martin Bormann, ABOVE, will remain in office. This adds to Hitler's personal responsibilities, and in some measure fills the gap in the Nazi hierarchy created by the sensational plane flight of Rudolf Hess in his escape to Scotland.

UNITED STATES

Mr. Roosevelt suggested that the inquiry be placed with the State Department and then, with a grin, advised his questioner the Department would not tell him anything.

It was generally assumed here that the United States, except for the diplomatic formalities, had reached an open break with the Vichy government.

The administration, informed sources said, is satisfied that the Petain regime has embraced a program of increasing partnership with Germany and henceforth must be considered in about the same category as the governments of other Nazi-dominated nations.

The situation immediately thrust to the fore the future status of French colonial possessions in the Western Hemisphere, particularly Martinique in the Caribbean and French Guiana on the northeast coast of South America. A high official singled out Martinique as one colony that was receiving special attention.

Administration spokesmen have repeatedly made clear that any attempt by a puppet government to use new world colonies in the interests of another power would be considered a change of colonial sovereignty and hence a violation of the Monroe Doctrine.

Armed Guards on French Ships

Last night the United States Government manifested its abrupt withdrawal of confidence in the Vichy Government by ordering armed coast guardsmen aboard all French vessels in American ports, including the luxury liner Normandie, once the pride of France's merchant fleet which is in New York harbor.

Reason for the action was not explained officially. Coast guard officers said merely "you can draw your own conclusions."

F. D. R. Appeals to French

President Roosevelt took the unusual step last night of issuing an appeal to the French people over the head of the Vichy government.

He called on them, in effect, to reject even yet any "so-called 'collaboration' which will in reality imply their alliance with a military power whose central and fundamental policy calls for the utter destruction of freedom."

The people of the United States, he declared, could hardly believe that the Vichy government would enter an alliance "which would apparently deliver up France and its colonial empire including French African colonies and their Atlantic coasts with the menace which that involves to the peace and safety of the Western Hemisphere."

Petain's Address

The unexpected pronouncement from the White House followed swiftly on the heels of the radio address of Marshal Petain to the French people, saying that "collaboration" negotiations had "lighted the pathway to the future" for France and that it was up to the people "to follow me without mental reservation."

Mr. Roosevelt's statement, well informed authorities said, could be interpreted as meaning that the United States government no longer placed reliance in the ability of Marshal Petain to resist Nazi pressure for progressively more co-operation with the Axis program.

One aspect of the statement that aroused particular interest was his implication that Vichy is about to conclude an alliance with Germany. This led to the belief in diplomatic quarters that the President based his remarks on information from Admiral William D. Leahy, ambassador at Vichy, because the generalities of Marshal Petain's address were not considered sufficient for such a conclusion.
